The only one with conditions in the least corresponding to those on the earth is Mars, and on that planet the weight of a given body at the surface is only three-eighths what it is on the earth and although the day is about the same length, the year is nearly twice as long. The winter would be the length of the earth's year, followed by a year's summer. The eccentricity of its orbit is so great that it approaches the sun twenty-six millions of miles nearer at one point in its orbit than in the opposite. Its distance, nearly twice that of the earth from the sun, 141,000,000 miles, would allow it to receive about one-third the light and heat. So much less light and heat, combined with the length of its seasons, only a narrow belt along the equator could be inhabitable by such beings as the conditions prevailing on that planet would evolve.

D. J. A.: Q. Is it or is it not a fact, that during Abraham Lincoln's first term as President, he requested the Pope of Rome, through a cardinal in the United States, to send him some young men, to enter the Union Army as officers; that twenty were sent from the Papal Guard, and enlisted in the Union Army, were commissioned as officers; the most of them fell in action, and the only one now living is General Coppinger?

A. This story has not even the element of probability. It is a libel on the names of brave men who gave their lives in defense of liberty and for the preservation of the nation's. That this widely-circulated story might be met while there were witnesses living to refute it, I wrote to the only survivor of the four men who came from Italy and joined the Union army.

General J. J. Coppinger:

Respected Sir:—There has been a story widely circulated, that Abraham Lincoln, through an American cardinal, requested the Pope to send some young men to take positions in the Union army, and that twenty were sent. As you are mentioned as one of the number, I take the liberty of writing you for information. I know you will at once see the historical importance of your answer.

The reply is explicit:

Washington, D. C., Feb. 4, 1904.

Hudson Tuttle:

Dear Sir:—In answer to your inquiry, Kelley, O'Keefe, and Keogh were young brother officers of mine in Italy in 1860, in the same battalion. They came to the United States early in the war. President Lincoln gave them commissions. Gen Kelly was badly wounded—shattered jaw—at Port Republic, and died after the colse of the war. Col. O'Keefe was shot four times at Five Forks, and died soon after wounded. Col. Keogh was killed in action at Little Big Horn, Custer's last fight. He was the last of the three. God bless them! Other officers came, but I think they joined the volunteers. I regret I cannot give you their history. I know nothing of the story or the cardinal you refer to. Very respectfully, I remain,

J. J. COPPINGER.

With characteristic modesty, Gen. Coppinger does not mention his own gallant services in the Union army. Feelingly he speaks of the three companions who went down in the storm of battle; of his own deeds he is silent. Yet being longer spared his record outranks them all. He was given a captaincy by Lincoln in the 14th U. S. Infantry in 1861; breveted major for gallantry at Travillion's Station, Va., 1864; breveted lieutenant-colonel for gallantry at Cedar Creek, Va.; colonel volunteers 1865; breveted colonel for services against hostile Indians, 1868; promoted brigadier general, 1895; major general volunteers, 1895; general, 1898; present commander of the fourth army corps.

If these men were Catholics they were true Americans, and an honor to the flag to which they gave all that the bravest can give.

Actuated by the spirit of adventure and the love of liberty and justice which dominates their enthusiastic race, they came to Lincoln and asked for a position in the army. They came when men trained in military affairs were most needed and the President nor the country had cause to regret their having received commissions. Cardinal nor Pope had a voice in sending them.

The most remarkable incident of the terrible cyclone of death, the massacre of the Little Big Horn, is the escape of Comanche, the steed that had borne the gallant Keogh for many a year on the Indian border. Comanche was the only living thing that came out of that valley of death. He was found after the battle, riderless and saddleless, and covered with wounds, some distance from the scene of the disaster, and until his death, ten years after, was the special charge of the seventh cavalry. He was their pensioned guest and no bridle interfered with his freedom.

This horse furnished the theme for the widely published poem of Emma Rood Tuttle, "Comanche," here quoted from her volume, "Asphodel Blooms." Although not essential to the answer of the question, it gives an episode in the pathetic romance of the four young men who left their homes and attached their fortunes to the Union cause when it was staggering under the blows of rebellion.

Comanche.

Dead is the steed, Comanche,
Whose tongue could never tell
The woe on the Little Big Horn,
Where Custer's soldiers fell.

Of Custer's brave three hundred
He only lived to see
The closing of the combat,
He only lived to flee!

And he could never tell us
The history he knew,
Of how three thousand red men
Three hundred white men slew.

Such odds as that! what wonder,
With staring, stony eyes,
The white men lay at evening
Beneath the silent skies.

That night the horse, Comanche,
Splashed with Miles Keogh's blood,
Utterly lone and riderless,
Wounded and hungry stood.

No dream of fame consoled him,
Nor sordid love of pay,
But honors to the warrior horse
Accorded were that day.

The Little Big Horn battle
Was old Comanche's last;
Oh that he could have known then
What Fortune had forecast!

Discharged with honor was he.
The Seventh Cavalry
Kept him, a royal tribute
To Custer's memory.

On all display occasions,
Comanche, draped in black,
Paraded with the soldiers,
But none might stride his back,

Never might living rider
Across his neck draw rein,
Since Keogh's crimson life-blood
Had stained his sweeping mane.

Dead is the horse, Comanche,
But list! his place is planned
When fair Columbia shows all men
The best things of her land.

Mounted, in regal action,
Comanche will be seen
To tell the truth of soldiers' hearts,
And keep their memory green.

EXCELLENT WORK IN OHIO.

To the Editor:—Allow me to express through the columns of your most valuable paper some of the work accomplished in Ohio. The missionary work is progressing rapidly, and we have calls from all parts of the state, desiring missionaries; never was the state in better condition than now.

The missionaries are doing a grand, good work, and each one is kept very busy; new societies are being organized; old societies re-instated. The circuit system has proved a grand success. We have a circuit completed east and endeavoring to form one in the west.

Have just chartered a society at Ashtabula, Ohio, with 38 members. They have very bright prospects before them. I have just returned from Defiance; they also have chartered with the state. The meetings are all well attended. All societies that I have visited so far are desirous of organizing a lyceum, and we soon will have a lyceum with every chartered society.

Mrs. Schauss and Mrs. Baird are efficient workers in the cause of truth, and others who have voluntarily assisted us in the missionary work. We expect during the month of March to have a grand rally throughout Ohio, as Mr. Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., is to assist us in holding mass-meetings and doing general missionary work. The first meeting to be held in Sandusky, Ohio, March 6; in Toledo, March 13. We wish to invite all Spiritualists in vicinity of Toledo to join with us in making this one of the finest and most successful meetings Toledo has ever held.

All those desiring to hold week-day or evening meetings, let me know at once, so I may make arrangements, as I am forming the circuit where it will save expense, such as railroad fare, etc.

MRS. CARRIE FIRTH-CURRAN,
President Ohio Spiritualist Association.

MICHIGAN.

Mid-Winter Meeting of the State Spiritual Association.

The eleventh annual mid-winter meeting of the Michigan State Spiritual Association was held at the Unitarian Church, in Jackson, Feb. 5, 6 and 7, it being the third meeting of its kind to be held in that city.

Friday morning a reception to visitors took place, every one receiving a hearty welcome.

At 2:30 p. m., the convention was called to order by the vice-president, Dr. O'Dell, of Paw Paw. Invocation was by E. W. Sprague of Jamestown, N. Y. Dr. B. O'Dell, who was presiding as president in the absence of E. E. Carpenter, introduced Judge J. J. Calkins, of the municipal court to deliver in behalf of Mayor Pickles, the address of welcome.

Judge Calkins spoke well, and not only made the delegates feel the welcome as a real, cordial extension of the city's hospitality, but gave the delegates much of the thought which they enjoy. He told of his own experiences, and welcomed at all times anything which shed more light and truth of the infinite.

In response, Mr. D. A. Herrick, of Grand Rapids, delivered some pleasant sentiments regarding the very hearty welcome given by Judge Calkins. Further, he said: "We do not only believe in the immortality of the soul, but we know of the next life. There is no religion which has more of sentiment, truth, reality and spirituality than that of Spiritualism. I am thankful to God that the world has honest critics of Spiritualism, for were it not so, the world would not have to-day the great development it has in this blessed knowledge. I love a religion which is founded upon kindness and good deeds in this human life, better than one founded upon creed."

Dr. B. O'Dell, in a few appropriate remarks, closed the afternoon session.

The music for the afternoon was furnished by Miss Elsie Campbell, who presided at the pipe organ, and Mrs. Fred Beaman, who rendered in beautiful voice, the solo, "Face to Face."

In the evening Mr. Herrick again addressed the convention, taking for his discourse the subject, "The Spirit of Religion." Mr. Herrick stated that "He who denies the visitation of spirit denies all the spirituality of the world." Also, "It is your choice what you make the life you live in. Just as you live in this world, will you live in the next. It is best for us to learn ourselves before we judge our neighbor. The true spirit religion is one of love, of all that is good. You don't want to fear the angel world; look out for those you find here. The religion of spirit if you will search for it, will find and bless you."

Mrs. E. W. Sprague gave messages, in the absence of John D. Boyle of Detroit.

Saturday morning much interest was developed in the symposium; Dr. B. O'Dell presided.

Mr. C. E. Dent of Vicksburg being the first speaker; the subject of "The Condition of Spiritualism" seemed the one for the morning. Then the subject of mediumship was brought forth. And in speaking of frauds, Mr. Sprague stated: "We cannot stop frauds, but we can refuse to endorse them, and indicate to the world the difference between fortune-telling, faking and genuine mediumship."

D. E. Young, of Belden; Levi Wood, of Kalamazoo; M. L. King, of Girard; Julia M. Walton, G. M. Stanley and D. Grey, of Jackson, were also speakers of the morning symposium.

Mrs. Mary Stine and Mrs. Laura L. Crawford, of Detroit, gave a few remarks on the progress of Spiritualism.

Saturday afternoon Mrs. Julia M. Walton gave the invocation. The words were rhyme and the theme was one of religious beauty.

Dr. W. O. Knowles addressed the convention at this session. He said: "You are developing conditions this moment which will affect you in the future, and I hope do you some good. If we want to make Spiritualism a betterment for the soul, be a man, be a woman, be pure and stand up with the masses."

Saturday evening, Mrs. D. A. Morrill, of Grand Rapids, gave an address on "The Powers of the Soul." She said: "We who are endowed with the spirit of the infinite should remember there is a great responsibility upon us. We feel we must impress upon you the sacredness of mediumship. We must prove this to you by our conduct, by right living."

Mrs. Julia Walton also addressed the convention in the evening. Her subjects were taken from the audience, and were "Mother in Spirit Land" and "The Beauties of Sunshine."

In part she said, "We know Spiritualism is true, we know immortality is a fact. Are we applying these lessons to our daily lives. Let us come together as really we should come together; children of one common parent, and when we welcome you into our midst we do not care to what church you belong; we do not care whether you belong to any church so long as your soul is reaching out after the highest and purest and noblest things."

The evening was concluded with the receiving of spirit messages by Mrs. E. W. Sprague of Jamestown, N. Y., and by Mrs. Belle Fuller of Grand Rapids. The work of both was very pleasing.

As Mrs. Dorothy Daily of Detroit, and Dr. P. T. Johnson of Battle Creek, could not be in attendance Sunday morning, the time was taken by the reading of a letter by the vice-president, Dr. O'Dell, from E. E. Carpenter, who is spending the winter in Cuba; also a short address by E. W. Sprague.

Sunday afternoon Mr. Sprague again addressed the people with facts regarding National and State Associations; after which donations were given for the "Medium" Home at Lansing, amounting to $91.17. After this an interesting feature was a "spirit photograph." Photographer J. W. Paine, of Jackson, stated to the audience that he had purchased an unopened package of plates, upon one of which he had scratched his initials, with those of Frank Foster, the "spirit photographer." The plate was then put into an ordinary camera by Mr. Paine, upon which he, Mr. Foster and another gentleman in the audience each placed a hand. In a moment those in the front seats, nearest the camera, declared they heard rappings, and in another moment Mr. Foster said that the photograph was finished. Mr. Paine developed the photograph in a "dark room" at the rear of the auditorium, and it proved to be the picture of an old, white-haired man. A medium declared he had seen spirit forms around the camera, and he heard the name, "Luther Colby."

Dr. A. B. Spinney then gave a very pleasing lecture, which would do one good to hear.

Sunday evening an address was given by Missionary E. W. Sprague, and messages were given by Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Mrs. Morrell and Mrs. Belle Fuller.

We wish to thank the singer, Mrs. Fred Beaman, and the two organists, Misses Delia Herrick and Elsie Campbell; also the kind friends who made it possible for the State Association to hold this meeting in the beautiful city of Jackson, and who were so free-hearted and entertained the guests from a distance. Nor must we forget the hearty welcome given the association by Judge Calkins, and we wish to thank him for the kind words he gave us in his welcoming address.

POTENCY IN WORDS.

Such Is the Earnest Claim of Mr. Newcomb, of Colorado.

I see by The Progressive Thinker there is much controversy going on in regard to obsessions. As a spiritualist for nearly fifty years and having large experience, I desire to say what I know has great influence with the controlling power in mediumship. About thirty years ago I commenced writing for a band of exalted spirits. They had not found an avenue in which they could approach earth for thousands of years, and I found myself the chosen instrument through which they could approach, and give to the world their history, and with it to establish the order from which Masonry sprang. They were no less than what we call the Mound Builders, who built the mounds of Japan before the formation of the Japanese nation, and all the mounds of the Mississippit Valley, and all other American mounds.

On my first introduction to them we had an occasional seance and were disturbed by evil or mischievous influences. They would do all in their power to have us discard these noble presences, and tried to get full control of our doings. One evening we had barely commenced writing for these spirits when one of the interfering gang got control and said: "If you want to know anything, ask me. You can't find out anything by that old white-bearded heathen," showing our friends could be seen by them as they appeared in life. Our old white-bearded friend said, when he got in control, "You repeat these words: KAI THEMO SAI MAITHAU." I did as he directed and we were not again bothered by the mischievous spirits.

When we got through with the writing for the evening, the control said: "You should have seen those mischievous fellows when you repeated those words. They fell to the floor, bound hand and foot." I remarked it was too bad to treat them in that manner, but the control said, "It is a fearful spell to put them in, and they will not bother you much more."

Now in regard to these mischievous influences, they are driven away and cannot stand these words or orders from any one who will use them, throwing a force of will power with them. I have tried them hundreds of times and I know their potency.

I have thought many times about making this public. In one circle we used these words, and the earth-bound spirits came in vast numbers, and some of them were perfect geniuses, and they gathered so thick that they formed a magnetic chain around the circle, but these words prevented them from doing harm.

It is the will power of the medium and the character of the control that governs—not the purity of the medium. The vilest may give good communications occasionally, and the purest may get a vile control. It depends on the power of those controlling—not on the medium. The medium may be pure, and the control bad or vice versa. Keep the words in your mind and you need not use them orally.

They are potent, and mischievous or evil influences cannot stand them.

I would be pleased to hear of the success of mediums using these words, and if used by one with will power, obsession will be a thing of the past. Ask them to retire; if they will not, make them.

I have tried these words and know that they are potent, and give them freely to the world for the benefit of those who suffer from these false controls. Having tried them so thoroughly and knowing their power, I freely give that you may all partake.

NOT GENERALLY SAFE

To Invest Your Money on the Advice of Spirits.

The following from the San Francisco Call of Feb. 20, 1904, illustrates an important point:

Spiritualism, oil stock and patent medicine figure in a suit for damages filed yesterday by Fritz Salmon against Edward Earle. According to the complaint, Earle, in his capacity of stock broker, medium and dispenser of patent medicine at $10 a bottle, induced the plaintiff to invest part of his bank account. Salmon says Earle got $520 out of him, and he asks the court to give him judgment for that amount.

The plaintiff says that in February, 1901, Earle told him that the stock of the Hecla Oil Company was a valuable asset and advised him to purchase a block of it. Earle, Salmon claims, verified his statements a few evenings later, when in his capacity of medium he produced a slate message from the plaintiff's sister, Lizzie, telling him to buy the stock. Salmon followed the advice, purchasing $250 worth of the stock. A week or so later he again purchased $250 worth of stock on the strength of a message received from Lizzie and transmitted to him on a slate by Earle.

Some time later, after he had received various letters from Earle telling him that the Hecla Oil Company was booming, the plaintiff alleges he consulted Earle about his health. The latter, he says, informed him that he knew of a medicine that would work wonders with a sick man. He bought a bottle, paying Earle $10 for it, for the latter told him that he alone knew where to get it. A few days later he bought another bottle, for, he says, one night Earle gave him a message from one Dr. Oscar Schmidt, a deceased friend, telling him not to be without the medicine. The message also told him that "no drug store had it in stock," so, as in the first instance, he turned the $10 over to Earle.

Now he says that the medicine was never worth $10 or any portion of it, and that the stock of the Hecla Oil Company is not worth the paper it is printed on.

LAKE HELEN CAMP, FLA.

Notes From Southern Cassadaga Camp.

There has been quite a large addition to the camp the past week, some who have come to stay, and some only for a week—others have already gone. Those come and go who expect to understand the mystery of spirit communion in a day or two if they have only money to pay for it. Others come with the feeling if they can only get a glimpse of the real truth they will be satisfied, and do not demand the marvelous. We all learn sooner or later that the real spiritual truth is a plant of slow growth—that the seeker must grow up to the truth and not expect it to accommodate itself to their plans or desires; but in quiet, kindly ways people are seeking and finding gleams of heavenly light.

Mrs. Minnie Brown, at Hotel Cassadaga, never withholds a kind word to the seeker; Mrs. Stephens is also kind, and Mrs. Wheeler and her Indian guide, Blue Flower, scatter rays of sunshine; we also hear that Mrs. Steele at Hotel Webster, has done good work.

The trumpet medium, Mrs. Bartholomew, has constantly in her charge a well loved niece who has for some time been a sufferer from lung trouble. The climate has done her some good, but she looks like a lily in its whiteness. Mrs. Bartholomew's devotion to her is very touching—it's "Josie" first and her work afterwards.

The weather for the week until to-day (Saturday), has been most beautiful, and even the warm rain is very pleasant.

Strawberries are very nice this year, but a little later than usual.

Mr. Colville's classes have been held every week morning during the two weeks, and are well attended and not only that, but he donates to the association the proceeds—and it is a nice sum. The writer has met him frequently for many years, but he never seemed such a marvel as now. The people who are not accustomed to real inspirational speaking and improvising of poetry, say, "Is it true that he had no previous knowledge of the subject to be given?" and when answered in the affirmative, and requested to give subjects themselves, they say, "It doesn't seem possible."

On Monday evening we had the largest card party of the season; the prizes were presented by Mrs. Dr. Hilligoss, Mrs. Stephens gave them another time; a friend who did not wish her name mentioned, upon another occasion; we have some others in store from kind friends.

Tuesday, Mr. Colville's subject was "The Problem of Life." On Wednesday, Mrs. Smith Baker read a most interesting original paper upon "How We Grow," at the seance held weekly at the pavilion. Mrs. Baker is a well known author and poet, and is one of the leaders in humanitarian work in Kansas City. She was followed with descriptions by Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Bartholomew, which were very satisfactory.

Prof. Peck spoke on Thursday afternoon upon "The Evolution of Mind." His lectures have been very interesting, showing thoughtful study and were illumined at times by an inspiration that made his hearers wonder how they could ever have believed in the old idea of creation.

Sunday, although the day was rainy, there was a large audience for both sessions. In the morning the writer spoke upon the subject, "Are Not All Ministering Spirits?" and Mr. Colville closed with a poetical benediction.

In the afternoon Mr. Colville spoke upon subjects given by the audience. It was a very excellent discourse. Both Mr. Colville and Prof. Peck sang solos. Prof. Peck was assisted in the chorus of The Beautiful Island of Sometime, by the lady singers.

Although it was very unpleasant Sunday evening, over seventy people turned out in the rain to attend Prof. Peck's stereopticon exhibition of the solar system. He gives another course of lectures next Sunday evening, descriptive of his course of lectures upon Evolution.

We would like to mention more of our people, but we fear it would be trespassing upon your space. Still there is one whom we will mention. Mrs. C. C. Bacon, of Lake Brady, Ohio, who gives out pleasing truths. She is well on her journey to the Sunshine Land, but she talks sense in the conference. At one time she said: "I used to have a pretty bad temper and speak out quickly, but now I've made up my mind not to get mad till to-morrow."

On Friday, the subject at the conference was the Golden Rule. Her speech opened with the following remark: "Well, it's a subject that has been talked about for hundreds of years, but the Golden Rule has never been worn out by being practiced."

Mrs. Rose Johnson, of Dunkirk, N. Y., has the entire charge of Brigham Hall. She still has rooms, and the frequent changes in the hotel by people staying only a little while and going farther south makes it possible to accommodate a few more.

There are also desirable rooms at some of the cottages.

Thanks for the articles for the bazaar, from Maine and Missouri.

ANSWER ME, SNOWFLAKES.

O snow so white and fleecy,
That comes from heaven above,
What is there in that region,
Is it hatred, is it love?

Do the angels in that region
Ever look to earth below?
Do they ever see our doings?
Do they hear them, do they know?

Is the choir forever singing?
Don't they ever stop for breath?
Will I join that heavenly choir
When I leave this earth by death?

Are the harps forever sounding?
Do they never cease to play?
Oh, that we could hear their music
On the planet where we lay!

Are the streets all wide and golden?
Are the cleaners robed in white?
Do the houses on their borders
Ever close their doors at night?

Will there, when I reach that city,
Be a place made for me?
Will there be some kind friend waiting
With a robe and cup of tea?

Will I have to sit forever
In that palace made of gold?
Never see an earth companion?
Never hear a story told?

Oh! could I but visit earth friends?
And tell them the wondrous tale
How that heaven is a city
Without a prison or a jail.

Answer these for me, dear snowflakes.
Are these meditations so?
Tell me, snowflakes, tell me, tell me,
Answer either yes or no!

$10,000.00 DONATED TO PERSONAL MAGNETISM

The American Society of Scientific Research Donates $1,000.00 for the Publication and Free Distribution of an Intensely Interesting Book on Personal Magnetism and Magnetic Influence.

This Book Demonstrates the Practical Value and Power of Personal Magnetism in Business, Politics, Society, Love and Disease, and as a Factor in Influencing and Swaying the Minds of People.

So Long as the Edition Lasts You May Get a Book Absolutely Free and Master the Hidden Mysteries of This Marvelous Power at Your Own Home—Many Startling Secrets Laid Bare.

The American Society of Scientific Research composed of bankers, scientists and philanthropists, propose to place the most valuable book ever published into the very homes of the people absolutely free of Charge. For this purpose they have just donated $10,000, and large printing presses are running day and night turning out this book for free distribution.

Men like Carnegie, Vanderbilt, Rothschild, Rockefeller and other millionaires have studied and used the methods taught in this book in piling up millions. This book lays bare the secrets of the lives of rich men of which you have never dreamed. It reveals all the hidden mysteries of personal magnetism, magnetic healing, character reading and personal influence; it discloses the real source of power in all departments of life. It contains secret information of inestimable value to every person who wants to succeed in life. Many of the most prominent men in this country have obtained this book and read every line of it. They are now daily using its teachings to their own profit and gain. It explains how a wonderful woman in England secured millions of dollars by the exercise of her magnetic power over the noblemen and millionaires of her country. It explains how a woman in West Virginia, with her wonderful magnetic power healed a woman who had lost the use of her lower limbs. It explains how an eminent divine cured a woman of a tumor of long standing that had baffled the skill of eminent physicians. It teaches you how to develop a marvelous magnetic power that you can use in business and social affairs. It teaches you how to resist the magnetic power of others. It explains how you can learn to read the character of persons and tell them their most secret thoughts and actions, even though thousands of miles away. It explains to you how to obtain the power by which you can cure yourself and others of all diseases and bad habits without the aid of drugs or medicines. It explains how you can learn instantaneous methods by which you can place persons under a marvelous influence that heals every ailment and deadens every pain. It teaches you how you can learn to influence individuals, companies and large gatherings, swaying their minds as by a magic wand. It enables you to develop your mental and physical forces, to acquire a marvelously magnetic will power, a retentive memory and a fascination that makes you practically irresistible. It will teach you how to obtain force of character, a splendid bearing, a commanding appearance and a power over those with whom you come in contact, of which you have little dreamed. It will make you truly a leader of men. No matter how strong this description may seem, it is not half so strong as the marvelous power to which this wonderful book leads. Have you achieved the success to which your abilities and talents justly entitle you? Do you wish to obtain a good paying position, an increase in salary, to rise higher in your accepted business or calling, to wield a greater influence over others, to win the love or friendship of some one you know? Read this book, Do you long for fame or renown? You should write for a copy of this remarkable book at once.

The following extracts from a few of the thousands of letters received from some of the people who have read this book give a faint idea of its unusual character and great value.

MRS. LUSETTA SAFFEL, Philippi, W. Va., says: "I cured a lady of consumption. The doctors had given her up; They said one lung was entirely gone. Today she is a well woman.

MRS. T. BRUMLEY, of Dulaney, Tenn., states: "I have experienced more happiness, more true enjoyment in one month since reading this book than I experienced before reading it in ten years. For thirty years I was afflicted with rheumatism: twenty years of the time could scarcely walk. I have treated myself by your method of magnetic healing only a few weeks and am now as active as a girl of sixteen and am perfectly well and free from pain. This is the most wonderful book ever published and should be in the hands of every person. Money could not buy the book that I received from you if I knew I would be unable to secure another."

MAURICE J. SHEW, 132 West One Hundred and Thirty-fourth street, New York, says: "Your book covers the whole ground so thoroughly that I do not see how anything else could ever be written to take its place. When I began with this course I was an invalid, and through its teachings I have become as strong and hearty as any one. I am convinced that thousands of lives could be saved every year if people generally understood the teachings of this course. The Wonderful things that can be accomplished by carefully studying and practicing this book approach the miracles of old."

In a letter received from J. K. UNDERHILL, Olean, N. Y., he says: "After reading your book I cured Mrs. Jennie Furnell of morphine habit, of spinal trouble of ten years' standing, also kidney trouble and rheumatism of twenty-five years' standing. This cure I consider almost miraculous."

The American Society of Scientific Research has undertaken the free distribution of this book. Big roller presses are running day and night until the ten thousand dollars' worth of books are distributed free. On account of the great expense incurred in preparing and printing this book, the society are requested to write for a free copy who are especially interested and really and truly desire to achieve greater success, obtain more happiness, gain more wealth or in some way better their condition in life. The free edition is limited, but if you really desire this book for the purpose of bettering your condition, write to-day, as the $10,000 edition is going rapidly. Never before in the history of a publishing business has there been such a great demand for any book as there is to-day for this book, entitled, "WEALTH, POWER AND INFLUENCE." So long as this edition lasts it will be sent to your address absolutely free, postage prepaid. Address American Society of Scientific Research, Dept. 242C, 471 Columbus avenue, New York City, N. Y.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE

PART I.--The Pentateuch.

Comments on Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy, by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lillie Devereux Blake, Rev. Phebe Hanaford, Clara Bewick Colby, Ellen Battelle Dietrick, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, Ursula N. Gestefeld, and Francis E Barr.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE.--PART II.

Judges, Kings, Prophets and Apostles. Comments on the Old and New Testaments, from Joshua to Revelation. The comments are keen, bright, spicy, full of wit, the work of radical thinkers who are not ignorant of the higher criticism. There is not a dull page in either of these books, but each is a galaxy of the bright minds of the day and throw a new light on the Bible teachings relating to woman. Price of each, paper, 50 cents.

Molecular Hypothesis of Nature;

The Relation of Its Principles to Continued Existence and to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. By Prof W. M. Lockwood. Paper, 24 cents.

LISBETH.

An Interesting Story of Two Worlds.

Elevating, Fascinating, Instructive Throughout.

This work by Carrie E. S. Twing is exceptionally interesting. She well says: "These characters which have brought out the highest and lowest in different religious beliefs, have moved me, not I them." The whole book is interesting, fascinating, and instructive. Price $1.00.

Aryan Sun Myths, the Origin of Religion.

By Sarah E. Titcomb. With an introduction by Charles Morris, author of "The Aryan Race." Price, cloth, $1.00.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 463 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity, its moral tendency, the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry, the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of to-day fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

BODY AND SOUL.

BY J. CLEGG WRIGHT.

This volume consists of a course of lectures delivered in the trance state, and is certainly no small contribution to the study of the soul. It is a good work to open the eyes to the difference between the deductive and inductive process of mind. Bound in cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

ANTIQUITY UNVEILED.

The most important revelations concerning the true origin of Christianity. Reader, in bringing to your notice "Antiquity Unveiled," it is with the sincere hope that you are earnestly looking for the truth, regardless of any other consideration. If such is the case, this advertisement will deeply interest you, and after reading this brief description you will doubtless wish to give the work a careful perusal. Price, $1.50.

IMMORTALITY.

An Interesting Line of Argument in Its Demonstration.

To the Editor:—A few weeks ago I read in your paper a half-column article, whose writer expressed himself as by no means convinced of the fact of immortality, yet at the same time not only willing but earnestly desirous of being convinced. The paper has been mislaid and the writer's name has slipped my memory. For this he will pardon me, I am sure.

I am not sufficiently egotistic to thus publicly attempt to convince our friend. Such action would imply a belief on my part that I possess either a rare knowledge or a very superior faculty of impressing what I know upon the consciousness of another. My aim is much more modest. The most and best that I can do is to make mention of what helped me in my search for proof. No other man could or should follow just where I trod, but the steps I took may serve as suggestions for his partial guidance, thus enabling him to keep somewhere within touch of the true course and avoid useless and tiresome wandering through the mazes of mere guesswork.

No one man ever proved the truth of immortality to or for me. That work I was compelled to do for myself. So I cannot prove it to another. He in turn must do his own proving. And the beauty of it is, he can. He can prove it as certainly, can come to know it as absolutely as he knows his own life, his individual consciousness of life, and the task is not a hard one. Yet certain conditions are indispensably necessary. Like the athlete, he must prepare himself not only by what he takes on, but by what he lays off, for the time being, at least.

The seeker after the truth of immortality must first take on an earnest desire to know the truth, no matter how much rubbish it may displace, nor how sacred or precious the aforesaid rubbish may have seemed to him. Also a perfect willingness to accept each advanced point as it is proven (not otherwise) and shown to harmonize with what has been proven. I have heard men gravely maintain that one could not really be certain of his own existence, adding: "For may not life itself be an illusion?" To try to convince such a person would be a sore waste of time. He must sweat it out alone for awhile. These lines are not for him.

He who would prove immortality must likewise be willing to set aside every opinion, prejudice, or teaching which seems to conflict with the truth as proven. Willing to set it aside temporarily at least. Of two contraries only one can be true. Prove one true and by that act you have proven the other false. When opinion contradicts proven truth, so much the worse for the opinion. To cling to opinion while striving to find that which it contradicts is about as wise as trying to build a fire with one hand while pouring water upon the kindlings with the other.

The sun never insists on shining upon you or me. It simply shines. We may erect whatever barriers we like in the form of roof, wall, shutter, curtain, or other shade, and it never attempts to crawl beneath them. It simply shines. When we wish its rays for light, warmth, or growth, we have only to remove our barriers and lo, it shines. And thus it is with truth. It pursues no man. It simply is. It forces itself nowhere. It simply is. It wastes no time proving itself. He who wishes it proven must do the proving. It simply is. Hence, he who wishes the proof must of necessity seek it (not expect to be argued into it) and when found must welcome it, welcome it above all else, make a home for it, and thus secure it for his very own.

A word, just here, to the general reader. Should I make use of a simile or an illustration that seems faulty in construction or otherwise open for criticism, I cry you mercy. Supposing you were driving toward a city, Caldwell, for instance, for the first time, and were not quite certain of your road, but finally came to a signpost which read:

TO CALDWELL 4 MILES.

Would you care whether the post was painted or unpainted, or what its color? Whether it was of ash, oak, locust or the brashest, flimsiest wood that grows? Whether it was new, stout, serviceable, or old and half rotten? Whether erect or leaning, so long as its fingerboard pointed in the right direction? Is not this last, really, all you want of it, all the interest it has for you? Would not the very next step be to go forward in that direction and test the truth of the information? Would not any other course be a useless waste of time? I leave the answer to you.

Now to our friend: You are alive, are you not? Most assuredly. You see, we must start at some point where the ground is absolutely solid under our feet. The least uncertainty in our foundation would be fatal to the stability of the edifice we wish to build. If we start with the least glimmer of a doubt in our minds it is bound to be there at the finish, or bob up serenely at all sorts of inconvenient moments. But if we utterly banish it at the outset and see that each link in our chain is carefully coupled with the one preceding, and welded with all the power of unmistakable proof, we can swear by our chain when it is finished, knowing that all its parts are equally strong.

You are sure, then, that you are alive? Yes. No one need prove it to you, you simply know it. You cannot tell anyone just how you know it, but you know it. And you do not have to prove it to a doubter. You know it, and that is enough. Well, what is that which you feel within and through you, the consciousness of which gives rise to your assertion that you are alive? What name do you give it? Life, is it not? What is that which animates every living creature or thing? Life, is it not? Can there be any life that is not Life? Certainly not.

Is it not true, then that every manifestation of life we see about us is a manifestation, an expression, a showing forth of the great Life principle? Show me life that is not this, and you, perforce, show me life that is not life. Absurd! So we find that all life is in reality one, that in the final analysis it is the outgrowth, the outcropping of a universal principle. What are some of the characteristics of principle? Is it possible to conceive, for instance, when right was not right, when justice was not justice? (I have no reference to the grotesque travesty so often enacted in courts.) Or a time when truth will not be truth, justice not justice? If not, they surely never began, can never end. Any other principle or phase of principle will bear the same test. That which never begins and never ends is surely eternal, immortal. Life, being a principle, is therefore eternal, immortal.

Again, were it possible to so treat any principle, whether that of truth, honor, justice, equality, or any other, as to deprive it of life, would it continue to exist? Impossible! So for anything whatever to always exist it must be endowed with life. Life, then, must always be.

Right here the old habits of thought will fairly rise up in arms and prompt a fellow to exclaim: "Oh, but I mean my own individual life. How am I to know that I am immortal?"

Let us see. Did we not find that all there is of your life is but a showing forth of Life, the great immortal principle? We agreed, did we not, to stand by what we once established? What can end, stop, destroy your life? Whatever it is, it must have the power, must it not? Can anything that is not alive act or manifest power? No. To perform an act or wield power it must be alive? Certainly. Being alive it is one more exhibition of Life. So to end your life we must employ Life. Set Life to work, not to destroy another life but to end itself, for we have found that there is no life outside of Life.

Again, is it possible for principle to work one way at one time and an opposite way at another? Is it not always true to itself? Is not its action always in the direction of manifesting itself? Did light ever manifest darkness? Life simply cannot act otherwise than in the direction of re-creating, reproducing, perpetuating itself. And what can hinder that action, since power itself is dependent upon Life for the chance to act in any manner whatever.

There are two or three ugly stumbling blocks in the path of one who is first awakening to this light. One is the individual man's idea, handed down from his remote ancestry, endorsed and taught by school, press, and pulpit, and flashed back upon the mirror of his inner consciousness from the assembled mind of the race, that he is a material body, a mass of bone, muscle, blood, nerves and separate organs, placed here amid all sorts of danger from fire, flood, pestilence, and the greed of his fellowman. Theologians tell him he has a soul which lives forever. Would-be scientists deny it. The ensuing confusion befogs his every attempt at a higher view.

Another hindrance is the equally misleading idea that there are just two worlds, this and another; two lives, one here and one there. That your life or mine begins on this particular planet. That the interests of the Great Universe centre on this one little grain of sand.

Add to these our attitude towards that giant bogy-man, called Death. A friend instead of an enemy, yet our fears permit us to see only the grinning skull and crossbones with which bigger cowards than we have invested him. Not a thing, not a power. A change of condition, nothing more.

There is a higher view of life than this. If the old views contradict the truth as proven, so much the worse for the old views. If there is an idea of life that fits in and harmonizes with what we have learned of the truth, surely that idea is worthy of a test. How may it be tested? By living it. There is no other way. Live just one year steadily remembering that you are a soul in temporary possession and absolute command of a material body, that your life is simply an integral, not fractional, part of Universal Life which never began, can never end, that you are heir to all you can conceive and understand of it, just as you are free to all the sunlight you can use; and at the end of the year see how willing you would be to swing back into the old ruts. W. H. HUTCHINSON.

A Homely Illustration.

When you get a sliver in your finger, the sensation is anything but pleasant. Allow it to remain long enough and it will fester and give you a lot of trouble. Remove the cause and the pain will stop.

It's the same way with your whole body. When your head aches, it is nature's message sent from the stomach to the brain. Every throb is but a click in the message whose letters spell "danger—send relief." Some people, when they get a headache, rush to the drug store and swallow some powerful tablet or powder which sets the heart to thumping and the blood racing around the body at a terrific rate. Do you? Other people take strong purgatives which rip and tear through the stomach and bowels, leaving them irritated and sore. Do you? Still other people take Vernal Palmettona (formerly known as Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine.) It is a sensible remedy to use. It removes the cause of the trouble. It helps the stomach and bowels to get rid of poisonous waste matter by stimulating their natural muscular action. It tones up and strengthens the nerves; it enriches the blood and builds up hard, healthy tissues. Only one small dose a day is required to permanently cure ailments of stomach, liver, bowels, heart, kidneys and blood. Try it before you buy. Write us for a free sample bottle. It will do you good. Promptly sent postpaid. Formula in every package. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., 452 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y. Sold at all druggists.

STOMACH TROUBLES CURED

If you suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubard Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a full two weeks' treatment to any sufferer desiring to give it a trial. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you? It is Free. Gradually Growing Blind. Dr. Coffee Cured Me.

MRS. LULU TAIT

EMMETSBURG, Iowa.

Eleven years ago I was taken with acute inflammation of the eyes with Granulated Lids. I treated them at home for a year and then I went to a leading oculist and he treated my eyes for eight months, with no benefit whatever. Three months afterwards I got to suffering so bad with them and scums commenced to grow over my sight, which made me so blind that I decided to go to another oculist. I kept changing doctors and had five different operations without benefit. Finally one doctor said that I would never get well. I gradually grew worse, and I got so blind that I could not tell a person right in front of me. When I heard of Dr. Coffee and his new treatment I went to him two years ago, and from the first day my eyes commenced to improve, and they steadily improved, until today I can see to read as well as anybody; the scums and scars have absorbed and the sight is perfectly clear; the granulations have got entirely well, and I want to say that every one afflicted go to Dr. Coffee, or write him, and be cured. His medicines are mild, but wonderful in their results. Your friend, MRS. LULU TAIT.

A Wonderful Cure.

MRS. M. A. ROBERTS.

WINDSOR STATION, Va., Nov. 10, 1903.

Dr. W. O. Coffee, Des Moines, Ia.

My Dear Sir—I was almost totally blind in my right eye, and could hardly see enough out of the other one to get around the yard. It was pronounced cataract and no one saw any hope except to have an operation performed to have it removed, which I protested against, owing to my age.

I heard about you through your advertisement, ordered a month's treatment, used it as directed, and today my eyesight is entirely restored. Words cannot express my gratitude to you and your remedies. You are at liberty to use this testimon in any way it may benefit you or suffering humanity. I am 76 years old.

Yours very truly, MRS. M. A. ROBERTS.

Could Not See Across the Room.

EMIL BETTS.

KNOX CITY, Mo., Feb. 24, 1902.

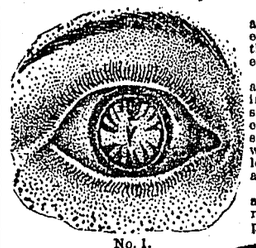
Dr. Coffee, Des Moines, Ia.

Dear Sir—My eyes have been sore for the past 20 years; I was blind one year with Granulated Lids; I had them treated, and they were all right for ten years, but they got sore again, and I had them treated until I was sick and tired, and my left eye failed me again, and until the last two years I could not see my way across the room. One day my daughter read to me of the new method of treatment for the eyes given by the celebrated Dr. Coffee. I wrote to him and sent a statement of my case; he treated my eyes for one year, and to day I can see as well as anyone who has attained the age of 74 years. I owe it all to Dr. W. O. Coffee.

Yours respectfully, EMIL BETTS.

Cured After Many Disappointments.

JOHN S. GRANT.



CLEMENTS, Minn., Dec. 17.

Dr. W. O. Coffee, Des Moines, Ia.

Dear Sir—I had been troubled very much with granulated eyelids and ulcers or growths on each eye between the pupil and the tear duct. Prominent physicians and oculists in Iowa and Minnesota did no good. I was advised by a friend to consult you, which, as you know, I did. After using your treatment for three weeks I stopped for a few days so I could see the effect and to my surprise the granulation and ulcers had all disappeared. I have not used anything in them since then (September) and I can work in dust or smoke or anywhere, and they are as good and clear as ever they were. I am very glad that I consulted you, and will be very pleased to recommend you and your treatment to my many friends. Wishing you success,

Yours very truly, JOHN S. GRANT.

A Beautiful Child, Blind and Deaf. Restored to Sight and Hearing.

MISS NADA PARKER.

This is one of the most remarkable cures ever made. The case is that of the beautiful little girl, Miss Nada Parker of Moberly, Mo. This little 10-year-old girl was brought to Des Moines by her aunt, Mrs. Atherton, of Moberly, Mo. She was almost completely blind from inflammation, scums and cataracts on her eyes, and she was so deaf that you had to yell in her ears to make her hear anything. She had been treated by the best ear specialists in Chicago and Kansas City for three years without any benefit whatever. She was getting worse. In six weeks' treatment under Dr. Coffee's supervision her hearing was restored so that she could hear a watch 18 inches from her ears. Her sight was so good that she could read a newspaper. Mrs. Atherton says: "I don't think my niece needs much more treatment. I simply brought her up to Des Moines to let Dr. Coffee see how nicely she is getting along. Her hearing is practically perfect and so is her eyesight. We consider this one of the remarkable cures of this most incurable of diseases."

A Prominent Railroad Man's Hearing Restored.

MR. SCHWENK.

VALLEY JUNCTION, Ia.

Dr. W. O. Coffee, Des Moines, Ia.

Dear Doctor—My trouble was brought on by a little cold, which produced a little soreness and tenderness in my ears; this cold settled in my head and produced a case of catarrh. I paid no attention to it until I commenced to get deaf; this alarmed me, because, being in the employ of a railroad, I realized that the growing deafness, if not cured, would cost me my job. I went to a physician for treatment, but he gave me no encouragement whatever, and his treatment failed to benefit me or check the progress of the trouble. I could not hear a watch tick when held an inch from my ears. I sent for your treatment; the first month's use produced a slight improvement in my hearing. I continued your treatment six months. To-day my hearing is as good as ever and I consider myself completely cured, and my general health is a good deal better.

C. SCHWENK, Valley Junction, Iowa.

Restored to Sight and Hearing.

MRS. MILLIE A. GREENMAN.

GARVIN, Minn.

Twelve years ago I was attacked with inflammation and granulated lids, and, in spite of remedies that I tried, my eyes kept constantly getting worse, the granulations caused scums and films to grow over the eyeball, ulcers the size of a pea formed on the sight, which ate into the eyelid and eyeball, almost perforating it. I could not distinguish an object, no matter how close I held it to my eye; the severe pain almost drove me frantic. Never in my life did I suffer more. My right ear was in very bad shape; it commenced to discharge when I was 12 years old; this discharge increased from time to time and finally caused a large tumor to form in my ear close to my ear drum. The horrible noises caused by this tumor and the pain of my eyes and ear caused me untold suffering. I was finally persuaded to write to Dr. Coffee, which I did, fully explaining my case to him, and in a few days I received from him by mail some medicines, with full instruction how I was to use them. Soon I noticed a vast improvement. I continued to use his treatment and gradually the scums, granulations and ulcers were completely absorbed, not even leaving a scar, and today my eyes are in first-class condition. I can read and see to do any kind of work without trouble.

The tumor has been entirely removed from my ear and ulcers and inflammation healed and I can hear ordinary conversation as plainly as I could before this terrible misfortune overtook me. Words cannot express my deep-felt gratitude for the benefit I received from the Absorption Treatment.

Yours truly, MRS. MILLIE A. GREENMAN.

SPIRITUALISM--The Bright Star of Hope That Stands Eternal in the Heavens; Our Beauteous Guiding Star, Shine On for Aye!

VOL. 29. CHICAGO, ILL., MARCH 12, 1904. NO. 746

The Center of Creation

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

In his search for manhood within the solar system, Mr. Wallace begins with Mercury as nearest to the sun. Mercury is not only very near the sun, but, like our moon, keeps its face perpetually turned to its lord and master. It is, therefore, almost red hot on one side, and cold as space on the other. It has almost no atmosphere, and is too small to hold by attraction either hydrogen, oxygen or nitrogen. There would be a constant turmoil all over its border lands, where heat and cold meet. So, of course, man could not have been evolved under such conditions.

The next planet is Venus. It is large and dense enough to retain the same gases as the earth, and has even a deeper atmosphere. But, alas! it has been recently discovered that it has no day and night. It turns the same face to the sun all the year round, so would roast humanity on one side, while freezing it on the other. Like Mercury, it would have cyclones and hurricanes galore playing perpetually at its border lines between the heat and the cold. Thus Venus is as unfavorable to human life as Mercury.

After the earth comes planet Mars. Poor Mars is but one ninth the size of the earth so cannot hold any gases lighter than carbonic acid. This alone would settle the question of any beings such as we call human existing on that planet. So it is not necessary to allude to the so-called "canals," now acknowledged to be due to natural causes. The planet is simply impossible to human life.

It is unnecessary to discuss the outer and larger planets, since they are acknowledged by every astronomer to be without a sufficiently solidified surface to support or maintain human life.

We need not discuss the moon. Its conditions, like those of Mercury and Venus are simply impossible. We thus, after examining carefully the goods on Nature's counter, find nothing outside of earth that would be of any service to man.

Most certainly the learned doctor seems to have proved his assertion that earth is the only probable, not to say possible, mode of man throughout the whole of Cosmos. The evidence he presents will suffice for those who know a fact when they see it; and, for the rest, arguments are needless and useless. But having these facts we propose to ask what they mean in the light of other knowledge, some of it but recently acquired by man?

We stop a moment to acknowledge our indebtedness to the learned author of "Man's Place in the Universe," but now his responsibility ceases, for the writer is proposing to go to work on his own account, and take a broad view of life from a standpoint not approached in that work, but of equal importance to the human race.

PART SECOND.

This theory of an entire cosmos without a man in it, save on the one wee little earth, is startling, though apparently proved. Of course there may be some other kinds of beings on planets and suns, but, most assuredly, we cannot guess what they look like, nor the kind of food on which they subsist. If intelligence be at work in a form not human, there will be nothing in the death process to change its nature. We have that lesson here upon earth.

Nature offered Intelligence the choice of two clearly defined lines of advance. She could either take a backbone and become a vertebrate, or, adorned with rings in sections, pose as an insect. On the one line she achieved manhood. On the other the ant has evolved a civilization just as remarkable, with some virtues, and even arts, impossible as yet to humans. But though living on the same little planet, and equally in harmony with its conditions, no intercourse is possible, nor apparently would be possible in the spirit life of to-morrow. This law of intellectual separation must apply to all forms of UNHUMAN life everywhere; and not only through time, but possibly into eternity.

So the writer is not going to claim cousinship with other forms of life, but he would like to find out as much as he can about man, whether white, brown, black, yellow or red, with a view to his present and future possibilities, and relation to Cosmos.

The first singular fact is that you can take a man to pieces, to a large extent, and yet leave him his manhood. Take off his legs and arms—a mere surgical trifle now-a-days—remove his appendix and even his stomach, extract his teeth and shave his head, yet nobody will object to his voting at the coming election, if otherwise qualified. His wife and family would still claim him, and his will would probably be attacked for usual causes. Of course that is only physical manhood, which we thus see has no fixed proportions, and is regulated only by the survival of the fittest.

But it is very little different when we come to examine the mental side of him. Just a little twist to one side or the other, and off he goes to an asylum. He must act, and even think very much like his neighbors or he will be viewed with suspicion. And as a most singular fact certain rare cases have proved that his mentality can be broken up into a number of personalities, one, apparently, with as good a right to possession of the body as another. One of these new personalities may pose as a saint, and the very next hour a common-place sinner may hold the fort.

The extraordinary cases of Mollie Fancher and Miss Beauchamp—scientifically attested—with many others more recently recognized, tell us that personality is just as evanescent as form. If one of Miss Fancher's half-dozen personalities commits forgery or arson, no judge would know how to deal with the case other than by incarcerating the whole crowd in an asylum. Saints and sinners alike would have to go to the same hell. It is beginning to be recognized that personality is a very unreliable expression of manhood. The personality you knew twenty or thirty years ago, and have not met since, is gone for you. At best you exchange memories, and so believe yourself into the old relation with each other.

I have elsewhere, in other articles, given abundant reasons for believing that death itself, like birth and accident during life, sometimes disrupts the old personality, producing in that way much of the confusion and mystery of spirit return. Fancy Mollie Fancher over there and trying to come back. Sometimes you would feel to recognize some mutual fact, and cry "wonderful test." But then would come appearances, one after the other, each a true Mollie Fancher, with which you could make no connection. We must, therefore, have something far more reliable than personality if we are to make a real gain out of our mortal or spiritual experiences. It's no use John Smith shrieking that he wants to be always John Smith. The shrieker is himself only one of a lot of possible personalities, each with an apparent selfhood, with as good a claim to individual immortality, so far as we can see, as the rest of the crowd.

Of course this is a very interesting theme, and perhaps includes rather more than our talented Wallace was thinking of when he was limiting mortal humanity to just one speck in the universe. For the census says, one times one is one, and nothing over, whereas personality becomes mathematics if you follow it out far enough.

Once again, what do all these facts mean for us? To answer that query it really seems as if we must start in our quest all over again. Let us see what we really know about it, rather than what we merely believe.

It was not a joke when we said that a man could be cut up into a great many pieces and still remain a man. But you can't cut up Nature. She has done that for herself, and her "cut ups" are the units which blend into temporary personalities. Sometimes they blend into a sun or a universe; sometimes into a man or a mite. Its only a question of shaking a lot of them together, and calling the result a personality. But if you shake them into a form you recognize, and perhaps admire, you can just as easily shake them out of it, and begin all over again. The point of importance for the student to note is this—there are but three kinds of raw material—using the word material for want of a better—and they are indestructible, and always found together. Energy, substance and intelligence are all there is to play or work with, and they never separate.

It is no use hunting for the origin of will or mind, since they are only phases of intelligence, working through substance, by means of energy. Just the triple godhead, if you choose, which no chomist can analyze, nor mortal comprehend. The unit has all three. You can't have energy alone, or substance alone, or intelligence alone, and the very moment two or more such units clasp hands, all three become visible in every movement. You may fancy that sometimes intelligence is working outside the molecule, when you are told to call it "chemical attraction and repulsion." But just a step or two further and your chemistry fails, for the intelligence is at work inside, and then the learned doctors of philosophy tell you you must call it "mind."

Herein is a stupendous fact. Every gathering of units is a form personality that, in one sense or another, marries, rears a family, and then retires. That is the entire history of creation. But all the time the unit—the eternal three—is lord and master of its own indestructible self. Since these are facts, scientifically attested, the question is, what do they mean to the reader and writer of this article?

KEYS.

We hold the keys of our destiny
To employ them just as we choose.
Then shake the fetters off and be free
And no longer your "fate" abuse.
"Bound by the forces of circumstance?"
Then call on the deathless I,
Rouse up your courage and give a chance
To the wonderful key of Try.

Meeting a frown or a bitter word
For the good your hand has wrought?
Silence, and see how the depths are stirred
By the key of a loving thought.
Holding the sense of an injury
Which has caused your heart to bleed?
Pardon, and set the black blood free
With the key of a kindly deed.

Health and wealth you can claim no more
And adversity's blasts are chill?
Place in the iron of that stubborn door
The key of undaunted Will.
Mourning the loss of a loved one dead,
Released from the toil and strife?
Silence, and take in your hand instead,
The key of eternal life.

Friends are faithless and love untrue,
And the sky is Godless above?
Then open the heart and the soul of you
With Loyalty's key of Love,
And give of mercy or pity or pelf
And wake to each sad heart's call;
In losing self you shall find yourself
The master key of them all.

For we hold the keys of our destiny
If only we understand,
And place in each difficult lock we see
The key that lies in our hand.
Silence, Patience and Pardon. These
Are proof against every test,
But stronger than all, the master keys
Of a selfish Love is best.

THE SILVER BOAT.

When Saunders had taken his young wife to the old manor house on the bayou, she had said to him:

"We will stay here forever. It is a place I have seen in dreams."

And Saunders, being newly wedded and seeing all things through the glamor of love, had freely consented. Yet, when spring came and the halo of the honeymoon had dimmed, he remembered his friends and his sports. For Saunders was strong with youth—used to the buffet with Nature and contentions of the field. He suggested that they should return North—that at least they should spend some weeks at the resorts. She shook her head.

"No, no," she pleaded, "not now. Let me have this now. It is a realization. I can find it nowhere else in the world. Let me remain in it."

So Saunders had his yacht down and some friends. They made the old house merry for a time, then went away on a cruise, leaving the young wife, who loved better than all to sit on the long jasmine gallery at evening and from amid the vines look down to the little moonlit harbor, with its shining water, the draping moss, and the cypresses on the point that touched a path of light where the water bent outward to the sea. Filled with a great happiness, her summer became a summer of dreams.

Saunders came and went. Devoted and tender, he meant to be kind; but the quiet, half-enchanted round of the old manor where he had passed his childhood no longer satisfied his robust nature. So the yacht sailed in and out of the little moss-hung harbor, the young wife waving good-bye from the veranda stair. Sometimes she sighed as she watched his sail pass beyond the cypress point; then, lost in her happiness and her fancies, she would forget and find a comfort that was real in the things we have been taught to call intangible.

Thus it was her world became not altogether as the world of other people, but a curious half-world wherein she seemed to be near, almost to commune with, gentle, unseen forces, that offered the peace of a sweet companionship. Sometimes she even fancied a light touch on her cheek. Again, something that was like a whispered word came as on the perfume of the jasmine. Once, in the moon light, a face, ever so faint and filmy, floated between her and the vines. But when she looked again only the vines were there, and she could not be sure. It was as if she had entered a sort of border country, between that which we know and that of which men have never ceased to speculate. The negroes of the household—old family servants most of them—held her in awe and reverence, and whispered the traditions of the manor—of other women who had been as she was, and had sat thus among the jasmine on moon-clear nights.

When the baby came it was September. Saunders had meant to be there, but the yacht had been held by a stress of weather. Lying with her baby boy by the open window, where the scented air and the white moon rays came in, she seemed so like a creature from some far, dim meridian, that those who served her were filled with deep superstition and marvelous beliefs.

When it was near morning, the old nurse, who had been leaning from the casement, saw something come into the path of light that lay between the cypress point and the landing dock. She crept to the bed eagerly.

"De boat am comin', Missus. It jes' turn de point!"

"The boat? The silver boat?"

"Oh, no, Missus! Dat ain't comin' now. I mean Mas' Saundah's boat."

Saunders remained longer than usual this time. The boy was a new interest. The picture presented by the beautiful mother and babe crowded out other attractions. Then he urged her to go with him for a cruise, and take the boy along. But it was the stormy season, so Saunders went with some friends instead. After that he went much as before. Once, when the boy was rather more than a year old, walking about a little and saying a few words, Saunders went for a longer cruise than usual—as far as Havana this time. When he returned the boy was in the family graveyard, the mother at her old place among the vines, with the boy's playthings on the floor beside her.

It was a blow to Saunders. The boy had learned to kiss him good bye, to know him when he came, and had loved to be carried in his strong arms. The place without the boy was unbearable. He urged the mother to go with him, now, anywhere—to give up her lonely life. She still refused.

"I shall go only with the silver boat," she said. "I shall wait for the silver boat."

"The silver boat?" Saunders regarded her, only half understanding.

"The silver boat that comes for the women of the manor. You must have heard of it."

Saunder's look became one of annoyance.

"Oh, the old tradition. I thought that boat was forgotten long ago."

"It came for your mother," nurse says, "the night you were born. She saw it."

"Old negroes see many things—whatever they expect to see, in fact. She probably saw the moon on the water. I have seen it look strangely myself."

He went alone and continued to go at intervals, remaining away longer each time. While at the end of the jasmine gallery, with the boy's playthings strewn as he left them that last day, the woman sat as she had loved to sit on those summer nights before he came, looking down on the little harbor and the point of cypresses, where the path of light led outward to the sea.

She was sitting thus on the night when the boy would have been two years old, leaning back in an old armchair and looking down through the vines at the moonrise. A white wrap was drawn about her shoulders, and in the fragrant dimness she seemed a fleeting, insubstantial being that might vanish at a sound.

Presently the moon, lifting higher, threw a flood of radiance into the wire gallery entrance. Some of his toys lay in the moon light—a little cart, a toy boat and some soldiers. It was close upon the hour of his birth, and looking at these things the mother fancied how he might have looked had he lived to be there with her to-night. Her eyes drifted away to the point, where the roadway of light was broad and wonderful because of the full moon.

Then she leaned forward a little, looking more intently. Something had turned the point and was coming down the shining way. It could not be a boat, she thought, for a boat would show a dark outline, while this was white, almost as bright as the way itself. But then she saw it was a boat—a boat of light, coming steadily in, its white sails filled, though the air seemed without motion.

"Oh," she breathed, "the silver boat!"

She began to tremble. Should she go to meet it? No, oh, no, it was not like that. She leaned back in the big chair and closed her eyes, as one waiting a summons. Then presently she opened them, remembering what her husband had said of the moon on the water. No, she had not been deceived. The silver boat lay at the landing dock, and there was someone on the floor in the moonlight. Then she knew. It was her baby boy who had come in the silver boat. He was once more beside her, amid his toys.

At first she did not speak, fearing he might vanish. Then she called to him, very gently, using his pet name. For a moment he did not notice her, intent with his neglected playthings. Then, a toy in his hands, he came nearer. She had known he would look just so. When he spoke, it was as she had known he would speak at this time.

"I wanted my toys," he whispered, "I wanted to come."

She leaned forward hungrily, yet feared to touch him. She saw now that he was not as one of the tangible world, but a semblance, something as we may see reflected in plate windows.

"May I go with you?" she asked. "Will you take mamma in the silver boat?"

He shook his head. The silken hair fell about his cheeks.

"No, only for me. They said you would see me if I came to-night, and would have my toys for me."

"Yes, oh, yes! I always have them for you! Will you come often?"

As often as they will let me. Perhaps you will not always see me. I have been here before and you did not see me."

"But I felt that you were near—oh, my baby! my baby!"

He returned to his toys. The moonlight flooded in and made him a white playground. Sitting in the shadow the woman watched, scarcely breathing, while something that was not sleep but a great harmony of peace fell upon her and upon all the land about. The breeze died. The moonlight shed a fuller glory. The perfume of the jasmine became sentient with unseen life. When consciousness returned to her, the square of moonlight was gone, the silver boat was no longer at the landing-place.

After that he returned to her each year. When the hour of his birth came she watched the silver boat pass the point of cypresses, and then he was beside her. And each year she found him a little older, as of course he must be, and each year she had prepared herself for the change.

Thus she saw his growth from childhood to youth, much as she would have seen it had he remained in her daily life.

As he grew older his early toys were laid aside, and she bought other things such as she thought he might care for, and had them ready for each coming. The household, seeing this, grew more sadly tender, more silent in her presence, more deeply superstitious than before; while Saunders urged her again and again, to leave the old manor and go with him back to the world, his world, and to what he termed realities of life. She gently resisted each appeal. Her world, her life, and her realities were there on the old jasmine gallery. The outside world had grown vague, dim, insignificant—the shadow of a half-forgotten dream.

As the boy grew older he spoke to her each time at greater length, and often tried to tell her something of his existence. She listened hungrily, understanding little. She realized that it was a life without material need, and with other senses than hers. He had pleasures, he had companions, he was taught. By and by he would have duties. She comprehended this, but when she tried to understand the nature of it all she grew confused and gladly came back to him as he sat before her, a semblance and part of the life she could comprehend.

Often she spoke to him of his father. She had found that the boy, too, loved the strong man of the world, and knew much of his life and needs. Yet when she spoke of having the father with them at these times, he only shook his head and said that it could not be so.

"Do not blame him," he said to her once. He had grown a tall youth now, with much of his father's face. "Do not blame him for his life. He has a good, true heart, but he is not as you are. He is of the world of substance; the tangible world. You are of our world—the real world!"

"Oh, I do not blame him—I have never blamed him!" she answered. "But the world of substance, and—the real world. I do not quite follow you."

He smiled gently. How beautiful he was! How she longed to strain him to her heart!

"The tangible is not real—that which you perceive with your material senses. It fades, perishes, goes into other forms. Only the intangible is real. It may change with growth, but it is always the same in substance. Thought, spirit—these are intangible, and there are forces, some of which you call electric. They are really as one—a part of the great light which is life. That which you see and touch with the material senses—these things are for the day only."

"But I see you, and oh, you are real, are you not?"

"Yes, and it is with the real vision that you see me—the eye of spirit. I would be as nothing to your touch."

"But why do I see you clothed as in the material life?"

"Because, with you, the real eye must perceive the material eye, which supplies what it has been trained to see—the form and dress which the conscious mind expects."

"Then are you not as I see you?"

"I am as you see me, yet I am more than you see. When you see me at last only with the eye of the real, you will know, and you will not be startled."

"And the silver boat," she asked, "is that, too, of the material eye?"

"The boat which you see, yes. Yet, there is a boat—a boat of light."

Then once more he tried to convey to her something of the spirit life and seeing. But she became adrift presently, and only vaguely followed him. It was as when we try to convey colors to one born blind.

"Oh, when am I to see?" she pleaded.

"There is a life in which you see, now," he answered. "In that life you have been with me from day to day. It becomes the conscious life when you waken. Then you will both see and understand."

"And that will be—?"

"When you come to us wholly."

"In the silver boat?"

"Yes, in the silver boat."

"Soon? Will it be soon?"

"Yes, soon. Perhaps it will seem long, waiting. But it will be soon."

When Saunders came home that time, she was even more gentle, more tender than before. He thought her more beautiful than he had ever seen her. Lingering together by the water's edge, under the moss-draped live-oaks, they were almost lovers again.

He came oftener that year. Oftener, too, he spoke of their baby—the baby who would have been almost a man now—and more than once she was ready to tell him of the silver boat. Yet something always made her hesitate. September found him on his autumn cruise, yet expected daily, for he had promised an early return.

She was in her old seat on the baby's birth-night, looking down the way of light, to the cypress point. The moments always passed so slowly until he came—and the waiting—she was weak and tired to-night—it seemed to her that he must come, oh, he must come soon! She would close her eyes a little, and so rest.

And then, all at once, he was there. She had missed the coming of the boat, but lo, there he stood in the moonlight! Tall, strong and beautiful, and now as never before, holding out his arms to her, his face filled with the joy of welcome!

And at first she could not move, and started to cry out. Then, suddenly, she was standing before him, while from between them, something that was like a wall of mist fell away, and behold, she saw him with the eyes of light, in the glory of the real!

Saunder's yacht came in at daybreak. He hurried up the path and gave a cheery call as he mounted the veranda stair. Then he paused, and tiptoed over to where she was sitting. She had been there all night, he thought; it would not do. The servants must take better care of her.

He took her hand to lift it to his lips. Then quickly he let it fall. The old nurse, roused by his voice, came out on the gallery, half awake.

Saunders beckoned to her.

"Your mistress—she is—she has gone with the silver boat," he said.—From The Delineator.

OUR SICK AND DISABLED MEDIUMS.

The treasurer of the N. S. A. has $1,000 he is anxious to contribute towards the support of sick and disabled mediums and speakers. While he is so exceedingly liberal, he wisely insists that the 10,000,000 of Spiritualists in the United States shall contribute as a body a like amount. If each one of that large number will contribute ONE CENT each, $100,000 instead of $1,000 will result therefrom. But as many of these 10,000,000 of Spiritualists are niggardly mean and stingy, and as bad, if not worse, than the meanest orthodox Christian, they will not contribute one cent, hence it behooves the intelligent, whole-souled element in our ranks to assume the burden, and put their hands deep in their pockets and send on their dollars to aid in sustaining the sick and worn out mediums and speakers.

THE SOPHIST.

Some Cogent Reflections Thereon.

There are those who believe that departed spirits concern themselves about the affairs of men. There are others who believe that superior beings from higher planes of existence interfere with the affairs of men. Still others maintain that God mixes himself up very extensively with the affairs of men. And yet others who hold that fate or destiny fixes every thing, even to our volitions.

But the courts, and all men in the practical affairs of life, while not passing on the absolute truth of any of the foregoing propositions, hold that the healthiest and most profitable opinion is that every man has a will of his own and that he must successfully resist all "controls" which would place him outside the law and the proprieties.

The man who kills another is not excused because he says God commanded him to do it, and it is not worth while for the man who maltreats us to urge that he is under the domination of a spirit not his own. Maybe he would be if he brought these parties, God and the spirit, into court and they corroborated his testimony.

The Greek sophist stands for one of those oft-recurring periods in the history of religion and philosophy when men lose faith in the ability of human capacity to solve the problems with which religion and philosophy concern themselves, and who for that reason turn from these questions to the practical affairs of life. It is quite natural where there is so much conflict of opinions, as there was in Greek philosophy at that time, for the Sophist to conclude that none of these opinions were absolutely true. Anyway, the position of the Sophist was that there is no such thing as abstract truth, nor abstract good. What appears good and true to one man, does not appear true and good to another man, because of a difference—not in the thing, of course, but in the view point. The sophist, however, held that there are "healthy and profitable" opinions, and that the state and the individual should encourage these and discourage all unhealthy and unprofitable opinions. Evidently it would not be a healthy and profitable opinion for the state or society to hold that men may be so far under the domination of the fates, spirits and gods, as not to be accountable for what they do. And we take it that no opinion is healthy and profitable for the individual which takes away his self-reliance, for self-reliance is self-effort, and self-effort is self-development. As it is according to certain opinions, after what the gods, fates and spirits do for us there is nothing left for us to do for ourselves, but sit by and see the thing go.

But can man have no aid intellectually except such as comes to him through the ordinary channels of education, and no aid physical except such as comes to him through the alimentary canal or in the food he eats and the air he breathes? Can he have no aid direct from the Infinite, eternal and omnipresent source of all existence, which some call God; others Infinite Intelligence; others matter, and which is known by a thousand other names too tedious to mention?

Those who have read my book* know that my fundamental concept is that the worlds coming into our view first as nebulae, are the self-development of or from an infinite, eternal omnipresent and incomprehensible ethereal substance, which to give it personality and thus facilitate discussion, we have named Ethia—hence Ethianism. Of course this concept may not be absolutely true, but as it is founded on science, reason and common sense, perhaps it is as nearly true as are the concepts of those who fancying themselves inspired of the gods, or controlled of the spirits, turn their imaginations loose, unrestrained by any consideration whatsoever. Those who claim inspiration, or any other control, can only substantiate their claim by applying the facts of science, reason and common sense to what they say. Why not stop at the end of these capacities and have done with it?

Anyway, in the Ethian view the world we know is "fixed" ethereal substance. Of this fixed substance we eat three times a day, and breathe much oftener, oftener, and in the process of digestion we reduce it to a state more or less "free." It then passes into the blood and on to organ and tissue where it takes on the precise nature of organ and tissue and does it without volition on our part.

The infinite Ethia or ethereal substance is ever present in organs and tissue, and in all other space; and absolutely "free," much more free than what we have as digested food in the blood and which takes on our nature of its own volition. Why not by an effort of the will have this absolutely free and omnipresent ethereal substance take on the nature of healthy or normal organ and tissue, instead of perpetuating a diseased one as food does; and thus have aid direct from the source of all existence to supplement that which we have indirectly through the food we eat and the air we breathe. Echo answers why not, but does not commit itself to anything forther.

It might however pay an old man at least to experiment along this line. He might thus put on the brakes, or possibly reverse the engine; otherwise he goes on down to the foot of the incline on regular schedule time.

Ethia "created" the whole world direct from herself in the "beginning;" what insuperable objection could she now have to effecting repairs and improvements in man if he placed himself in rapport or intellectual harmony with her? It is, however, well enough to keep in mind that the gods help only those who help themselves, and after we reach the end of our own tether.

OBSESSION.

Cases of Obsession Successfully Treated.

To the Editor:—I want to crave your indulgence to allow me a little space in the good Progressive Thinker, to add just a few thoughts which have been suggested from reading carefully the many articles contributed to the great symposium as criticisms of the marvelous book, "The Great Psychological Crime." There has been much good thought brought out on different branches of the subject, but I say it was left for Nora Batchelor, of Ashland, Oregon, to handle the subject of medium obsession, good and bad influences, etc., and I wish to have every reader of The Progressive Thinker read and re-read with care her article in No. 738, Jan. 16, 1904. This article expresses much logical fact on this subject so much discussed by able minds. I have been associated with Spiritualism and mediumship since Andrew Jackson Davis commenced publishing his Great Harmonia. I have met many cases of what is called obsession, and have relieved all such by instructing them in the law and effect of such relations, by plain reasoning and kindly talk. No swearing, praying, or exorcising them in the old theological way!

It does indeed seem strange to me to see Spiritualists so slow to learn the fact that spirits on the other side of life are just what we have sent over there through the process of transition—just human spirits, human beings still, as we shall be soon; and who would think of exorcising his neighbor whom he might find trespassing in some unkindly manner?

Remember, dear friends, these decarnates we talk about as demons, devils and wicked spirits, are of our own household, and because we cannot see them literally we call them bad names.

Two of the worst cases I ever met of obsession—one was the grandmother decarnate controlling her dearly beloved grand-daughter. When I got into communication with the dear old spirit, she frankly confessed she would not have done so if she had known it would injure her, for "I love her dearly."

The other case was a sister obsessed by a brother, a physician—not a devil or what you would call a wicked spirit. The sister was amiable and kind. He said he had enjoyed himself more since he had been with her than he had ever done in his life. He promised to leave her if it was injuring her, which he did not understand.

In conclusion I wish to add this: I am quite well acquainted with the author of The Great Psychological Crime, and it hurts me to hear unkind words said of him, for I esteem him a noble good man; but I am quite sure he has assumed a knowledge of the destructive nature of mediumship that he is not master of. It is ignorance and only ignorance that makes the practice of mediumship hurtful. When we know enough to guide and surround these mediums, (ministers of light) with justice, love and truth, Mother Nature will have no need to turn her constructive forces into destructive, disintegrative forces to get rid of the theologic ignorance of this cultured age, cultured in the material physical, but not in the spiritual. There is really no limit to this subject, but our knowledge of it is limited.

Mansions In Heaven.

At a recent meeting of our Women's Christian Temperance Union, one of the speakers who was very apt in her illustrative anecdotes, told the following story of an excellent woman who had abundance of this world's goods.

She dreamed that she died and went to heaven. After passing through the Gate of Pearl, she was met by an angel whose duty it was to conduct the ransomed ones who entered the Celestial City to the places prepared for them. She accepted his escort, and they had not gone far before she caught sight of a beautiful mansion in course of erection, and she at once asked for whom it was intended. The name mentioned by the celestial guide in his reply was familiar to her.

"Why, he was my gardener!" she exclaimed in astonishment. "He only had a little cottage to live in when he was on earth. He gave so much away to the poor that he could not afford any better place for himself."

As they proceeded on their way, they passed many residences in the course of construction, and at last they came to a small cottage—so small, and comparatively humble, that she inquired, "And whose is this?"

The reply was, "Oh, that one is for you!"

"For me!" she exclaimed. "For me? Why, on earth I lived in an elegant mansion and I had everything in it as handsome and fine as possible. I shall never be able to live in such a small cottage as that!"

Whereupon the heavenly guide made answer to her: "The Master Workman says that it is the very best he can do for you with the material you have sent up to him to use in building it!"

Of course this was a dream and told as a dream. I have always believed that all we gave to the Lord as unto Him, and from pure motives, was so much treasure laid up in heaven; but the idea that my words and works and gifts might have anything to do with the size and character of my "mansion" up there, had not entered into my head. And the little story has made me more than ever determined to try to do more for Him who has done so much for me, and to endeavor to lay up spiritual treasure in heaven against the day "when I shall see Him face to face."

LAKE HELEN, FLA.

Notes From Southern Cassadaga Camp.

The arrivals since my last letter have been W. R. Rhodes and wife, Corry, Pa.; E. R. Hopkins and wife, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. D. H. Rogers, Collingwood, Ohio; J. W. Brewer, Toronto, Canada; Mrs. W. M. S. Hammond, Pittsburg, Pa.; Miss Sara Willson, Summer Point, W. Va.; Mrs. Correlia Bannister, Gonzales, Texas; Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Grand Rapids, Mich. There was also a number came on Saturday evening.

Monday afternoon conference was not very largely attended, on account of several loads of people taing that time to visit DeLeon Springs, said to be the genuine fountain of eternal youth discovered by Ponce DeLeon many years ago; still we hear of an occasional funeral in that section; but the evening card party was very largely attended, the excursionists ending up a happy day by some of them receiving prizes. Mrs. J. D. Palmer donated the prizes for the evening; they were very pretty Florida Souvenirs. Mrs. Dr. Hilligoss furnished them one evening, and also one who did not want her name mentioned—since Mrs. Stephens set the ball rolling at the beginning of the season, and we still have gifts for prizes on hand for future use.

On Tuesday Prof. Peck gave the last of his series of lectures upon evolution. Subject, Involution or the Divinity in Evolution. Every lecture has been interesting in the extreme and his conclusions were echoed in many souls: "He who cannot see God in the external manifestations of nature, may, if he will seek aright, find him in his own soul. There is not one thing as knowable as God."

The evening dances Tuesdays and Fridays have shown the management the great need of a larger hall, but they bear crowding very patiently, and when tired drink lemonade the ladies have at hand.

Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Minnie Brown, of Philadelphia, again favored the Ladies' Auxiliary with a benefit seance. She is doing good, and we hope is getting stronger, but she looks frail yet.

The evening entertainment under the management of Prof. Peck was one that will be long remembered. We heard more than one say that they had paid a high price in cities for entertainments that would not compare with this both for excellence of its talent or in the laughter-provoking play. Even two enthusiastic dogs wanted to take a part in the play, but they were silenced. Mrs. Eva Carrigue, Mrs. A. Cole, Mrs. Rose Johnson, Mrs. Witters, Miss Rackle and Mr. Wheeler were all stars. So Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Michigan, New York and Ohio were represented. The play was "Popping the Question by Proxy."

Thursday afternoon Prof. Peck took for his subject "Spiritualism and the Drama," and read numerous quotations from Elizabeth Phelps Ward's dramatization of her book, "The Gates Between." It was very affecting as he presented it and would be most beautiful well acted and properly staged.

Conference better attended on Friday. Subject, Spirit Photography. In the evening the writer spoke upon the subject, "Could Ye Not Watch One Hour?" and was followed with spirit descriptions by Mrs. Amanda Coffman.

Saturday evening the friends were all invited to the little "Indian Village" that originated through the directions of the guides of Mr. and Mrs. Baker, of Indiana. They have builded their "tepees," made places for camp-fires, and dedicated it as a place of healing.

Many go and sit during certain hours of the day, feeling there is help in the quiet, peaceful surroundings, as well as in the healing spirit that is said to be there. The audience was large and Indian guides controlled their medium. The writer could not be present, but listened to the singing on the hillside, and tried to get inspiration from it while she was writing messages for thousands to read, North and South, East and West.

Sunday morning, Mrs. Amanda Coffman spoke upon the subject, "What Has Spiritualism Done for Humanity?" Her lecture was enjoyed by the large audience present. I will give one thought: "The preachers used to preach and teach to keep people out of hell, but Spiritualism teaches us how to keep hell out of the people."

Prof. Peck spoke in the afternoon upon the subject, "The Harmony Between Spiritualism and Science." The audience was very large and seemed to be in touch with the speaker. After the lecture Mrs. Coffman was blindfolded by a skeptic in the audience and gave numerous answers to questions placed upon the table. It is a new phase for this section and we trust that many will receive that which their own souls need. Mrs. Coffman will remain until the close of camp, and Mr. Colville will return to us from Jacksonville this week, but we regret very much that Prof. Peck is obliged to leave us on Thursday, owing to an urgent call from home.

The Ladies' Auxiliary still continues its work, and we have been blessed with good workers. Mrs. M. E. Clark, secretary of the Willing Workers at Lily Dale, has been ready in all ways to assist. She is truly an efficient and Willing Worker, and there are others we hope to mention later.

Not only did the Boston firm present us with a sewing machine, but Mrs. Eva Carrigue, of Pawtucket, R. I., has presented us with a beautiful Singer machine with all attachments. She has used it also to good purpose for our work.

The weather is ideal, just right, about 80 degrees at noon, but cool and beautiful now.

Important Work.

Under the auspices of the international Physio-Psychic Society of 1204 Broadway, New York and at Berlin, there will shortly be issued a most interesting and important work by Mr. Emil Sutro, author of "Basic Law of Vocal Utterance" and "Duality of Voice," entitled "Duality of Thought and Language."

In this book, the author, having again, for five years, given his entire time and attention to further research, repudiates the materialistic tendency of the age, and shows, by undeniable proof, derived from a study of the essence of language, that man is of dual nature, from his first incipience in the cell, and that the spiritual in this duality prevails over the material.

It will further say that divinity, as we endeavor to view it, and as man has ever endeavored to view it, is a conception emanating from ourselves; that the God of any period or nation, is the outcome of the more or less advanced civilization of that period and nation; that man is subject to immutable laws of whose origin it is impossible for him to form any true conception.

For the first time in the world's history, metaphysics have been practically applied. True underlying principles have come to light and are furnishing safe guides to knowledge. Thus the road to rational teaching has been opened.

SPIRITUALISTS' CONVENTION

Organized the Indiana Association of Spiritualists—The Officers Elected—Fraudulent Mediums to Be Driven Out of Business as Rapidly as Possible.

The first delegate convention of Spiritualists held in Indiana closed its labors last night after a three days' session, at the Madison avenue temple, with a program consisting of short addresses, music and spirit messages, at the close of which President Barrett of the N. S. A., announced that the Indiana State Association of Spiritualists was a legal body and ready to enter upon its duties.

The election of officers occurred Saturday evening. Following is a list of the names of officers elected:

President—E. A. Schram, Peru.

Firse vice-president—Elizabeth Williamson, Richmond.

Second vice-president—Charles A. Gaines, Anderson.

Secretary—Carrie Mong, Muncie.

Treasurer — Louisa Schwenessen, Muncie.

Trustees—J. G. Foster, Elwood; Marguerite Miller, Rochester; J. H. York, Peru; W. S. Wood, Kokomo.

In addition to the official board elected, the president appointed six superintendents whose duties are to look after missionary work in their respective districts and to report to the president the presence of any person or persons known to them to be unworthy of confidence who may do or attempt to do business as physical or mental mediums. The president will then forward a copy of such information to all the superintendents, who will in turn report the same to the secretaries of the societies under their charge. In short, the association is going after the fraudulent mediums in a systematic manner, and it is proposed to drive them out of business at the earliest possible time.

Convention Notes.

John B. Chrisney, of Chrisney, and J. F. Havens represented the southern part of the state in an acceptable manner, contributing $25 each for the benefit of the new association, when it was announced that such contributions were needed. A half-dozen others contributed like amounts. The contributions all told were about $300.

All agreed that the frauds must go. They might as well get their baggage on a raft, for there will be something doing.

There were many good five-minute speeches by the delegates at the Sunday morning conference. Dr. Bitters' talk was especially good.

President Barrett announced that there were now 21 state organizations chartered under the National Association.

E. W. Sprague and wife, the missionaries who worked up the convention, will go to Oxford, Ind., to-morrow, where they will organize a society.

President Barrett went to Toledo last night.

Mr. Schram, the president of the new state association, is a business man of Peru, being president of the retail grocers' association of that city.

Many of the delegates are members of the Chesterfield camp-meeting association.

The vocal solos of Mrs. Flora Russell, of Alliance, Ohio, were excellent, and much enjoyed.

One of the features of the exercises last night was the excellent music by the E. Z. Mandolin Club of this city.

The board of trustees will select the place for the next annual convention.—Anderson (Ind.) Daily News.

The Two Births.

There has been a vast deal of pettifogging among professors of religion about the second birth, as it is commonly called. Those who have undertaken to explain it have not been able to very clearly understand what they have taught; and certainly those who they have tried to instruct, have been unable to understand the second birth from a religious standpoint. It has been a fair illustration of the old saying of confusion being worse confounded. The facts are that when a human being attempts to explain the ways of God he has undertaken a job that he cannot do, whether he is a priest or layman. Both the priest and the layman see through a glass very darkly, if indeed they can see at all. There are as yet no X-rays by which religious truths and errors can be seen, and most likely never will be. The best humanity can do in its incarnate state, is to approximate the truth.

It was Nicodemus who challenged Jesus for asserting that "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." He couldn't see how an old man could grow young enough to go through the experience of birth the second time; and Jesus did not enlighten him to any alarming extent on the subject, but made the matter still more obscure, if possible, by observing that "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." He however proceeded to explain the subject by asserting "That which is born of flesh is flesh; and that which is born of spirit is spirit." "That that is, is" as Shakspeare would have expressed it.

This last statement of Jesus, if taken to mean just what it says, probably explains the situation about as it is. It means that man has a dual nature. That the "flesh" or his physical nature is born into this world and lives until dissolution comes, when it is resolved into the elements of which it is composed. Physically man is but a small aggregation of matter, and in a physical sense birth is the commencement of the growth of this aggregation. The spiritual part of man's nature, which consists of the soul incarnated, is the result of the second birth referred to. It has a life above mere physical being. Jesus says that which is born of the spirit is spirit. This being so, it is persistent and immortal, and is born for all eternity. Spiritual birth is the commencement of an endless career for the individual soul. If this be the second birth, then the words of Jesus are full of meaning, and they proclaim a truth of the utmost importance to the children of men. But if that birth means conversion to the dogmas of some church, it would have been much better for man if he had never been born.

From the Spirit Realms.

Spirit Carlyle Petersilea.

While on Earth Mr. Petersilea was a medium for the transmission of important letters from those long in spirit life. Now, having become a freed spirit himself, he will convey his best thoughts through the mediumship of his devoted wife, and we are sure they will prove interesting to our readers.

LETTER NUMBER FIVE.

My poor wife was still sitting, as we had left her, completely exhausted by her grief; and a kind friend advised her to retire.

"Come and sleep at my house," she said; but my father said, "We must oppose this. Your wife will recognize our presence much better at home and in her own bed." So my wife retired in her own bed as usual.

She always kept a chair near the head of the bed, on her side, and I had been accustomed to sit down in this chair every night, before retiring, and treat her right shoulder, which was lame and rheumatic.

"Now," said my father, "do just as you have been accustomed to do: go and sit in the chair, and treat her shoulder;" and I did as he told me to do, and as I myself was inclined to do. I began to speak loving and cheering words to my wife, and to treat her shoulder as usual. Now her soul heard me, and her spirit felt my touch; but her material ears did not hear me, and her material flesh and brain could not sense my touch; so she cried out in her grief, "Oh, Carlyle! I cannot feel your hand;" and yet she seemed to realize the fact that I was there, and that I was treating her shoulder as usual.

"Can't you feel my hand?" I asked; and she replied, "No; oh, no."

Now I was somewhat chagrined and disappointed. Earthly habits reasserted themselves, and I exclaimed: "Oh! damn such a hand! I don't like it!" Now my wife heard this with her spiritual ears, and it was so explosive and emphatic—and so like myself and no other—that my wife laughed outright; and my father laughed heartily.

"There," said he, "it may be vulgar to swear, but it has caused your wife the first respite from her terrible grief. Really, nothing else would have done half as well."

I was actually frightened, for I thought I had done something dreadful as a spirit freed from the body.

"O, never mind," said my father. "It is really no worse for a spirit to swear that is out of the body than for one to swear that is in the body. If a man has been in the habit of swearing all his life, he doesn't stop stop it at once after leaving his material body."

"But, father," I said, "I have not been a very profane man. A word of that kind would occasionally drop from my lips, to be sure, when I was very much in earnest or excited, but I tried to live above profanity."

"Very well," he replied. "It certainly has answered a good purpose this time—it has checked intense grief and caused a laugh as nothing else could have done. Now, make gentle, soothing passes over your wife's head, just as your mother did over yours, and she will fall asleep. She must sleep or she will be crazed."

How gladly I did as he told me. My darling's eyes closed—she felt the soothing, spiritual magnetism, and she slept.

"There," said my father. "Your body lies in that other room, just as it did. We need not go in there."

"No," I answered. "I never want to look at it again, and it is perfectly useless for us to stay here, now that she is sleeping. Let us return. We will come back again in the morning."

"See how foolish your promise, that you would never, never leave her."

"Yes, I have been very, very foolish in many things," I replied. "But you will help me to do now as I ought to do."

"No soul, either in or out of the body, ever prays for help in vain," he answered. "I will help you, and so will thousands of other spirits and angels. Come, let us now go, for I have much to show you."

"Are we going back to the arbor again?" I asked.

"Not unless you wish to," he answered. "We will now go just where you desire to go, for we have many hours before us until your wife awakes."

"Father," I said, "I want to go and see with my own eyes, if animals exist after the death of the material form. I have not seen one yet; and still, it has been written many times, that animals exist after the death of the body. You know that those writings met with much opposition on that account. I have already seen a building, an arbor, flowers, vines, grass and trees; now, I want to know about animals."

We were floating out once more from the room where my wife was lying, sobbing in her sleep—the sleep of awful trouble and exhaustion—the room wherein I had passed out of my body. Again I seemed to float out into those green fields, this time with my father by my side, my brain much stronger, my sight clearer, and I was now able to move voluntarily of my own accord, and keep an upright position. We floated on out over a wide expanse, and the sight that met my eyes I can never forget. Here were vast plains covered with vegetation. It must not be forgotten that we were, or had been, in Southern California; but my father said that we had risen far above the Sierra Madras and were now looking out over the state of Arizona.

"We will pause here," said he, "and I want you to note well what you see, for it is decreed that you shall write your experience out through the hand of your wife, as soon as she is able to respond to our wishes; and you may be sure I looked with all my soul.

Now it was night in California and Arizona; but in the spiritual spheres above them, it was as light and beautiful as the most beautiful of California days. The first that I observed were Indians and Mexicans, I could easily tell them apart by the manner in which they were dressed. The Mexicans were tan colored trousers, white tunics, bound about the waists by bright colored scarfs; their hair was black, straight and long; and on their heads they wore what looked like long knitted caps, the extreme point hanging over and down at the back, ending by the attachment of a bright tassel.

The Indians were garbed in waist cloth, wide belts, and all sorts of hanging things, looking like the tails of animals; and their heads dressed high up with eagles' feathers—at least they looked like eagles' feathers. Many of the Mexicans and Indians were riding at full speed on the backs of ponies; and there were cattle scattered around in all directions, and in the distance I could see herds of buffalo, and as I looked more closely I perceived among the hills, deer and other animals.

"You are looking now, into the first sphere above the earth," said my father, "that is, a very small part of it, a small portion above California and Arizona, and a part of Texas and Mexico. What you now see, are the spirits of many of the animals and natives of those states. My son, you shall no longer believe, you shall know, and you shall not cause your wife to write anything that you do not see and know. Now, we have not time at present to look into all the details of what you perceive as a whole before you. This we can do at some future time. This, in one sense, is the happy hunting ground of the Indians; and the Mexicans, not finding the words of their priests true, are joining the Indians in their natural spiritual life, with great zest and enjoyment. It will be many years before they will rise into grander and brighter spheres. The Indian, with his natural intuitive sense, has always been nearer right in regard to the spirit world, than priest-ridden, civilized nations. He always believed, and taught others to believe that his dog and his pony would go to the happy hunting grounds as well as himself; and you can now see with your own eyes, that he was right."

I drew a long sigh of satisfaction. Then I had been right, and it was so.

"Life is involuted," said my father, "and all entities that go to make up the great ocean of life are immortal as individual entities, and they remain individualized forever. A natural law cannot break. If man, as an individual entity, is immortal, so are all other entities."

My father now turned to me, saying: "Your wife was so completely worn out, that she retired about seven o'clock; it is now nearing eight. We are quite near El Paso, Texas. There is a lady living there, whom I think you would like to visit."

"Who can it be?" I asked, forgetting for the moment that I knew anyone in El Paso.

"Mrs. Hadlock," he answered.

Ah! yes, yes. Mrs. Hadlock. I should like to see Mrs. Hadlock. Did you know about the pictures?" I asked.

"Yes," he replied. "I have been fully aware of all that has transpired which has interested you."

"Then Mrs. Hadlock and my wife really did see spirit pictures, as projected on plain writing paper?"

"They really did," he answered; "and they will yet see many more."

We had been moving on all this time.

"Now, let us go down," he said. "We are just over the place where she resides."

So we descended and entered a room where we found Mrs. Hadlock together with another lady.

"They are both mediums or sensitives," said my father. "The other lady is very easily controlled. Would you like to present yourself before her, and speak to her?"

"Yes, I should like to, very much," I replied; but I promised my wife that I would never, if I were to die first, control any other medium but herself."

"A bad promise is better broken than kept," he again said. "Mrs. Hadlock will soon visit Los Angeles and Long Beach, and you will be able to send a great test to your heart-broken wife."

This thought gave me joy, and I placed myself directly before the medium. Said the medium to Mrs. Hadlock: "I see the spirit of a portly-looking gentleman—he is bald on the top of his head, and has prominent, expressive blue eyes. I think he would like to say something to you."

My father now instructed me how to control the medium, and I said through her: "I am Carlyle Petersilea. I am dead—as they call it—that is, I am out of my material form. I passed out last night, or rather, very early this morning, and my poor wife is distracted with grief."

"O, that cannot be," said Mrs. Hadlock. "I heard from Mrs. Petersilea not long since, and he was nearly well. It may be his astral, or double, however; for a living person's spirit is often seen, you know."

"Not so! not so!" I said. "It is not my double, but myself—Carlyle Petersilea. I am out of my body. Go, Mrs. Hadlock, and comfort my heart-broken wife. Tell her that I came to you in El Paso, and it will be a great test to her; for, as yet, none except her immediate neighbors know that I have passed out."

But Mrs. Hadlock would not yet believe that it was my own self, but still continued to think it must be my astral form, or double. But time has proved that I was there, and did control and talk through the medium. In a few days they received the Banner of Light, and it contained the notice of my departure from the earthly body. Shortly afterward Mrs. Hadlock visited Los Angeles and Long Beach. When at Long Beach, she called on my wife, and told her all that I have herein written, about my showing myself and controlling the medium, and what I said. This has proved to be a great comfort to my wife, as well as a great test; and thus you all see that a bad promise is better broken than kept.

"Carlyle," said my father, "it is wholly unnecessary for you to return to your wife before the day on earth dawns, and we have many hours in which you can learn and see a great deal. Will you come with me and visit a number of your nearest and dearest relatives and friends?"

I thought this would suit me, just now, better than anything else, and so I assented. Now it will not interest the general reader to enter into the details of the meeting with my near relatives and friends; but I found many of them bright and beautiful beyond description, and some others not so bright nor so happy. Some still cherished their old prejudices and beliefs, which they would not give up. Others were still dwelling on the past, and mourning over what they had been, because they could not still be the same.

But I must tell you of one lady whom I met here—a lady that I had known well in the earth life. She had never been married and had been what the world called a sallow, wrinkled old maid. She had made her home with some of her relatives on earth, and as many of these same relatives were now in the spirit life, she still clung to them, and was still living with them. As my father had also been well acquainted with her in earth life, he asked me if I would not like to go and see her as well as the others? We entered the abode where this lady resided, and after greetings had been exchanged, we asked for Miss ——, and we were shown a door which led into her apartment. We opened the door and paused a short time to observe the lady. She was sitting at the far end of the room, with her back toward us, in a drooping, dejected attitude, looking almost precisely as she had looked previous to her departure from the earth life. My father spoke her name, and she turned her face toward us. On seeing me she arose, much agitated.

"Carlyle! oh, Carlyle!" she ejaculated. "Can it be possible that you, too, are dead, or have left the earth, rather?" and she rushed toward me, extending both hands. I took her hands in mine. How cold and lifeless they were in my grasp. Her form was thin and drooping, her face wan and dejected.

"Are you glad to see me?" I asked. "Are you not glad that I have come to this spiritual life?"

"I am very glad to see you," she answered; but cannot say that I am glad that you have come to this land of life in death."

I was grieved and disappointed at her words.

"Life in death?" I said. "I do not comprehend your meaning."

"On earth," she replied," "I felt that I was somebody; but I am nobody here. O, how I wish I could go back and live in the earthly body once more."

My father glanced at me, and I read his thought—but it seemed that she was not able to do this—his thought said:

"Carlyle, you must begin your work here now, although but a short time has intervened since your departure from the earthly body. Miss —— is one of those who live in the past, and thus far her friends have not been able to turn her perverted mind into the present and toward the future; and you will find many spirits here like her. I think you can help her.

"Why, Miss ——," said I; "to live in the earthly body again would be going backward, not forward. I already feel rather glad to be rid of mine. Certainly it has been a great clog to me."

"O, how can you say that?" she exclaimed. Think how lovely it was, when we were all together in your school, and you were teaching and playing so grandly.

"It might have seemed lovely to you," I said, "but it certainly was not lovely to me. It was there and then that the foundation was laid for my comparatively early departure from earth to this life. I am not sorry to be here, however, but I am sorry to have been obliged to leave my wife alone—as she often thinks—and desolate. Nevertheless, I mean to be happy and make her happy as soon as possible."

"She ought to be glad that she is not here," said Miss ——. I wish that I could exchange places with her, and go back."

"Do you wish to live your earthly life over again?" I asked. "I am sure you were never happy on earth so far back as I can remember you."

"I was much happier there than here," she replied. "It is dreadful to look forward to an eternity of dreariness."

"But why should eternity be dreary?" I asked. "I have great hopes for the future of my eternity."

"Hopes?" she said. "I have nothing to hope for."

"Why, is progress denied you?" I asked.

"The idea of progression gives me no pleasure," she answered. "To what, and to whom, and to where, am I to progress?"

I looked at her gaunt and shrunken form with a feeling akin to hopelessness.

"Go on," said my father's thought, with a meaning look.

"But is there nothing in this life that you desire?" I asked. "Is there no good and beautiful work to be accomplished? Is there nothing for you to do?"

"O, I don't know," she answered. "There doesn't seem to be anything that I care to do."

"You used to teach," I said. "Have you lost all interest in that occupation?"

"I never liked teaching," she said, "but I was obliged to earn money, and money is of no account here; and it is very wearisome to teach stupid pupils."

"Well, why not sing, as you used to do, then? Surely, there ought to be progress and happiness in that?"

"There are thousands here who can sing so much better than I can, that I have no courage to try. But what do you intend to do, Carlyle?"

"Whatever my mind and hands find to do," I replied; "and I mean to find happiness in the doing."

"You don't intend to go on with teaching, do you?" she asked. "O, it is so tiresome to teach."

"Yes, I will have a class of pupils just as soon as I can find them here. I will teach my former earthly pupils by impression, and I will do both, if I can."

My father looked at me meaningly, and uttered, "Yes! yes!" very emphatically.

"I don't know what object you can have in doing so," she said. "You will receive nothing for your trouble, I am sure."

"I shall receive very much for my trouble," I replied. "It is happiness that all desire, and it will make me very happy to watch the progress my pupils make in the art of singing and playing."

She sighed wearily. "I feel no interest in it, whatever. I wish I could die and be at rest."

"Are there no grand concerts given here?" I asked. "You used to enjoy going to concerts."

"Yes," she replied, "when those to whom I was related were to take part in them, and some of their glory redounded to me. Perhaps, now that you are come, I shall pluck up a little spirit."

My father gave me another meaning look. "You will save her yet," said his thought."

"But how can my glory redound to you?" I asked. "The glory should be in what you do, not in what I do."

"The moon shines by reflected light," said my father, sententiously.

"Do you wish to shine by reflected light?" I asked. "Would it not be better to shine by your own light, even if it were exceedingly small? No matter how small your gifts may be, if you cultivate them, they will grow brighter and brighter as the ages go by, until, at length, you may become a bright and shining light yourself. But you can never make much progress by reflected light from another. Still, I will do all in my power to urge you on toward trimming your own lamp, and letting your own genius shine forth. But I must go now and try to help one that is dearer to me than my own life. I am not afraid that she will hide her own light, but it will be obscured by grief for some time to come. Grief is a monster, and she will have a fierce battle with it. I must go to her help. She has been all the world to me, and I cannot be happy until she, with my help, is able to overcome this monstrous error."

"We are about to return to earth," said my father. "Will you not come with us, Miss ——? You can help us to help this grief-stricken one. You, as a spirit, ought to be able to give aid to one who is blinded by the material body; and, Carlyle, at present needs help to help his wife; and you will have the happiness of aiding him in so doing. As you help others toward hope and happiness, hope and happiness will spring up in your own soul and burst into brightness."

Miss —— looked somewhat interested, and her countenance became more pleasing.

"I am sure I am willing to help, if I can," she said; and so we three together started back on our mission of love and hope to one of earth's children—the one of all others on the earth that was dearest to me—the one that I would have laid down my life for, at any time, to make happy; but, in the laying of it down, great misery and not happiness to her, had been the result. But I had not laid down my life. My life and I had arisen together. Let me return now to comfort and tell her this. I know that her poor, blinded eyes cannot see me; but she shall feel me and know that I am with her still.

We returned; and I, together with my father, tried to establish a code of signals by which my wife might always know that I was present with her; but the signalling was imperfect, and she still doubted; yet, in many ways I manifested myself to her.

My father said: "There is but one way, now, that we can do much good. We can control her to write, better than any other way. Remain with her, and help her as much as possible, until all is over about the funeral. Brave as she is or may be, it is a terrible ordeal for her to go through. Remain with her as much as possible until time has somewhat modified her grief; and then we together will control her to write."

And now this is all I shall say concerning my private affairs and home affections. Hereafter, whatever I may write, I hope will benefit mankind in general, and I shall try to write nothing but the truth.

My life on earth was that of a public performer and teacher; and I can be nothing less here in this life. I hope to be more hereafter. I shall confine myself to the burning questions of the day and age in which the world now is; and as I have passed into the invisible or spiritual realm, I can now write from my own personal knowledge and experience. A Chicago Lady In Australia.

The Melbourne (Australia) Age of January 11, makes mention of the opening address in that city by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, of Chicago, as follows:

A service was held at the Bijou Theater last night under the auspices of the Victorian Association of Spiritualists, when Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, a lecturer who has just arrived from America, gave an address upon "Spiritualism, Science and Reason." There was a very large attendance, the accommodation of the hall being taxed to its utmost capacity. Mrs. Fixen, who is a tall, strong, well-developed woman past middle age, was accorded a hearty reception when she stepped upon the platform. She has the gift of the tongue, and spoke for over an hour in a quiet, melodious voice, making herself well heard throughout the building.

A slight American accent was perceptible, and passages of dry humor now and then revealed the fact that she hailed from the States. What she termed "her own" city is Chicago, where she is associate pastor of the Progressive Spiritual Church, vice-president of the State Spiritualist Association, president of the Marie C. Brehm W. C. T. U., and business manager of the Worlding Women's Home Association.

In welcoming persons of all creeds Mrs. Fixen narrated her personal experience in connection with religion. Born of Danish parents, she had been a Lutheran. Then Presbyterian church was the first she ever attended when she went to the United States. For some years she taught at the Baptist Sunday-school. The Congregational church was the first one she joined in America, and for twenty years she was a member of the Methodist church there. This candid statement created hearty laughter, followed by applause. When it had subsided, there came the confession, "Now I am a Spiritualist."

This portion of the lecture was listened to with great interest. Her request to the audience was, "Come, let us reason together." She asked them to have hope. The definition which she gave of "hope" was characteristic of many light passages in the address, and showed unmistakably that the speaker possessed the heart of a woman. "Hope is to the soul," she said, "what the baby is to the home. I hope a good many of you are blessed with babies in the home. It is God and man, heaven and earth, sunshine and happiness, all done up in one little bit of a bundle. It is inspiration of the father and the joy of the mother all done up in one little parcel." (Applause.)

The moral which was drawn was that, in the soul of every man and woman there was hope of the future. This was specially so with the Spiritualist, who extended the hope of a future life to everyone. She loved Spiritualism because of its breadth of vision—and when they looked at her they would recognize that she required a broad platform. (Laughter.) The body might be laid in the grave and resolve itself into its natural elements, but all lived again in the perfume of the rose or the song of the birds, and they believed that the spirits of their friends were all around them. They were, however, merely inquirers after the truth. Day by day their vision was being extended, and in the abundance of time the truth would, they believed, be made fully manifest to them. An explanation was given that the lecture was merely preliminary, and that in a subsequent one Mrs. Fixen would state the causes which led her to become a Spiritualist.

Psychic Light.

BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

A VERY IMPORTANT CALL IS MADE.

A GENEROUS OFFER, AND A CALL TO SPIRITUALISTS.

To the Spiritualists at Large:—A generous offer has been made by a prominent Spiritualist in this city to give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., for the benefit of aged and needy mediums, provided the Spiritualists at large will contribute another Thousand Dollars to the same relief fund by the first of June next. The N. S. A. is now paying out a large monthly sum in pensions to worthy mediums; the calls for aid increase and the fund is constantly being depleted. Let every generous soul who has not already done all possible for this worthy object, kindly send contributions, large or small, to the following address, each will be acknowledged with thanks. The generous man who makes the offer desires to be unnamed to the public.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Harrison D. Barrett Doing Missionary Work.

From Jan. 10, 1904 to Feb. 12, I tried to do missionary work in the state of Maine. Funerals, lectures, parlor talks were all attended to according to my ability, and such inspiration as can be extracted from an unusually severe New England winter. Wherever I went the good people of my native state gave me a hearty welcome, and with the exception of three meetings, the audiences that greeted me were large, attentive and sympathetic. The intensely cold weather, long stage rides and drives, chills and fever, neuralgia and throat trouble proved too much for me, and I was compelled to desist for a time ere I turned my face westward. Nature's storms and man's cunning when united make a most formidable enemy for even a Yankee. My experience was no exception to the rule.

On Feb. 19, I started westward, making my first stop in Albany, N. Y., where I was most hospitably entertained in the spiritual home of Hon. E. A. Doty and family. Their home was charged with spirituality in its every part, and a sojourn there for three days was most soothing to a tired brain and pain-racked nerves. Wit, humor, pathos, sentiment of all kinds we indulged in and were mentally and spiritually refreshed thereby. Such spiritual uplifts cheer every pilgrim evangel, and give him strength with which to meet the storms and vicissitudes of every-day life. Would that there were thousands of such spiritual homes as Brother Doty's in all sections of our land today! This nation of ours would be much nearer being a civilized aggregation of mortals than it is to-day.

After a single address in Albany, given in the vestry of the Unitarian church, I journeyed on to Syracuse. Here I was greeted by that stout-hearted worker for the "good cause," Brother E. G. Reilley, and given a warm welcome to Syracuse. The lecture of Tuesday evening was well attended, and when it was found that I was not expected in Little Valley, arrangements were at once made for a second address on Wednesday evening. Despite the storm a goodly number of the devoted friends of truth braved the elements to listen to what might be said in behalf of Spiritualism. Here I received one of the greatest compliments ever paid me in my life. The Spiritualists of Syracuse, alive to everything that benefit the cause as a whole, and society in particular, are moving the direction of engaging a settled speaker. They honored me with a call to a two months' engagement looking to this very end, my labors to begin March 1, 1904.

I then saw nothing in my way to interfere with this arrangement, and accepted their most generous offer with a thankful heart. But there has been a slight hitch in carrying out this plan, owing to the fact that my mail had been delayed in reaching me. Missionary work for the N. S. A. and the Ohio State Spiritualist Association had been planned for me for the month of March in the state of Ohio, and dates assigned accordingly. This arrangement, antedating that of Syracuse, of course takes precedence, hence I shall work in the great "Buckeye State" during the present month, and open my Syracuse engagement April 1, provided there is no change of sentiment on the part of the interested parties.

Leaving Syracuse in the midst of a driving snowstorm, with the mercury hovering around the zero point, I made my way to Anderson, Ind., to take in the State Convention to be held there, Feb. 26, 27 and 28, under the leadership of that veritable Boanerges in Spiritualistic work, Rev. E. W. Sprague. With what delight the passengers found their train over four hours late into Anderson, the readers of The Progressive Thinker may well imagine. But Anderson was reached at last, and a few hours' rest accorded the storm-blessed (?) passengers whose destination was that busy Indiana city.

I need not dwell upon the convention or its work. A full report of its proceedings will soon appear in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, from which even the casual reader can see that the convention was a signal success. It was one of the most representative gatherings I ever attended, and every delegate was anxious to do his part to make organization a settled fact in Indiana. All of the representatives did their best, and that best has given us a well-equipped, finely-organized state association, with a splendid corps of officers at its head. The president, E. A. Schram, of Peru, is an energetic business man of wide experience in secular pursuits, and brings business methods as well as spirituality to his new duties. He has excellent help in all of the members of the board of trustees. The state Association of Spiritualists of Indiana starts out under promising skies, and "Success" is already emblazoned upon its banner.

Rev. E. W. Sprague was at his best in the discharge of his many duties, and has lost none of his old-time ability as a money-raiser. Mrs. Sprague was most happy in her work, and her genial presence added much to the convention's pleasure.

Dr. Julia M. Walton's psychic work pleased recipients of her spiritual bounties while her lectures delighted all who heard them.

Rev. Thomas W. Smith, one of Anderson's resident speakers, and Dr. Gardner Haines, the president of the Anderson society, each gave addresses of great merit.

The Temple choir, led by J. A. Wertz, discoursed excellent vocal music, and the two soloists, Miss Hazel Wertz and Mrs. Flora Russell, drew forth many encomiums of praise for their splendid work.

Little Miss Mosher gave two violin solos of great beauty, and rendered them with the skill of a master. The E. Z. mandolin orchestra rendered two selections that evoked salvos of applause.

From Anderson I journeyed to Toledo, to begin the work laid out for me in Ohio. Sandusky, Toledo, Elyria, Cleveland, Ashtabula will all be visited, and week evening addresses will be given in smaller cities and towns desiring the same. Dates are filling up rapidly, and societies desiring week evening lectures between March 13 and 20, should apply at once. I have no objection to speaking every day in the week, and twice on Sundays, provided dates can be made accordingly.

The Ohio State Spiritualist Association is doing splendid work this season, its board of trustees being a unit in their desire to advance the best interests of Spiritualism in all sections of the state. The President, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, is tireless in her efforts to serve the cause she loves. This is true also of every member of the board of trustees. With such a devoted band of workers at its head, the state association cannot fail to render the cause efficient aid.

For the present my address will be 123 Indiana avenue, Toledo, Ohio.

Some Modern Miracles.

LITTLE CRIPPLE SKIPS AND PLAYS.

Mother Believes in Miraculous Cure by Water from Lourdes Grotto—Three Years' Affliction Ended After Devotions.

A cripple for three years, his left leg absolutely useless, Willie Murphy, the ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Murphy, of No. 232 Hull street, Brooklyn, has in a day cast away crutches and iron braces, stands erect and romps and plays like other children. The cure is discredited to a miracle performed a week ago at the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Aberdeen street, near Broadway, Brooklyn.

The anniversary of Our Lady of Lourdes was celebrated last Thursday week. In the church are hundreds of crutches and canes that have been thrown away by those who have been healed. Ever since Willie became a cripple through tuberculosis of the bone his mother has taken him daily to the church to pray for his recovery. In addition to this the family his spent several thousand dollars consulting the best specialists and surgeons in the city in an effort to cure the lad.

"We had almost given up hope that Willie would ever be well," said Mrs. Murphy to a World reporter yesterday, "but I had faith in the Lord and continued to pray day and night, that my boy might have the use of his leg restored.

"On Lourdes day I took Willie to the church, where he bathed in the water from Lourdes in the grotto, in the rear. 'Mamma, I believe that I am going to be healed,' the boy said to me. He was so impatient to get to the church. This gave me renewed hope and faith and I prayed the harder as Willie bathed.

"There were many other little crippled children there, and I felt so sorry for them. All took a little bottle of water home with them. When Willie and myself got home I rubbed his leg with some of the water and we kneeled and prayed together. That was on Thursday night.

"On Friday morning I called Willie to me, took off his raised shoe and iron brace and rubbed some of the Lourdes water over his leg. 'Why, mamma, how good my leg feels,' Willie said to me. 'I believe I can stand on it.

WONDER OF WONDERS.

"Then, wonder of wonders. Willie threw down his cane, stood erect and walked across the floor. For a moment I could not believe my own eyes. Then I realized that a miracle had been performed. I ran through the house shouting, 'Willie's cured, Willie's cured! Thank God, my boy is no longer a cripple.'"

Mrs. Murphy was so overjoyed that she sent the good news to her husband, a prosperous machinist; to all her relatives and friends in the neighborhood. In a short while, the Murphy home was crowded with rejoicing relatives and friends. All wondered at the great miracle. Willie was hugged, kissed, petted and showered with presents. He ran around the house, kicked up his heels and was just as jolly as his younger brother.

Up to the time of the cure, Willie wore a raised shoe, while his leg was supported on each side by iron braces. The knee was so tender that he could not bear any one to touch it. For the last three years he has slept in bed alone. He was only able to attend school three or four days during an entire month. When the remarkable cure was announced in the classroom, thanksgiving prayers were offered by all the pupils. The boy expects to begin attending school regularly on Monday.

Willie's lameness came almost as suddenly as his cure. When he was seven years old he was playing in the street one day, when his mother noticed that he began to limp. She thought nothing of it until the next morning, when Willie could not put his foot to the floor. There is only a slight limp in the boy's walk now, which will disappear, his mother hopes, as soon as the leg becomes a little hardened and stronger.

Father Poreille, pastor of the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, was asked by a World reporter about the miracles performed in his church. He dictated this statement:

"Although I often hear of cures that have been obtained through the prayers of the people and the use of the water of Lourdes, yet I consider that it is not my place to pronounce these cures miraculous. The church is very conservative on such matters, and recognizes no miracles unless a minute investigation has been made by the church authorities. It seems too much like advertising, and the church will not allow any pastor to advertise his own parish."

"What is to be understood by a minute investigation?" Father Poreille was asked.

"Before we pronounce a miracle, the authorities seek the physician who attended the person cured and obtain from him a statement that the cured person could not possibly have been cured through medical aid," he answered.

The above from the New York World illustrates the important fact that spirits did the healing—Catholic spirits interested in promoting the cause of truth, as they understand it. When will people learn that spirit manifestations are common to all sects, and that no one has a monopoly of the same?

WOMAN MYSTIFIES SCIENTISTS.

Performs Astonishing Things While in Somnambulistic State—Psychologists of Bavaria Interested in Strange Phenomenon.

Doctors, scientists and psychologists throughout Germany have been greatly perplexed in the last few days by the mysterious performances in Munich of a French woman who goes by the name of "Mme. Madeleine G. ——," her surname having been kept a profound secret. She has been appearing here before small private gatherings and doing the most astonishing things while in a somnambulistic trance.

MYSTIFIES ALL PARIS.

The mysterious "Mme. Madeleine G. ——" is supposed to be the same woman who was mystifying artists and literati a few weeks ago in Paris, with her weird performances under a hypnotic influence. There she was hailed as a Trilby in real life. Not that she sang entrancing songs while under the hypnotic spell of a Svengali, but that she followed with her body in strange rhythm the strains of music and in perfect harmony with its spirit and mood. Several rehearsals were given in private and scientists had to admit that the woman undoubtedly was swayed by the mysterious influence and that it was not possible for her to simulate all the emotions she passed through in the hypnotic spell. After the rehearsals in Paris nothing was heard of the woman and it is believed that she is the one who is now puzzling the scientists of Germany. She is a woman of much grace, but on no account can she be regarded as attractive in person. Under the hypnotic influence, however, she appears to undergo a complete physical transformation. She becomes strangely composed and moves with a grace that seems almost supernatural. At these private rehearsals the woman is introduced by Dr. Von Schreneck. Then Dr. Magnin of Paris places her under the hypnotic spell with a few passes in front of her eyes and a little hard staring. Within a few minutes she appears to fall into a soft sleep in an easy chair.

MUCH AFFECTED BY MUSIC.

Then someone begins to play on a piano in the room and the subject forthwith shows that she has some somnambulistic knowledge of the music. She rises from the chair slowly, her eyes wide and staring, and follows every note with the most graceful and rhythmic motions of her hands and arms.

While she was deep in a waltz performance the pianist suddenly began to play a funeral march. Mme. Madeleine stopped and stalked across the little stage sadly and solemnly, her face downcast and pale as death.

Then a chapter was read from a romance. In it was an interview between a woman character and the man she loved. Mme. Madeleine followed in pantomime every motion brought out in the reading with the most remarkable accuracy. In her face was clearly depicted all the feelings aroused in the heart of the woman in the romance.

HAD A PROPHETIC VISION.

Russian Writer Foretold Disasters that Recently Befel His Country's Navy.

Once of the most remarkable instances of political prophecy that have come to light in recent years is reported by Dr. E. J. Dillon. A Russian named Levitoff published recently at Port Arthur a pamphlet urging that the Russians do everything possible to gain time and that they withdraw the fleet as an incumbrance, and depend upon their numerical superiority on land. With great clearness he pointed out the perils of meeting Japan on the sea.

"The Yellow Bosporus" (the Straits of Corea) "is a trap into which the Japs, at England's instigation, are trying to entice us. So long as we steer clear of a sea fight," he continues, "the command of the sea and the Anglo-Japanese alliance are not worth a sucked egg. If we resolve to keep out of an engagement on water and if we are further prepared to do without our fleet, not only by refusing to increase it but by getting ride of it wholly and without reserve, then the Japanese doctrine, Asia for Asiatics, becomes meaningless and we have a free field on which to continue our work of culture in that part of the globe."

THE LIFE OF THE SOUL

An Open Letter to Mrs. M. T. Longley.

Mrs. M. T. Longley—Dear Madam and Co-Worker in the Cause of Truth:—I read the article in The Progressive Thinker of Feb. 6, on the subject, The Life of the Soul, and I notice that the ego that was speaking through your organism did not make mention of the origin of the soul, only that that the mind of man could not comprehend it. Now I think different, for I believe the mind of man is all-powerful as far as unfolded.

He also stated that a mind that could explain these wonders of the infinite could not come in contact with finite life; and in that I differ from him. The time is past when that was a fact, and we are now just entering on a new cosmic day, which commenced in 1898, and this new cosmic day will reveal many things that heretofore have seemed impossible.

Now in the last few weeks I have held a conversation through my own clairaudient powers with a very intelligent entity that claims to have reached the high state of unfoldment or vibration so that he could behold the infinite and that he is one of a few that by their own will force can come to a lower rate of vibration and teach the people of earth some of the higher truths; and I asked him in regard to the origin of the human soul, and his reply was that it sprang from the vibratory waves of the universal soul which is composed of both positive and negative vibratory waves and as these two waves come in contact with each other they throw off a spark of light (soul) same as two wires charged with electricity do, and this new soul commences to increase in vibration and gather particles around it to protect itself from other stronger vibrations, therefore the covering that Mr. Pierpont spoke of, then in time by the same process it takes on the spiritual covering and by power of attraction it takes on the human form or any other form for a time, then as the latter wears out or fails to be preserved, this soul moves out, the same as we would move out of an old house and see or vibrate till we found one more suited to our needs; but they can teach the human mind to preserve itself and body it lives in, and to unfold in knowledge until this human mind continues to seek the finer covering and will not dwell in the physical, but will not live below the spiritual vibrations, and then in time this soul will or can by continuous changes for the better throw off this spiritual covering.

Now this oversoul or universal soul is as said before throwing off new souls. Now these souls that are thus thrown off do not come into the human form but as they are part of the universal soul they are composed of the same component parts as the universal soul (as a child to the parent) and this soul becomes a planet and is composed of vibratory waves both positive and negative, and by the same process new souls are born on different planets. Also these souls if in the right vibration can and do vibrate to the place in the universal consciousness where they belong, according to unfoldment, and there remain in different forms throughout the cosmic day in which they were born, or until they unfold the mind so as to be infinite. As the mind unfolds, the coverings that surround the soul become thinner or more transparent and will finally dissolve into the elements.

Now, Mrs. Longley, I was strongly impressed to send these few lines to you and you can do with them as you think best; you can, after reading them, throw them in the waste basket, or you can send them to be published, it is all the same to me. I have lots of those writings and I shall not even keep a copy of this as they come to me or are revealed to me at any time. Hoping you will not take offense by my sending this to you, and wishing you ever success in unfolding the truth to the minds of men, I am, as ever, a seeker after the higher truth, JUD JOHNSON.

THE ANGEL GUESTS.

As I sit in the silent gloaming,
And think of the loved ones gone,
My soul is filled with moaning,
And my heart seems very lone.

But a sweet voice, out of the dimness
Sends greetings my heart to bless,
And tells me my loved ones are living
In the home of Eternal Rest.

Living and loving as in former years,
With hearts as tender and true,
And they reach out their hands in the twilight,
To those whom on earth they knew.

They whisper, in accents most tender,
From out the evergreen shore:
"Our spirits are nearer than ever,
We love you the same as of yore.

"We come to you often to cheer you,
We hover around you at night,
We tenderly watch ever near you,
We fill your soul oft with delight.

"We speak of our Heavenly Father,
We tell of His love and His care,
We dry all your sad tears of sorrow
And help you life's burdens to bear.

"Then welcome us, friend, to your household!
Make room for each heavenly guest!
We bring only love and good wishes,
From out the bright land of the blest."

IMPORTANT QUERIES.

YESTERDAY, TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW THOUGHTFULLY CONSIDERED IN THE LIGHT OF MODERN REASON AND THE HIGHER CRITICISM.

The physical attributes of the human form in times past were the same as now. Why did not man wrest from nature the essentials of comfort and refinement that prevail at the present time? If "the brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile," why could not man entertain superior thoughts, or manifest superior mentality when he was living nearer to nature?

Why was he comparatively contented with the adobe dwelling, the mud hut, or rude cabin located in the wilds of the forest?

Why did the crude means of transportation satisfy his requirements—modes of communication with his fellow so far inferior to what we now possess?

Why was he so indifferent to the cultivation of the beautiful, and neglected to embellish his surroundings which would thus render the external more pleasing to the eye, or an improvement upon the native crudity of the wilderness?

Why was he so cruel and barbarous in the treatment of others, in such marked contradistinction to the magnanimous policy pursued in this enlightened age?

To travel down the stream of time beyond and anterior to this early period we would find conditions coarser and less salubrious in proportion to the perception of the race. Nature, like the human, was undeveloped, rough and uncouth, manifesting morbidity and crudity, until aroused into activity and refinement by a higher culture of mentality on the part of man. The reason why coarser conditions obtained then than now was because man was not so individualized; in other words he had not unfolded the progressive element of his being.

This object lesson presented to us in every-day experience is an earnest of the future. Why should not man continue to progress eternally, to unfold from within, directing and unfolding impulses which will eventually endow him with the powers and possibilities of a God?

Seeing that we have no wish or inclination to again adopt such moral and social conditions, which we have long ago outgrown, why should we cling tenaciously to the religious ideas that were only sufficient for the requirements of the people existing at that time?

Why should not man progress in thought along the lines of spiritual speculation in proportion to the unfoldment and refinement that he demands and elicits from nature?

Why should man's conclusions respecting the spiritual be absolute, fixed, and unchanging when he is forever changing, moulding and refining the external by his wonderful mentality?

Are his spiritual faculties to remain dormant while his intellectual capacity is striving to grasp the very soul of being?

During the Middle Ages, after endeavoring to fetter and coerce mankind by the imitations of those horrid engines of torture, the rack, the iron boot, the thumbscrew, and other operations too numerous to mention, man's spiritual activities became morbid and lifeless for many years, until it required the thunderstorm of mental revolution to arouse him to a true sense of his relationship to the higher requirements of his nature. Even as the violent elemental storm becomes absolutely essential to maintain animal and human life on earth when the equilibrium is disturbed, and injurious factors interpose, threatening man's very existence, so in the spiritual realm of thought a tremendous disturbance becomes necessary to arouse the soul from its sleepy condition; fiery arrows of thought-lightning flash to and fro; thunders, roaring, deafening, deep and loud, shake the very earth to its center; but eventually the atmosphere becomes pure as the breath of morn.

Then man feels the throbbing and pulsation of individuality knocking at the external for expression; he girds on his armor like a mighty warrior, and bids defiance to conservative systems of thought and obsolete ideals. He seeks glory and power in other fields of investigation and research, bravely enters the holy of holies to the spirit, ultimately standing forth conquerer and controller of everything beneath him.

Thus endowed with creative possibilities, that principle of individuality must eternally unfold in infinite expression and power.

The lion spirits of progress, Voltaire, Paine, Bradlaugh and Ingersoll, applied the dynamite of iconoclastic thought and a terrible explosion ensued; the spiritual atmosphere enveloping the civilized world became lashed into rapid vibration, and man became rescued from spiritual death.

Fancy a soul that can conceive the idea and maintain the possibility of despatching intelligence and power round the world independent of a visible material medium, believing that man is a "creature full of bruises and putrefying sores." THINK OF A BEING WHO CAN EXTRACT LIGHTNING FROM THE MIGHTY CATARACT, AND MAKE IT HIS ERRAND BOY, AND DISPENSER OF MATERIAL BLESSINGS TO HUMANITY, ENTERTAINING THE CONVICTION THAT MAN IS A LOATHSOME REPTILE, WORTHY OF ETERNAL DAMNATION OR SPIRITUAL DESTRUCTION.

Tell that fond mother while she is dancing on her knee that "repository of infinite possibilities," that her child is naturally depraved, and may ultimately be consigned to eternal torment, and she will freeze your very soul with a contemptuous look of honest indignation.

Where is there a man endowed with all the sympathy, moral integrity, and spiritual development possible here on earth who will sneakingly, cringingly, cowardly and despicably allow another man—innocent—to suffer for his misdeeds? Nay, even "the noble red man of the forest" would not submit to this. The popular barbarous conception of man's relationship to the spiritual is a relic of the serfdom of the past. While feebly and half-apologetically striving to express his soul attributes, the being whom he supposes to be his ruler and arbiter of his future destiny, imposes upon him positive commands of obedience, and threatens him with dire calamity if he refuses to submit to these imperious dictates of a despotic will.

Man being determined to assert his individuality, dares to "beard the lion in his den." As a result, he is not only cursed, ostracised, and thrown out upon the cold world, friendless and hopeless, but succeeding generations must also incur the wrath and displeasure of the tyrant, with the probability of being hurried to eternal perdition. The sweet emblem of innocence and purity, which the mother loves dearer than life itself, is not exempt from the merciless rapacity of the fiend, but he pursues that child with vindictive hatred, resolved to wreak his vengeance even upon a helpless babe. Nothing will gratify his outraged feelings, but that his own son should come to earth, and be put to a horrible death, as a means of reconciliation. Those who receive the divine approval when they pass over to the spiritual condition will be rewarded with a harp and a crown, on condition that they stultify their manhood and sink their individuality in a sycophantic prostration of all that constitutes them grand, noble and intelligent beings. And this is to be their future destiny; to honor, applaud, praise and glorify a despotic monarch, whom they must despise and detest with all the loathing of their souls.

Man's sense of justice, reason and intuition—nay, even nature herself—protests against this awful rendering of the purpose of life. The great yearning cry of the soul is for a philosophy of existence in harmony with its aspirations and progressive needs.

OSTEOPATHY AT FAULT.

Was Dr. Still's Diagnosis Correct?

I write the following article with two purposes in view, first with the desire to inform the many friends of Mrs. C. M. Chown of the progress and development of her long, tedious, and as I believe unnecessary illness. My second purpose is to express in no uncertain way my opinion of either the criminal carelessness, or else pernicious ignorance of Dr. Still, the celebrated founder of Osteopathy. It will be remembered by the friends of Mrs. Chown, at Mount Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, that the day following one of the camp dances, at which she had indulged freely in that delightful pastime, she was taken ill with strong indications of rheumatic trouble in her right limb.

As Mrs. Chown was suffering severely, and the famous Dr. Still was on the grounds, I was urged to secure his services, which I accordingly did. As soon as he came into the presence of Mrs. Chown, and after he had made a hurried examination, he immediately pronounced her trouble a dislocation of the hip. I was greatly surprised at such a diagnosis, as I could not understand how a woman with a dislocated hip could have danced up to a late hour, then returned home, go to bed and without any knowledge on her part of how and when, reach such a condition as revealed by the alleged diagnosis of Dr. Still, but I did not consider that it was for me to question the ability of the celebrated osteopathist, so I consented to my wife submitting to his treatment (for which I am heartily sorry now). In accordance with the indications of his diagnosis, he manipulated the limb for the supposed purpose of reducing the alleged dislocation; such manipulations produced in my wife the keenest agony, causing her to faint, and the strange part of it is that until after his manipulations she had suffered no trouble in the hip, but with the cessation of his manipulations the agony did not cease. After he had left the house her sufferings were terrible. I found it necessary to call him later in the evening, as her sufferings were unbearable. He then declared that a nerve was pinched in the articulation of the hip, and by further manipulations endeavored to remove the difficulty, but with what measure of success may be judged, when I say that Mrs. Chown remained flat on her back for twenty-one weeks, and even now after six months can only get about the house by the use of crutches.

Now my contention is, that before Dr. Still's first visit there was no dislocation of the hip. I contend his diagnosis was entirely wrong, and if at any time there was a dislocation, then it was produced by his manipulations on his first visit, but the injury to the joint had been so severe by the violence of the manipulations, that her long disability followed as a consequence.

There may be virtue in Osteopathy, but I have mighty little faith in it as administered by its celebrated founder, Dr. Still.

I have been instigated to write the foregoing after witnessing for six months the terrible sufferings of my wife, which I feel sure are the direct results, as I have said, of either the deplorable carelessness or reprehensible ignorance of a man who issupposed to be a teacher. Yours for justice and right,

Lima, Ohio. C. M. CHOWN.

So Easy to Forget.

In 999 cases out of every thousand, the directions which accompany a physician's prescription or proprietory medicine, tell you to take a dose three or four times a day, either before or after meals, and on going to bed. In 999 cases out a thousand, this rule is never strictly followed. You start in to observe it religiously and succeed pretty well at first, but soon you'll begin to skip doses, then the medicine fails in its intended effect. It's so easy to forget.

If the remedy is in liquid form, the business man loses a dose in the middle of the day unless some thoughtful wife, mother or sister gives him a spoon and makes him take an extra bottle to the office. Most men hate to do this. If the medicine is in tablet form, the chances are that he will never think of it until he reaches for car fare on his way home. It's so easy to forget. This applies to men and women alike.

The proprietors of Vernal Palmettona (formerly, known as Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine) had sense and foresight enough to make their remedy so that only one dose a day is necessary. It is easy to remember to take it after the last meal or on going to bed. It stands in a class by itself. If you are pestered with indigestion, constipation, liver trouble, bowel trouble or any skin affliction resulting from bad blood, Vernal Palmettona is what you need. Try it at our expense. Write for a free sample bottle. It will do you good. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., 452 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y. Sold at all druggists.

Read This Carefully Before Re-Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These ten books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $3.10, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—a bargain the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS!

To Clubs of ten or more we offer the following terms to each one: The Progressive Thinker one year, and ONE of the following books, $1.15: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science"; "Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present"; "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands"; "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," Vol. 3. The one who gets up the Club will be entitled to the paper one year free, and any two of the books he may select among our list of premiums.

Man and the Spirit World as Disclosed in the Bible." By Rev. Arthur Chambers, Associate of King's College, London. An excellent book for Christian people who would investigate and learn the facts of Bible teachings as well as modern spirit phenomena. Price, cloth, $1.10.

Bible and Church Degrade Woman. By Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Comprises three essays on "The Effect of Woman Suffrage on Questions of Morals and Religion." Price, 10c.

Man the Microcosm. His Infinite and Divine Relations. Intuition—The Light Within. By Giles B. Stebbins. Price, 10 cents.

Father Tom and the Pope, Or a Night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Mag zine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "potteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

It Will Spiritualize You.

"AMBER" ON BEING PLEASANT.

A Woman Without Gracious Manners Is Like a Blossomless Stalk in a Garden.

Somewhere in New England in a wayside graveyard a little distance out from town, on a side-hill perhaps, overlooking a quiet valley through which a slender river winds, or far up the heights where the air is thin and clear these frosty nights, and the clustering stars are tangled in the deep spaces of the sky like swarming bees, they tell me there is a half-sunken headstone which bears these words: "She was so pleasant." Nothing more to hold back the memory of that one vanished woman from the eternal silence. Not the record of any deed she did or word she spoke, and yet what a picture we have in the stroke of those simple words. Not a great woman, perhaps, but O, what a comforting one to have around! Likely as not she was little and plain, and wore nothing more elegant than calico and homespun all her days. If we had strolled that way in any of those long departed years when she dwelt upon earth, loitering down the summer road and looking into the old red house where she made her home, we should have seen between the rows of dusty hollyhocks about the door her trim figure bustling about tidying up the place with a woman's brisk and happy touch; no great work, surely, but it went a good ways towards the making of her pleasant home. Or between the bird songs that filled the old orchard with bugle calls we should have caught the cadence of her voice, never scolding, but often admonishing, encouraging, cheering.

Though we listened long we should have heard no advocacy of suffrage or reform, no well turned sentence that bespoke a superior mind and a brain active in its search for the higher sphere of woman, but we should have caught the echo of her good-night as she tucked the sleepy boys in bed, or held the curly-headed mite of a girl in her arms a moment between the pauses of her work. We should have listened to the comfortable voice as it encouraged this one in a difficult task, or smoothed the tangles out of that one's perplexity. We should have seen her catch her sun-bonnet from its nail and fly across the meadow-lot to take the men folks a bit of lunch, or slip through the gap in the garden wall, to speak a word of comfort to the neighbor whose baby was but lately dead and buried. Every thing she did, or said, would have been like the blowing of a breeze through a bed of balm, shaking a thousand sweet influences through the air. Leaving her to go back among the more gifted and restless daughters of earth would have been like leaving a June rose to take up with a milliner's stock of artificiality. She has been in heaven for many a year (we can imagine it is sweeter living, even there, for the charm of her presence), and of her earthly record there remains nothing but the words on the crumbling headstone in the village among the hills.

But what could you or I ask better to be said of us, my dear, when those heads are lying low in the eternal sleep? It is easy enough to win plaudits for bravery and good service in momentous things. The soldier who marches to battle behind a banner and the woman who by her executive skill shapes a home and brings up a family are both deserving of praise, but Lord bless you! they are forced to march whether they will or no. The one to health and the other to destiny. It is one thing to go about our life work from a sense of stern duty, and another to go about it in a way that shall make both ourselves and everybody about us happy. With you and I life is a forced march half the time, but with the blessed woman asleep among the hills it was like the advance of a summer day through a land of blossoms.

It was a greater thing perhaps to be Joan of Arc, but it was a sweeter thing to leave this epitaph on the wayside headstone for strangers to read. In the eyes of the big and critical world it would have been more to her credit had she written a book or championed a cause, but to the young heart of common humanity it is better to be loved than to be admired, and she of whom it could be said, "She was so pleasant," won a sweeter plaudit than she of whom it might be written, "She was so gifted," or "So great."

To be pleasant is a consummation that lies within the power of every one of us. To be great is the possible achievement of the few. There is nothing that sits so gracefully upon a bright woman as gentleness and pleasantness. The brightest intellect the Lord ever struck from out the eternities is devoid of charm without the gift of affability and sweetness of manner. A man without either natural or cultivated civility is the most disagreeable thing in nature outside of a burdock or a hedgehog; but a woman without the gift of gracious and pleasant manner is like the sight of a blossomless stalk in a garden meant to grow roses.

Women in Educational Affairs.

Mrs. Helen Loring Grenfell, who is now serving her third term as Superintendent of Public Instruction in Colorado, has recently been in Washington, attending the National Woman Suffrage Convention. She claims that woman suffrage has resulted in greatly benefiting the educational system in Colorado. More money is spent per capita upon the education of children in Colorado than in any other state. The schools are entirely out of politics, no school director is ever elected or teacher hired on account of his or her political affiliations.

In thirty-three counties of Colorado women are county superintendents and most of them in counties with the largest population. The men and women teachers receive equal pay for the same grade work and women are eligible to any and all positions. All their state institutions including their State University have women on the faculty.

If there was nothing more to be gained than the receiving of equal pay for equal work, it would be sufficient reason for every woman demanding the ballot.

In Wyoming almost the first law that was passed after women were enfranchised was one giving all women in governmental employ equal pay with men for the same work, including public school teachers.

JENNIE HAGAN BROWN.

If reports be true this lady is now on the ocean on her way to Australia. She is one of the foremost lecturers in the ranks of Spiritualism, and we can cordially recommend her to our brethren on the other side. Her lectures are of a high order and her poetical improvisations always charm her hearers. She should receive a cordial welcome.

Reforming Criminals.

The reforming of criminals instead of punishing them has attracted the thoughts of philanthropists, and much has been done to ameliorate the hardships of imprisonment. The necessity of society protecting itself is unquestioned, and the problem is how best this can be effected? The old method of vengeance, the infliction of punishment, with expectation of deterring the convicted criminal from repeating the crime, and keeping others from lawbreaking, through fear, has proved a dismal failure.

The sad fact is that criminals more often repeat their crimes than reform. Why? Because those released from prison with the reputation thus received, find no place for them, and unless protected and encouraged by friendly influences, they find it most difficult if not impossible, however determined they may be to live honest lives, to successfully hold to their resolutions.

The obstacles in the way of a prisoner released from the penitentiary, were never presented in a clearer or more forcible manner than the following from the Cleveland Plain Dealer. It is the more remarkable because spoken by a police official, and is the conclusion of his many years' experience with the criminal class. He says:

"It is a severe test of the strength of character of a criminal to really and truly reform. For such a man the path of rectitude and right is certainly a lonely one. Stop and think of it. I know a man in this city who served ten years in the penitentiary for burglary. He was a good burglar. I mean that he was as successful and daring as any of the profession. After he got out he determined to live an honest life. He had been in town but a short while before some of the men picked him up and brought him down to see me. They wanted to know what he was doing and where he was living. He explained to me that he was doing his best to be an honest man. He has a job. He works long hours. And his wages are but $1.10 per day. Think of that. There was a man who had enjoyed the best of everything while he was a thief.

"For years he had been accustomed to the comradeship of men of his kind. And among themselves these people are splendid fellows. They have a big time when they have money, and when they don't they have little trouble in obtaining advances from those who make fortune on their daring. This man had always lived with people of this kind. Their language was his language. I mean that thieves' slang was more familiar to him than good English, or the talk of the workingman.

"Now he stands alone. He is in a new world. It is hard for him to conduct himself and think along the lines of the people he has daily contact with. The only thing which will prove an anchor to the windward for this poor fellow is the thought that he has friends behind him who know all, and who are going to back him. I have told him that this department will do all it can for him. Not as a department, of course, but as individuals. I have tried to demonstrate to him that should they be compelled to arrest him, he would cause them pain. I have explained to him this fact that it is human nature to help the man who has been down and given the worst of it before helping a man who has not been there."

This police official has a kinder heart than is usually found in the business world, and unless the man whom he takes for an example, has more than ordinary resolution, all the sympathy of the police will not prevent him from returning to the ways of crime. The world has made the path of reform less attractive and vastly more difficult than that of transgression.

What is the need? Education of the head and hand, to keep men and women out of the penitentiary. Education, of those unfortunately confined there. Lastly a helping hand, charity and sustaining influence for those released, who have to begin life anew with the disadvantages of a shadowed character.

We have wealth lavished on universities, churches, libraries, and numberless charities, while here is an opportunity for the assistance of the fallen and unfortunate which received no attention, and is of greatest moment.

Cannot some of the multi-millionaires be interested in a movement which shall have for its object the provision for released criminals, giving them a home and employment until they can find a place in the world which closes all doors against them? Here is a humanitarian work worthy of all praise and one which offers an unoccupied field.

A Catholic View of the Use of the Bible.

The prize offer for the best essays on the origin and history of the different versions of the Bible has stimulated inquiry and Bible study, but it is questionable if it does more than confirm the already too prevalent belief in the value of the book as a sacred inspiration. The vital point of its beginning, and human origin will be absolutely ignored. An essay by an impartial freethinker would be thrown by the committee chosen for examination of these essays, into the waste-basket without reading.

The Catholics have already found an exponent of their belief in Father Heusser, of Overbrook Seminary, Pa. He champions the Catholic Douay version, and denies that the Protestants have anything to compare with it. To the taunt that the mother church has never voluntarily translated this holy version into the vernacular, he quotes St. Peter as admonishing Christian converts to heed what St. Paul taught them, that portions of God's inspired book if read promiscuously would become a stumbling-block, and "warns them and thus stigmatizes the danger of private interpretation by the unlearned." Catholicism did not object to Wycliffe or Tyndale translating the Bible into the language of the common people.

"But," says Father Heusser, "that they used the translated Bible to establish a political socialism akin to the anarchistic socialism in the political order of our day. That is the sole charge for which the Catholic authorities can be held responsible in judicially condemning these men, who were zealous and, perhaps, sincere enough, but whose zeal, like that of most self-constituted reformers, was not according to wisdom. And as a civil government may legislate against and even coerce into submission public fomenters of strife (who claim a direct and uncontrolled mission from God to say and do what they deem just), if they disturb the public order, so will the church, which exercised a more directive power in those times upon the government than it does in a purely secular age like ours, be recognized as having used a legitimate and freely conceded right to censure and to punish."

The church has then the right to decide what is for the public good, and to torture and burn the heretic who disobeys by setting up his private opinion!

The holy father gives his whole contention away in this ingenuous paragraph:

"A translation of the Scriptures into the vulgar tongues is not absolutely necessary nor indiscriminately profitable. This stands to reason since, except through the interpreters in the synagogal and Christian priesthood, the Bible, except in fragments, was not and could not have been known for centuries after the establishment of Christianity. As to the absolute and indiscriminate reading, the words of St. Peter and the effect of Protestant divisions prove that it requires check and guidance."

There is one point, however, that he makes that ought to set the Protestant revisers thinking. It is that the revision of 1880 corrects 20,000 errors in the authorized version, of which ten per cent are returns to the Catholic text! And Father Heusser naively says: "Another revision may bring us back entirely to the old Douay version" (the true Catholic).

The real controversy is not, however, over the versions. The Catholic may be as good, or better than any other. It does not seem that the inspired author has made the best, clear enough for the understanding of the people, and priests must stand between and tell them what to read and how to understand.

WAKE UP! ILLINOIS.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, the widely known missionaries of the N. S. A., are now ready to work for the promulgation of Spiritualism by organizing local societies of Spiritualists in Illinois. Let general advantage of their availability be taken at once. Do not delay in communicating with them at Rochester, Indiana, until further notice.

The time will soon be gone and your opportunity lost if you dally with indecision. Get out of the graveyard of indifference.

Kellar, the Magician's Expose of the Mediums of Cassadaga. Copy furnished all the spiritual papers.

It is a remarkable fact that many sermons have been delivered mostly from orthodox pulpits favorable to Spiritualism, and reported in the daily press. Some of these discourses are everything the most ardent Spiritualist can desire. Fewer denunciatory articles have appeared in the secular press, and many favorable have been published. The exposures of fraudulent "materializers"—I will not write mediums—has given occasion for sharp criticism, well deserved, but it has not been made to do service in denouncing the cause as a whole. These fake "materializations"; the constant exposures of mendacious fakirs who have been endorsed by Spiritualists, and too often have credentials from Spiritual societies, is the heaviest load Spiritualism has to carry, and it is impossible for it to maintain its high claims unless it frees itself from these vampires.

I am respectfully,

Soul Culture and Brain Culture.

In the course of a lecture given to the Soul Culture Club of St. Louis, Dr. A. A. Lindsay linked love to chemistry, and "suggestion" to soul and brain culture, in a clear and philosophical manner, worthy of close study. The following gives an idea of the trend of his discourse, which, as will be seen, was highly instructive;

"Suggestion," said Dr. Lindsay, "plays a most important part in every love affair. Though the individual may be unconscious of the fact, yet his or her every thought and act which in any way concern the loved one, may be construed into a suggestion, which will have either a good or a bad effect. The degree either may attain is determined by the nature and strength of the suggestion."

Dr. Lindsay asserted also that chemistry enters into love affairs when they reach a certain stage. This assertion is based upon the psychological fact that continued thought upon a given subject produces new brain cells.

"This change," he said, "the building of new cells, is a chemical action. When the thoughts of an individual continually dwell upon another person, new cells are formed into which the individuality of the other person enters.

"When two persons meet, certain mental impressions are instantly formed by each. A word or an unconscious gesture may convey a suggestion from one to the other. This suggestion may either repel or attract, and though the impressions are formed unconsciously, they instantly manifest themselves.

"We frequently are unable to assign any reason for liking or disliking a new acquaintance. Still we either like or dislike. The feeling is present, and it is due to the unconscious suggestions which are given and received when a meeting occurs.

"The color of a lady's eyes may be attractive to a man she meets. This fact shapes itself into a suggestion, which he receives. Later they find that the society of each is pleasing to the other. Each of them is continually throwing out suggestions which are favorably received by the other. Repetition strengthens these suggestions, and all the time the suggestions are building up new brain cells, which are purely the result of one thinking of the other.

"Unless adverse suggestions which are equally effective are formed, the natural result is that the two arrive at a condition or state of affection known as love, which either grows stronger or weakens, dependent upon new suggestions which may be given out.

"A woman may love a man, and after a time something he does gives her pain and displeasure. This pain and displeasure act as a suggestion, forming new brain cells, and if it has more strength than the suggestions which have caused her to love a new feeling of dislike will spring up."

MAUD LORD-DRAKE.

To the Editor:—The book "Psychic Light," by Maud Lord-Drake, was received this week, and I have commenced to read it, and I must say I am perfectly fascinated with the work, and I think no Spiritualist family in the country can afford to do without buying the book. I have known Maud since the summer of 1872, when after parting with a dear and only son, as I then supposed, never to meet again, but being in Chicago just seven weeks after Robby had passed away, I was induced by the advice of a friend who was a Spiritualist to visit a seance held by Maud, on the north side of Madison street, I think about or near 300, it being the first spiritual seance I had ever attended, and he called me papa, and was described by Mrs. Lord better than I could describe him, though I had known him over eleven years, and you may be assured it was a pleasant meeting to me, as I was now perfectly convinced that my darling son still lived. And Maud's manner was so kindly and instructive to a novice, as I was. I was raising fruit near Benton Harbor, Mich., and was often in Chicago, so I attended several of Maud's seances after that, and always found her so good, kind and instructive, it was a great treat for me to meet her.

Very Plain Talk to You.

Dr. A. Caird, a Prominent Spiritualist of Lynn, Mass., Sets a Bee to Buzzing Around the Heads of Spiritualists.

Why Are Spiritual Societies Declining?

We hear and read considerable of late of the decline of Spiritual societies; of what large audiences used to attend Spiritual meetings as compared with the audiences of to-day, and there seems to be a tendency to place the blame upon the local workers and the methods of conducting societies. Perhaps there might be something said in regard to the speakers and their influence on the work. IN OUR OPINION ONE REASON LIES IN THE FACT THAT HARDLY TWO SPEAKERS ON THE ROSTRUM TO-DAY AGREE IN MORE THAN ONE OR TWO POINTS OF BELIEF.

How many speakers present spiritual truths to their hearers from the same point of view? One Sunday we may listen to a good, practical lecture on the every-day duties that confront us, one that may be helpful and uplifting, giving us new courage to go forward in the right path; perhaps next Sunday the speaker will come with the Bible in his hands, telling us of the truths, beauties and grand inspirations to be be received from its study; then some one will come before us and take from us the Bible, hymn book and everything that was ever of any service to the church.

Why is it that so many public lecturers seem to feel called upon to tear down all our old faiths and beliefs before building up something to take their place?

The tearing down process has been going on for over fifty years, and what is the result? The last census informs us that only twenty-five per cent of the population of the United States belong to any church, and only thirty per cent of those who do belong attend regularly.

IS IT WORTH WHILE WASTING SO MUCH AMMUNITION ON SUCH A SMALL MINORITY, when the great field of psychic study is open before us with so much to learn and so many anxious for knowledge concerning the philosophy of Spiritualism; something to help us on the way?

Doesn't it seem a pity to waste so much time disproving the Bible and exposing the old fallacies?

We have heard enough about what we don't believe and what we ought not to believe. What we want to tell people now is what we do believe and how to apply that belief and the knowledge that has come to us, to our lives, that they may be more helpful to those with whom we come in contact.

We need educated speakers to come before our people and present spiritual truths in such an attractive manner that it will draw into our societies some of the many who believe in the spiritual philosophy, but cannot endorse all the vagaries and inconsistencies that so frequently accompany it. We often hear it said: "I like to go to spiritual meetings, but I don't care to take any of my friends that belong to the church, for fear something may be said that will arouse their antagonism and prejudice them against it."

Don't spend so much time on our old ideas; give us something new. Does not Spiritualism give us new truths—truths that will make our lives brighter and happier, and that will help us to nobler and better modes of living?

The people want Spiritualism when they come to spiritual meetings. They don't want Christian Science, nor Theosophy, but to hear something about the spirits and what truths they have to impart to us.

It is all very well for confirmed Spiritualists to explore these by-paths if they so desire, but if you want to make converts, if you want to draw in the outside public, you must give them what they want, and that is Spiritualism. Don't try to take away the old staffs on which they have leaned so many years; get them to leaning somewhat on the staff of Spiritualism, and they will soon discard the old ones; they will not need them any longer. The bright Angel of Spiritualism has ever new truths and new beauties which she is anxious to unveil to inquiring minds and inquiring minds all over the world are eager to receive them and apply them to their lives.

The Revelations of Buried Cities.

The Egyptian Exploration Fund is an organization set on foot many years ago by Christians, the principal object of which was to find some trace of the Jews in Egypt, hoping thereby to find confirmatory proof of Bible narrative in regard to the residence of that people in Egypt, and, perchance, their exodus and forty years' wanderings in pursuit of the "Promised Land."

So early as July 23, 1887, Edward Naville, who had been engaged in making excavations in the Delta, of Egypt, in pursuit of relics, wrote a letter, published in the then New York "Church Press," the American organ of that fund, wherein he said:

"In all the excavations which the Egyptian Exploration Fund has made in the Delta, there is one remarkable fact to be noticed. Absolutely no monuments of the XVIII Dynasty have been found."

This was the reigning Dynasty when the alleged Jews were supposed to have been in bodnage.

That Exploration Fund is yet active. A few weeks ago we published an account of relics collected by W. M. Flinders Petrie, which he had transferred to to the Stanford University of California.

Now we find in a late issue of the London Times, a recent letter from that great Egyptologist, Petre, in which he says of quite recent excavations at Abydos:

"The continuation of the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund at Abydos this year has given a wider view of the early civilization, of which the general lines had been fixed by the previous work on the Royal Tombs and the town. The clearance of the old temple site over several acres has brought to light in a depth of about twenty feet no less than ten successive temples [superimposed one above the other], ranging in age from about 5,000 to 500 B. C.

"For the first time we can see on one spot the changes from age to age through the whole of Egyptian history. To separate these buildings was an affair of anatomy, rather than spade work; the walls of mud brick were so commingled with the soil that incessant section cutting with a sharp knife was the only way to discriminate the brickwork. Often only a single course of bricks, or a thin bed of foundation sand, was all that told of the great buildings which had existed here for centuries.

"Over 5,000 measurements were taken for the plans and levels. The discoveries of the civilization of the first dynasty, the beginning of the kingdom, expand what we already had from the work in the Royal Tombs. Of Menes, the founder, we have part of a large globular vase of green glaze, with his name inlaid in purple. Thus polychrome glazing is taken back thousands of years before it was previously known to exist. The free use of great tiles of glaze for wall coverings shows how usual the use was then. In the highest art of delicate ivory carving there are several pieces of this age."

Nature Is Not Dumb.

"Where certainty prevails in fields of knowledge we are entitled to speak with the authority which indicates no doubt; but when arrived at the point where science is silent and nature is dumb, we bow our heads in reverence before the inscrutable mystery of the universe, and wait for further light. Should that light ever come, we will gratefully hail its approach and walk by the luminous power of its beams."

Such is the language of a distinguished English Agnostic, in a late issue of the Truth Seeker.

The great mass of Spiritualists insist that LIGHT HAS COME; that those considered dead have returned and communicated with mortals yet in the flesh, and are doing so continually. They give facts, with detailed occurrences, which seem to settle the question beyond the possibility of doubt. Events long forgotten are detailed by returned spirits in such a manner as to remove every suspicion of collusion, or fraud. Other events, only known to the departed, are communicated to the living, and are found by concurrent circumstances to be in the minutest detail truthful.

The prejudices of education may prevent the general recognition of the facts stated for a time; but the revolution during the last fifty years is so great, and is still going on so rapidly, as to make it certain time is only necessary to complete the reception of the great truth, that there is no death; that what is usually denominated such is only the laying aside of the robes of mortality, to reappear in forms not visible, save to those of abnormal vision.

Washing Away Sin in the Muddy Ohio.

On the Ohio river, near Cincinnati, the Baptists have been holding a rousing revival meeting this winter, and gathered in over a hundred converts. It has been cold weather and revivals flourish best with zero temperature. At the close of the meetings, when all the brands had been snatched from the burning, came the final test. To a Baptist, sprinkling is a mockery and a dip in the water, all under, is the only way to become freed from sin. The Ohio was raging, from the effects of the thaw, full of ice, and muddy, but the baptizing could not wait. Some of the converts would escape from the hypnotic influence and be lost. By the time the weather became balmy, and the waters tempered, the converts would have "taken to the woods," and none would be left to show the "mighty power of God," as put forth by the evangelist preacher. Hence all the forces of the church were gathered, and five thousand of the country side, to see the show. Two preachers marched ahead, the converts in white robes followed, seven deacons came after, and then the crowd, not already gathered at the banks. The river threw up its yellow foam and the ice fragments were tossed angrily, as the procession drew up and the preachers with heroic courage went down into the seething flood. One by one the victims were seized by the deacons and handed to the preachers, who mumbling through their chattering teeth, "in the name," etc., plunged them under, shrieking and sighing. Little children pleaded piteously to be spared, but their cries were not heeded. The strong hands of the deacons seized them, and under the ice they went with a splash, and a yell of fear. Some of the young women became hysterical at the sight of the raging waters and the torture experienced by those preceding, and resisted with all their might, but the deacons were inexorable in their determination to "save souls." The resisting maidens were handed down to the preachers, not gracefully but powerfully, and their wild yells as the cold water caught their sins and bore them down stream, discounted the war cry of an Apache.

The crowd laughed and cheered. Had the deacons and preachers had any sense of fun, they, too, would have laughed. They had too much responsibility to laugh. It was no laughing matter with them. The waters were thick with mud but clear enough to wash away sin! and were they not saving every soul they plunged under? Had they the power they would have corraled the whole crowd and forced every one to take the bath.

Now standing outside of this performance, and reading of it in a daily paper, which makes no comment, taking the news as a matter of course, we are fain to ask, if these people are sane, or have they lost their senses? In the light of the twentieth century, is it possible for such things to be? Wash away sins in the muddy waves of the Ohio! Sin is overcome by quite a different process than washing which of itself is good for the cleanliness of the body, but not of the soul.

Suppose a Spiritual society of Cincinnati should on a cold winter day, when the ice was breaking up, go down to the river with a score of children, declaring it a part of their belief that they must be put under water. Every one of them would be arrested for cruelty to children, and deservedly. And what a hue and cry the press would raise from one end of the land to the other Oh, these deluded and insane Spiritualists! Put together all the folly that has in any way grown out of Spiritualism in fifty years, and it will not fill the measure of this one "manifestation" of priestly humbuggery and superstition on the banks of the Ohio.

THE CHILD ETERNAL.

I heard their prayers and kissed their sleepy eyes,
And tucked them in all warm from feet to head,
To wake again with morning's glad sunrise—
Then came where he lay dead.
Those other children long to men have grown—
Strange, hurried men, who give me passing thought,
Then go their ways. No longer now my own.
Without me they have wrought.
So when night comes, and seeking mother's knee,
Tired childish feet turn home at eventide,
I fold him close—the child that's left to me,
My little lad who died.

ODE TO MOTHERHOOD.

Motherhood! sweet motherhood!
Life's fountain bowl,
Filled with love to its utmost;
Thou source of soul!

Grand, beautiful motherhood!
Most sacred state
Of all being; the whole world
Calleth thee great.

All worship thee, motherhood,
Bosom of love;
All know that thy mission comes Down from above.

Thy pathway, O motherhood,
Rocky and rough
Though it be, is motherhood;
That is enough.

What could be more to thy praise
When understood,
Than that thou art divine,
Sweet motherhood.

Thy love has no foibles
As to the good
Of thy children, O loyal,
True motherhood.

No hands with thy tenderness
Furnish the food
For those of thy family,
Grand motherhood.

Thy passionless love will e'er
Stand over all,
While passionate love with it
Passion may fall.

No force in the universe
Thy duty could Ever in life execute,
Sweet motherhood.

Tender young motherhood!
Beautiful wife!
Darling old motherhood!
Beautiful life!

THE BUTTERFLY.

I hold you at last in my hand,
Exquisite child of the air.
Can I ever understand
How you grew to be so fair.

You come to this linden-tree
To taste its delicious sweet,
Flitting here in the shadow and shine
Playing around its feet.

Now I hold you fast in my hand,
You marvelous butterfly,
Till you help me understand
The eternal mystery.

From that creeping thing in the dust
To this shining bliss in the blue,
God give me courage to trust
I can break my chrysalis, too.

IMPORTANT TO SPIRITUALISTS.

A Move in the Right Direction.

To the Editor:—A meeting was held on Monday evening, Feb. 15, at 77 31st street, of three delegates from each Spiritualist society in Chicago. Dr. G. B. Warne was in the chair. The object of the meeting was to form an organization for the protection of societies and mediums, and to obtain recognition by the press of Chicago; also for the upbuilding of the cause in the city. Committees were appointed to meet a week later, on the West Side, and on Tuesday evening, Feb. 23, the following societies were represented: Illinois State Association, Psychic Force Society, Hyde Park Occult Society, Universal Occult Society, Rising Sun Mission, Students of Nature Society, Progressive Spiritualist Society, Research Society.

Resolutions were adopted and committees appointed to draft the by-laws and charter. The name adopted for the organization was, "The Chicago Spiritualists' League." The next meeting will be held on Monday evening, March 7, at the home of Sister Hilbert, on the North Side.

Joan of Arc and Her Spirit Guides.

An Address by Mr. E. Wake Cook.

AN ADDRESS BY MR. E. WAKE COOK, DELIVERED BEFORE THE MEMBERS AND ASSOCIATES OF THE LONDON SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE IN THE ROOMS OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS, ON THE EVENING OF FRIDAY, JANUARY 29; THE PRESIDENT, MR. E. DAWSON ROGERS, IN THE CHAIR.

In the whole range of history there is no figure quite so remarkable as that of Joan of Arc. Christ had many things in common with the Buddha and other founders of the great religions; but the character and the history of the Maid of Orleans are alike unique. There is the strange conjunction of soldier and spotless saint; of consummate generalship and statesmanlike insight, and the ability to baffle a horde of hostile ecclesiastics plying all forensic arts to trick and entrap her; and these amazing qualities were combined in a simple village maiden still in her teens, who after serving France and crowning her King, begged to be allowed to return to her mother and household duties! Such a character is without a parallel. The written history of this marvelous maid is equally without counterpart. It comes to us with every word attested on oath. Unlike all other histories of earth's guiding stars, it stands in its naked purity, unclouded by the legendary mists which gather about the mountain peaks.

Rationalism—or rather the un-rationalism which usurps that name—and skepticism stand alike dumbfounded in the face of such amazing facts. How small, how puny, they and their explanations seem in the presence of these mysterious happenings, these intrusions of a higher order of potencies and powers into the mundane sphere! How strangely suggestive of action by a personal Providence, or of delegations of power from Omnipotence to demiurgic entities, exalted spirits, angels, archangels, demigods, or whatever we may name them!

A HEAVEN-SENT WARRIOR.

But even Spiritualists, who know more of these mysteries than all the rest of the world, are faced by a seeming paradox which gives them pause. A heaven-sent warrior appears a contradiction of terms. The spectacle of angels inspiring and directing a peasant maiden to lead armies to battle, to mingle in scenes of slaughter, seems a double paradox. For a pure and spotless girl to be a leader in war—which has been called the crime of crimes, the sum of all villainies, and the horror of horrors—seems an inexplicable contradiction to those soaring idealists whose millennial glimpses make them lose sight of the bed-rock facts of existence. We must beware of judging cosmic movements from a parochial standpoint. Spiritualists cannot dissociate God from Nature, or lay on a personal devil all that will not square with their ideas of what things ought to be. War rages throughout the whole realm of Nature, and will do so until it has accomplished its appointed work. It tends to change its form, to mitigate its horrors, and ultimately kill itself. Meanwhile it affords the members of the Peace Party the means of gratifying their own warlike instincts by waging a ruthless war against war!

THROUGH STRIFE TO UNITY.

As I have elsewhere shown, Man is working through strife to unity. War and warlike trade are Nature's scorpion whips compelling Organization; and through universal organization, and the equilibrium it will bring, the practical Brotherhood of Man will be attained probably five thousand years sooner than peace by reaching of the Tolstoy order would achieve that result. It should be the business of our leaders of thought, not to pander to popular passion on one side or the other of these profound questions, but to discern the significance of things; the beneficent purpose underlying the tumult of events, and the "soul of goodness in things evil."

I have permitted myself this digression into a subject which divides Spiritualists as sharply as the question of Reincarnation, because if we take the ordinary divergent views about war, we shall stumble at every step over the problems involved in the character and career of Joan of Arc, the soldier saint.

HERSELF, HER WORK AND HER VOICES.

The history of the Maid that has been preserved is as remarkable as the Maid herself. She was condemned after a trial of extraordinary length, in which she was questioned and requestioned on every point concerning herself, her work, and her Voices. As she was widely regarded as a heaven-sent savior of France, it was absolutely necessary, for the justification of the English and their adherents, that the popular faith in the Maid should be confounded by proving her, before an ecclesiastical court, to be a witch, a heretic, or an agent of the devil. This trial, which procured her condemnation and death, was so infamous in its illegality that the pope, twenty-five years afterwards, granted the prayer of Joan's mother and brothers that the case should be re-examined. This was done, and all available witnesses who could throw light on the life and work of the Maid were examined, even as to the details of her early years. This trial reversed the finding of the first, and passed the Sentence of Rehabilitation. The records of both trials have been preserved; thus, providentially, we have a very full history of Joan of Arc, much of it from her own lips, and every word is attested on oath. So, as I said at first, the written history of "La Pucelle," the Maid of Orleans, is as remarkable as the Deliverer of France herself. These valuable documents have recently been rendered into English, and edited by Mr. T. Douglas Murray, and they are one of the finest and most reliable Spiritualistic records in the whole range of history.

SPIRITUAL INTERVENTION NEEDED IN FRANCE.

If ever spiritual intervention was needed in this world, it was in France at the beginning of the fifteenth century. After nearly a hundred years of war, the country was all but prostrate, under the heels of the sturdy English invaders, who saw little but the backs of their flying foes. The armies were disorganized and demoralized; the treasury empty, and the uncrowned King meditating flight. The whole place was over-run by wandering bands of dissolute soldiery, plundering and burning wherever they went. Among the feudal lords there was no unity or true idea of nationality; it was everyone for himself and the devil take the hindmost, which he generally did. The Burgundians were aiding and abetting the English. The clergy were, of course, divided, some sympathizing with their country's foes, some with France, and all for their church, which was split by having two or three rival Popes, each claiming to be the true one. Nearly the whole of the northern part of France was in English hands, and the one barrier to its complete subjection was Orleans, which still withstood the siege, although reduced to the last extremity.

Politcal matters were in a like deplorable state. Charles VII. was nominally King, but he was still uncrowned and unsanctified, and an uncrowned King had no hold on the hearts and imaginations of the French people. But worse than this, his wretched mother had thrown doubts on his legitimacy. His father, Charles VI., having become insane, his mother, Isabel of Bavaria, made a treatly in 1420 with the English King that the crown of France was to pass away from the Dauphin to the son of Henry and the Princess Catherine, thus proclaiming her own son a bastard. "When Henry V. died," said Mr. Murray, "the son of this unhallowed marriage was declared King of France and England, under the title of Henry VI. The poor child was less than a year old. His able and resolute uncle, John, Duke of Bedford, ruled France as Regent, and carried the arms of England in triumph against all who dared to dispute his nephew's title. The Dauphin fled to the south, and abandoned to Bedford all territory north of the Loire. Paris was held and occupied by the English. The braver members of the Parliament and the University joined the Dauphin at Poiters; but the accommodating and timid members did homage to Bedford, and duly attorned to Henry VI. as to their lawful king. Orleans alone remained of the strong places of France in the hands of the patriot party. If Orleans fell, all organized opposition to Bedford would melt away. As Orleans was the key of the military, so was Rheims the key of the political situation. Rheims was the old city where for many centuries the Kings of France had been crowned and consecrated. Such a ceremony brought with it in an especial manner, the sacrosanct divinity which in the Middle Ages hedged a king." But Rheims and all the intervening country were in hostile hands. Such was the disastrous state of things when Joan of Arc appeared on the scene.

Joan was born on the Feast of the Epiphany, in 1412, of peasant parents, at Domremy, in Lorraine, a borderland village, a sort of Nazareth, from which no good thing could come. It had its haunted well, and its fairy tree, on which the children loved to hang garlands, and where they sang songs to the "little people." At the back of all were great legend-decked woods, so stimulating to the imagination of children. The spirit-world seemed nearer then, and little Joan early began her dreams. But she was an exemplary child in every way, cheerfully doing all household work and taking her turn in tending the flocks and herds. She was intensely pious, loving all things connected with religion and assiduously attending all its ordinances, so much so that her companions bantered her about it.

The terrible state of the country would be known even to the village children. All lived in a state of scare owing to marauding bands of soldiers; and on occasion the whole of the villagers had to fly because of a raid by the Burgundians. When at last it was safe to return, it was to find many wrecked and blackened homesteads, and all the signs of pillage and wanton destruction. Thus the sorrows and troubles were brought home to the hearts and minds of all.

COMMENCEMENT OF HER WONDERFUL CAREER.

Joan was thirteen when she saw her first vision of one of those "sun-clothed" children of light whose brightness outshone the summer day. It was Saint Michael. She was much frightened at first, but soon received great comfort from him, and was told to be good and to go often to church. She said that she saw him before her eyes, and that he was quite surrounded by the angels of heaven. Saint Catherine and Saint Margaret were her most constant advisers, and she describes them as adorned with beautiful crowns, very rich and precious. Speaking of Saint Michael she said: "I saw him, and the accompanying angels, with my bodily eyes, as well as I see you; when they went from me I wept. I should have liked to have been taken with them." The first messages were to urge her to be always good, but she was soon told of her great mission. She pleaded her youth and inexperience, but it was gradually borne in upon her that it was because of her very lowliness that she was chosen as an instrument of God. She said later, that all was by His command, and that had it not been by His will she would sooner have had her body torn in sunder than have undertaken such a task.

THE VOICES COMMANDED HER.

Her Voices continued to instruct her, and on arriving at the age of seventeen she was commanded to go to France and begin her work. She was told to go first to Robert de Baudicourt, Governor of Vancouleurs, who would give her men-at-arms for an escort, and he would send her to the king. She went, accompanied by her uncle, saw the governor, stated her divine mission and her need of an escort. But the governor thought her demented, and told her uncle to take her home and have her whipped. By command of her Voices she went again to the governor, with a like result. But a prophecy of Merlin's was generally called to mind, that the kingdom lost by a woman (Queen Isabel) would be restored by a maid from Lorraine. Enthusiasm grew, two young noblemen were converted to her cause, and swore they would themselves escort her to the king. Joan rebuked the governor for the delay, saying that France had need of her, as that day a battle had been lost. Some days later the news arrived of the lost battle and convinced the governor of her divine powers. So he gave her a letter and sword and said to her, "Go to the king, come of it what may." The people made her a man's suit, a horse was provided, and with the two knights and a small escort a start was made. Traveling through a hostile country, mostly by night, at the end of eleven days they arrived at Chinon, where the uncrowned king was. She was at last seen by Charles, whom she recognized by aid of her Voices, and gave him signs which much impressed him. She told him she was sent by God to raise the siege of Orleans, and to conduct him to Rheims to be crowned. Charles was loath to take any steps without further and fuller inquiry. He desired Joan to be thoroughly examined at Poitiers before a full board of ecclesiastics and lawyers, under the archbishop of Rheims. For three weeks this simple maiden answered all the questions of these learned doctors, like one inspired, telling them there was more in God's book than in theirs. When asked for a sign she said: "I have not come to Poitiers to show signs and do miracles. Send me to Orleans and you shall have signs enough. Give me men-at-arms—few or many—and let me go!"

THE OLD GENERALS SUBMITTED TO HER DICTATION.

The archbishop finally reported in her favor, and advised Charles to take the proffered help, as it was the only hope. The king, who had been much impressed by her revelations, decided to place her at the head of his army. He had the celebrated suit of silvered armor made for her, and she had the famous symbolical banner painted, which played such a conspicuous part in the events which followed. She was provided with a full military household, and she joined the army which was gathering at Blois.

The rumors of the heaven-sent maid aroused burning enthusiasm and gave new life and hope. She soon made her presence felt in the camp, and purified the blasphemy-laden air. The whole tone was raised, and the most hardened sinners were ashamed to be base in that pure presence. Religious observances were enforced, and with a squad of chanting monks at the head, the army started with the provisions for the starving folk of Orleans.

The old generals were quite willing to benefit by the enthusiasm, the new life inspired by the maid, but had no idea of taking her generalship seriously. She directed them to guide her straight to Orleans, but as they had been demoralized by the ever-victorious English, they adopted the more cautious tactics, and brought her before Orleans on the wrong side of the river! On discovering the trick Joan gave those generals a bit of her mind, and they soon learned that the wisest head among them was foolish compared with the heaven-guided maid. The army could do nothing; the boats were far down the river and the wind was adverse, so that they could not come up to ferry the provisions across to the starving people in the town. Joan sent the army back to Blois, the nearest bridge by which it could cross to the Orleans side of the river, prophesying that the wind would change, which it did. The boats came up, and Joan and some of the generals went with a convoy of provisions into Orleans in spite of the overwhelming force of the English.

The maid did not wait for the army to return; she at once summoned the English to depart. "Her letter," says Count de Denois, "was sent to Lord Talbot. From that hour the English—who up to that time could, I affirm, with two hundred of their men, have put to rout eight hundred or a thousand of ours—were unable, with all their power, to resist four hundred or five hundred French; they had to be driven into their forts, where they took refuge, and from whence they dared not come forth."

SHE ACCOMPLISHED REMARKABLE THINGS.

On Joan's army returning from Blois, she went out to meet it, and all passed into Orleans, right under the hostile guns, the English being too much dazed to molest them. Then Joan, with her marvelous dash and go, and in spite of all the cautious counsels of her marshals, attacked these terrible forts one after another, and carried them in a few days. On one occasion she was wounded, as she had long foretold; but, although she cried like a girl, she continued to fight until the bastille was taken. She received the wound while mounting a scaling-ladder. Whenever her men recoiled from their terrible task, she would put herself at their head with her white banner, and this gave new life and courage to her men, and seemed to paralyze her foes. What all the generals of France had pronounced impossible, that girl had done in four days! After the fall of the great fortress the Tourelles, Talbot and his English evacuated all the other bastilles, and left the French masters of all. Thus was raised the great siege of Orleans!

After reporting these glorious results to Charles, and after a battle with his timorous councilors, Joan was permitted to begin the second great task of her mission. This was the reduction of the strongholds on the Loire. This amazing campaign, lasting only a few days, ended with the momentous battle of Patay, which broke the back of the English power; and, as Joan herself said, it was a blow from which they would not recover for a thousand years.

Then followed the third great movement. She induced the vacillating king to place himself in charge of the army, and then began the celebrated "Bloodless March" to Rheims to consummate her achievements by the crowning of her king. Although the march was through hostile country, such was the power of her name that the great towns threw open their gates on her approach, and Rheims was reached without a blow being struck. Everywhere Joan moved between adoring multitudes, eager to kiss her feet, or even the footprints of her horse. At last she attained the dearest wish of her heart, the culminating point of her angel-guided mission; she saw her king crowned in great pomp, under the shadow of her own victorious banner, with all the ancient rites and ceremonies, without which no one could be a real king in the eyes of the priest-governed people. No statesman in the whole of France had discerned the true significance of this step, and the momentous results which must follow. This was reserved for the village maiden and her spirit-guides. But it was seen later by Bedford and the Burgundians, and one of the objects of the great trial was to prove that Charles had been crowned by the aid of a witch, and so rob him of the sanctity with which these ceremonies had surrounded him.

THE KING ACKNOWLEDGING HIS INDEBTEDNESS.

During these supreme moments the newly-crowned king rose to the occasion, openly acknowledged his great indebtness to the Maid, and bade her ask for any favor which it was in his power to grant. What a vision of golden possibilities would open out before the eyes of any other mortal, given such a chance as this! But Joan of Arc simply asked that her native village might be relieved from the crushing burden of taxation. This was granted in perpetuity. What else did she ask? Nothing! except that she might be allowed to return home to her mother and her household duties. Joan crowned her king with an earthly crown, but by this sublime unselfishness she unconsciously placed a glorious diadem on her own head, as worthy of remembrance as the crown of thorns!

JOAN PLACED IN PRISON.

I must glance still more rapidly over the remaining part of her military career. The king did not grant the second request. He still had need of her services; but he was so vacillating, so surrounded by cowards, traitors, and time-servers, that little could be done. The maid wished to drive the enemy from Paris as she had driven him from the strongholds of the Loire. She was permitted to attack Paris, but before she could do little more than get wounded, she was recalled, to fret the weary months away like a caged eagle. Her Voices ordered her to stay at St. Denis, but being wounded she was taken elsewhere, against her wish. On recovering she took part in some minor movements, and was finally captured by the Burgundians. Whether or not this was through the treachery which she foresaw, and which was the only thing she feared, it is impossible to say. She was taken as a prisoner to the camp of the Duke of Burgundy, and was placed in prison, while the Duke waited for the expected ransom. But neither France nor her wretched king made any move to save her, and, after two attempts at escape, she was finally ransomed by the infamous Pierre Cauchon, Bishop of Beauvais, a miserable tool of the English, for a prince's ransom. She was taken to Rouen, in the heart of the English power, thrown into a dungeon, heavily ironed, and always kept in the presence of several brutal, common soldiers. Forty or fifty ecclesiastics were got together from various parts, especially selected for their English sympathies. One of these, a smooth-tongued villain, was allowed access to Joan's prison disguised as a cobbler. He represented himself as a priest from her own part of the country and a sympathizer with her. By this cruel trick he got her to pour out her full heart in confession. As secrets of the confessional could not be directly used, the Bishop placed himself and other witnesses at a hole in the wall so that every word could be heard, and the information thus gained was used to guide the ruthless cross-examination to which the poor girl was exposed. This is but a specimen of the cruel arts and illegalities by which an unjust verdict was obtained.

When the friendless girl was brought face to face with this packed jury of inquisitors, thirsting for her destruction, the simple grandeur of her character shone out more brightly than at almost any period of her stormy career. She was steadfast as a rock; sometimes against the storming of nearly the whole court at once. Every forensic trick, every dialectical art, was used to trip or entrap her without avail. Profound theological questions were sprung on her which would have puzzled many of the churchmen themselves to answer without impaling themselves on the horns of a dilemma. For six long days the battle raged between the one and the many, the unadvised prisoner baffling all her cruel judges. The populace began to laugh over the bishop's repeated defeats, so, for very shame, the next nine examinations were held in private. These had like results; and all the examinations were only preliminary fishings to obtain matter to bring against her at the Trial in Ordinary, which lasted almost as long.

DUMFOUNDED THE COURT.

I can only give one specimen of the concentrated wisdom, the caution, and the simple directness of her replies. She had said: "Without the grace of God I could do nothing." Her most wily questioner saw an opening, and, after beating about the bush to throw her off her guard, suddenly sprang this question upon her: "Are you in a state of grace?" This was a terrible question, as the Scriptures say one cannot know this, and if she had said "yes" she would have been guilty of presumption and spiritual pride, and had she said "no," it would have been still more disastrous. The court held its breath, and one righteous judge called out that the accused was not bound to answer such a question. He was shouted down, while Joan calmly gave that immortal reply: "If I be not in a state of grace, I pray God place me in it; if I be in it, I pray God keep me so." This reply so dumfounded the court that there was little more questioning that day.

CONDEMNED TO PERPETUAL IMPRISONMENT.

On one occasion Joan was brought into the torture chamber, but the sight of the executioner and threats of the rack failed to shake her. At length, owing to endless misrepresentations and distortions of the evidence which was sent to Paris, a hostile verdict was pronounced by the judges. The poor girl, thoroughly worn out and ill, was brought face to face with the awful faggot-pile and the stake. While the sentence of death and excommunication was being read, two treacherous priests were beguiling her with lying promises that all would be well if she would recant and sign a schedule of Abjuration. A short document was read to her, which she repeated. Dazed and scarcely knowing what she did, she consented to sign it; but here again she was tricked, and a much longer document, utterly condemning herself, was substituted, and a priest guiding her hand, she signed that. She was condemned to perpetual imprisonment in the ecclesiastical prisons. She was given woman's attire, and forbidden to resume her man's dress. Then every promise was shamelessly violated, and she was sent back to her old dungeon to be always in the presence of brutal soldiers.

The English were indignant with the Bishop for having allowed them to be balked of their prey; but he assured them that he had her in a trap from which she could not escape. During the night her woman's garments were taken away and the forbidden man's clothes substituted. Then she had to endure not only brutal insults, but personal assaults also. She had no option, and so resumed the prohibited dress. This was a fatal relapse; she was taken to the market-place, condemned by the gloating bishop, excommunicated, and handed over to the secular authorities for the death sentence. But before this was given she was seized by the soldiers and hurried to the dreadful stake. On the terrible news being conveyed to Joan in her prison she momentarily broke down, and had her own Gethsemane agony, but recovered her self-possession, bravely reaffirmed the truth of her revelations, and died as worthily as she had lived; and one of her last thoughts was for the personal safety of the priest who was holding the cross before her eyes. She died calling on the name of Jesus, and it is said that this hallowed name was written that day in tongues of flame!

Thus passed this saintly soul, who came to this blood-and-tear-drenched earth like a vision of a glorified humanity, holding aloft God's image in an age of measureless baseness.

We English figure badly in this business, but we had seen the prize, striven for through a hundred years of war, dashed from our hands just as we were about to grasp it, by this heaven-sent maid whom we thought a daughter of the devil. If our share of this great crime was bad the part played by the French was even worse. What of that wretched king to whom the maid had given a crown and a kingdom, during all those months while the Duke of Burgundy was waiting for her to be ransomed? What of the French people who idolized the maid as the savior of France? Where were they, and where were their sous and francs which should have been poured forth for her deliverance? And what of Pierre Cauchon, Bishop of Beauvais, and his crew of cringing ecclesiastics, whose villainy was made the more despicable by the slime of hypocrisy which covered all? No wonder that outraged Nature brought most of them to an untimely end!

LIKE CHRIST IN THE TEMPLE.

But the surrounding blackness only enhances the brightness, the purity of the flawless maid, whom prosperity could not spoil nor adversity daunt; who never ceased to be a true and tender-hearted woman, sympathizing with all suffering, and who after one of her greatest victories was found upon the stricken field, consoling and confessing a dying enemy, and he a common soldier! (Cheers.) Think of this simple girl of seventeen making her way through leagues of hostile country to the court and feet of her uncrowned king, removing by a message from heaven all his harassing doubts as to his legitimacy, and giving him other impressive signs! Think of her for three long weeks, facing, like Christ in the temple, the doctors learned in the law, astounding them by her answers, and convincing them of the genuineness of her heavenly credentials! Think of that roaring, blaspheming camp at Blois, where she had to overcome by her example, in generals and men alike, the demoralization of a hundred years of defeat! Her Voices had said to her: "Daughter of God, go on, go on, go on;" and she went on, a veritable war-goddess, turning poltroons into men, and cowards into heroes.

HER SPLENDID GENERALSHIP.

Louis Kossuth said: "Consider this unique and imposing distinction. Since the writing of human history began, Joan of Arc is the only person, of either sex, who has held supreme command of the military forces of a nation at the age of seventeen!" And right worthily did she use them. Think of the great campaigns of the Alexanders, the Caesars, the Napoleons, trained soldiers all, fighting with trained men against their inferiors; while Joan had to fight, with men demoralized by disheartening defeat, against the sturdy British, backed by the glamor of a hundred years of unbroken victory! Think of that, and you will see that Joan's work of raising the siege of Orleans, reducing the great strongholds of the Loire, fighting the decisive battle of Patay, and then conducting the "Bloodless March" to Rheims, constitutes a more brilliant achievement than can be claimed for any of the world's greatest generals; and it was all accomplished by the village maiden at an age at which the great soldiers had done little or nothing.

But we shall miss the moral of this strange, eventful history if we suppose that these great victories were achieved by enthusiasm alone. The ablest judges of the time speak of Joan's splendid generalship, and the skilful disposition of her forces; and her wonderful handling of artillery. Her statesmanlike insight was equally remarkable, and she was the first to discern the idea of true Nationhood for France. It is well asked: "Whence came the inspiration of this marvelous child?"

Although Saint Catherine and Saint Margaret were more often with her, and Saint Michael more rarely, Joan said that they came from God at the prayers of Saint Louis and Saint Charlemagne. This is probably the secret of it all. The other saints were surely media for the master mind of Charles the Great. And it is curious to note in this connection that at the outset of her public career her Voices told her that an ancient sword was hidden behind the altar of Saint Catherine's, at Fierbois. Nothing was known of this, but a search was made and the sword found buried a little way in the ground. This was given to the maid, who carried it as her symbol of authority. The belief was that it had belonged to Charlemagne!

The death of Joan of Arc was as fruitful as her life. The great work she had so gloriously begun was finished by other hands just at the time she had foretold. She was most truly a prophetess, who predicted nearly everything that happened, even to her own wounds and her early death. Again and again she urged the vacillating Charles to make use of her services while there was yet time, as she would only last for a short year. One thing alone was mercifully hidden from her, and that was the manner of her death; the fact that she should ascend to heaven by a chariot of fire!

It was my intention to discuss the problem of the Voices, the Spirit Guides, of the inspired maiden, but neither time nor inclination permits me to undertake the task. For Spiritualists it is unnecessary; and for others, what can I say that I have not already said? An hour's contemplation of that pure and beautiful, that wonderful life, which shines like a star through the dusk of the ages, is worth more than a whole course of sermons, or scientific lectures, for those who have the inner eye, the inner ear. Those who think they have them not may rest assured that they are mistaken; these faculties are but latent, and if they are only allowed to grow; then there will be no need of argument to induce men to accept the statements of that embodiment of truth—Joan of Arc.

That her guides should have appeared to her as saints whose names were familiar to her was to be expected; to have appeared in any other form would have defeated their great object. That these spirits were not materializations is evident from the fact that Joan saw Michael accompanied by a great light and by a heavenly host—showing that her spiritual sight was opened, that she was clairvoyant.

Mr. Myers' treatment of this great subject is most unsatisfactory. He throughout couples Joan's Voices with that of Socrates; but that of the Grecian philosopher was purely negative, warning him of what he should not do, while those of Joan were positive to an amazing extent, urging her to do seeming impossibilities, and just the most unlikely things in the world that a simple village maiden would have thought of doing. To attribute these things to "uprushes" from the sub-conscious self increases our difficulties, and makes inordinate demands on our credulity. We are also brought face to face with this staggering fact. By this theory the subliminal self is a veritable demigod compared with our conscious selves; then why, in the name of all that is wonderful, should it be such an incorrigible liar, and instead of showing itself in its true colors should always assert itself to be a departed spirit, and give bogus proofs of personal identity? Verily, these folks strain at a gnat and swallow a whale. (Applause.)

The Spiritualist's explanation is the only one which covers the facts and does not land us in insuperable difficulties. Even if the visions were "subjective" they were discerned by the maid's opened spiritual vision, or were caused telepathically by the spirits who claimed to be her guides. And we may fairly regard Joan of Arc as the greatest medium, the grandest Spiritualist of all. If she brought us no new revelation of Truth, what a glorious revelation she herself was of the possibilities of human nature when in touch with the spirit world! She was the "Personification of Patriotism," and of the extremes of sweet simplicity with the highest grandeur of soul, worthy to be thought of with Him who is regarded as the Great Exemplar; worthy not only of the impending canonization of the Vatican, but of the more glorious canonization in Humanity's innermost heart of hearts.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. C. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T.B., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

To the Spiritualists of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri.

We expect to turn our faces westward March 1. We desire to hear from societies and individuals who would like our services.

Please write us at once if you would like our services, or we may have passed you by before we hear from you. Address us until March 10, Rochester, Ind. Home address 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y.

N. S. A. Missionaries.

PSYCHOPATHY, OR SPIRIT HEALING.—A class in Psychopathy, or Spirit Healing, under the instruction of the spirit of Dr. Benj. Rush, through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, is about to be formed. For further information inquire of Mr. Wm. Richmond, 3802 Ridge avenue, Rogers Park, Chicago, Illinois.

Several of our subscribers want the address of Barton Stewart. Will he please give it? He should always attach his street number to the articles he writes.

J. M. Bartscherer writes from Dayton, Ohio: "We are still holding our meetings regularly every Sunday afternoon in Diester Post hall. We have had the assistance of our president, Frank M. Brown, Judge Thomson, W. V. Nicum and Dr. Samuel Toman. They are all good speakers. So you see we are at work, and like the leaven in the meal, hoping some day the whole lump may be leavened."

Little Marguerite Moll, daughter of C. G. Moll, of Pittsburg, a child of unusual brightness, 5 years old and the pet of the hotel guests, who, with her mother, is wintering in Augusta, Ga., has been marvelously cured of paralysis by waters from the Lourdes springs, a healing fountain in France. A few days ago the child's lower limbs were stiffened and deadened by a sudden paralytic stroke and physicians pronounced her case grave. Mr. Moll was called from Pittsburg while the child lay on the bed, unable to move. Father Wilkinson, of the Sacred Heart church, called and persuaded the mother to dismiss the physician and send for a vial of the water from the famous Lourdes springs. The child was given some to drink and fell asleep. One drink appears to have cured her, and to-day, when her father arrived, the little patient was playing in the hotel corridor with other children. The water which Father Wilkinson gave the child was brought to Augusta by Miss Agnes O'Dowd.—Pittsburg (Pa.) Leader. The water from Lourdes accomplishes cures, no doubt, through faith, aided by the magnetic influence of spirits who are interested in promoting the prosperity of the Catholic church.

Rozetta Gott writes from Wellington, Ohio: "After battling against great obstacles we have gotten where there is hope of forming a society. Our greatest trouble was in securing a permanent place of meeting, but before this appears in print we hope to have both a hall and a charter. Mrs. R. C. Baird has been the moving spirit and in every sense of the word a missionary. Sunday, Feb. 28, we had a good meeting, Mrs. Schauss, of Toledo, helping the good cause, giving us one of her good lectures under spirit guidance."

Gainesville, Ga., Feb. 22.—The family of W. J. Sanders, who lives in Forsyth county, not very far from this city, has this week been disturbed by some most unusual manifestations of apparently supernatural and ghostly nature. One night recently, while all the family were together and everything was quiet, a rap was heard on the door. The call was answered, but no one was found. At short intervals during the night the same sound was heard at the door. Mr. Sanders was up all night, but no sign of a person was discovered. The next night the same thing happened and Mr. Sanders lost his sleep again. On the third night five of his neighbors spent the night with him and sat up. The rappings continued and no effort at a solution of the mystery revealed a thing. One visitor went so far as to stay a while outside on the porch while the rappings were in progress, but the sounds only seemed louder than ever. The unusual occurrence has caused much interest and speculation and no one so far has been able to make a satisfactory explanation.

Frank T. Ripley has been re-engaged for the Sundays of March at Findlay, Ohio. He has April, May and June open for engagements to lecture and give spirit messages. Address him at Findlay, Ohio, for March, and then at Tipton, Ind.

Charles Barnes, the trumpet medium, is holding circles at the home of A. T. Levick, M. D., Mt. Vernon, Ill. Mr. Barnes thinks it would be a good field there for Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague to do some missionary work.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

VICTOR VOGEL'S ORCHESTRA AND BAND.—First-class music furnished on all occasions. Office and residence, 4217 Champlain avenue, Chicago, Ill. Telephone Oakland 1111. Mr. Vogel is a well-known Spiritualist of Chicago and a natural born musician. His orchestra will be most excellent at dances and entertainments given by Spiritualists, and will add much to the interest of the occasion. As a special feature of his musical work, he introduces many original novelties—imitations of birds, etc.

Mrs. Florence White, of Boston, Mass., noted platform test medium, is to leave California for the East again, the first of April. She would like to make engagements with societies in San Francisco, Denver and St. Louis, for April, May and June. Address her at Sortelle, Los Angeles Co., Cal.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Our last monthly party and masquerade ball was a great success. Over 300 people joined in the fun and entertainment. Prof. Vogel gave us fine music, and all that masked received a prize and were made happy. Saturday evening, March 26, will be our next party at Lakeside Hall, and it will be a Palmists' Party, for all mediums and psychics to give readings and advertise. About 15 booths will be provided, and all who purchase tickets will receive a free reading from their choice of readers. Many have promised to take part, but a few booths remain. The last Sunday in March this society will hold an anniversary, both in the afternoon and evening. The best talent has been secured. All wishing programs should address me, the manager, at No. 44 East 31st street. Our Russian winter will soon be over. This society will hold meetings all summer, and bring as many as possible into the knowledge of this truth, and demonstrate that we are spiritual beings now, and have wonderful powers that we little dream of. Walter DeVoe gave us a fine lecture on the Power of the Astral Body, Sunday evening, and will speak again, Sunday evening, March 20. The Progressive Thinker has a host of friends, and all are anxious to enjoy its table of rich spiritual food."

Vindication for Mr. Challen—The Insurance Agent Is Acquitted by the Criminal Grand Jury.—Charles Challen, charged with the wrongful obtaining of insurance, was found not guilty in Judge Tyler's court this morning. The jurors were ready to report almost as soon as they left their seats. The verdict entirely exonerates Mr. Challen. "Gentlemen of the jury," said Judge Tyler, "your verdict meets with the full approval of this court. I thank you." Loud applause greeted the verdict. Mr. Challen was surrounded by relatives and friends and congratulated on his vindication. The back of the prosecution was broken when the defense introduced a paper signed by Mrs. Bertha Stamm, prosecuting witness in the case, in which she stated that the affidavit signed by her against Challen was not true and that the things she had stated were false, and the only reason she made it was to escape prosecution herself.—News Bee, Toledo, Ohio. In reference to the above, Mrs. Nina Edwards, of Toledo, writes: "Mr. and Mrs. Challen are prominent Spiritualists of Toledo, Ohio, Mrs. Challen being a public worker, giving lectures and tests and is also famous as a trumpet medium."

Dr. P. S. George writes from Lincoln, Neb.: "Spiritualism seems to be gaining in popularity in our midst. Max Hoffman is now making his home here for the winter, and is busy from morning to night. He holds public meetings every Sunday evening to good audiences, and two seances during the week. I occupy a suite of rooms adjoining him, and he seems to be the busiest man in the city. One thing to be said to his credit, is that he is never "broke," therefore does not have to borrow money of his friends to bridge him over, or to get out of town."

Central Lake, Mich.—Since the death of M. W. Newkirk, the Central Lake postmaster who was taken to the asylum at Kalamazoo, it is said that he consulted a clairvoyant last summer, who gave a reading of his past life and then foretold his death. He told Mr. Newkirk his life was short, before April 1, 1904, he would pass out: "I see you are very ill along the fore part of the winter, you grow worse, I seem to see you walking around very strange and wild, your mind is affected, you are excited, you are bad. I see now near you, a big fire right at your town a building burning, the people rush out quick; some of the many people also get caught in the fire. You see the fire. Now, I see you looking so strange, you are wild, you can't control yourself. I see some people handling you and taking you to a large building. Before April 1, I see you laid out in a robe, you will be a dead man by April, 1904."

Mrs. Abram D. Davis of 436 Ashland avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., tells a strange story. Her husband, who was a prominent merchant, died ten days ago, and she, in accordance with the customs of the Jewish religion, retired to a mourning chamber with her sister-in-law, Mrs. H. Friedenberg, of Bradford, Pa. The period of religious mourning expired at 9 o'clock yesterday morning, and just at that hour a bird as large as a sparrow and as black as night flew out of the gas grate, which was burning, and alighted at Mrs. Davis' feet. Both women tried to scare the bird away by waving their hands at it, but it stayed three minutes, hopped about on a table and finally vanished through the front door. Mrs. Davis, who had been grief stricken because of the death of her husband, to whom she had been married thirty years, became cheerful at once. She tells her friends that it bore a message direct from God telling her that she should be comforted and that all would be well. An examination of the chimney showed that the bird must have come down the hot chimney through a hole about an inch square. Small blackbirds are foreign to these parts, and cynical persons say it must have been a sparrow with a coat of soot. But Mrs. Davis' story has created a stir in the fashionable district where she lives. One of the persons who saw the bird is a Mr. Bornstein, of 121 West 114th street, New York, and he corroborates the story of its strange movements. Rabbi Aaron of Temple Beth Zion has heard the story. He expresses delight at Mrs. Davis' comfort.

J. P. Klug, of Cleveland, Ohio, sends us in subscriptions, etc., $18.75. W. W. Arnett, of Alexandria, Ind., sends us a club and $13.95. Thanks, brothers, for your kindly interest.

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, after filling his engagement at Muncie, Ind., for the month of February, to good acceptance, has returned to his home, 533 W. Madison street, Chicago, and is now open for further service in the cause, or for funerals, weddings, etc. He should be kept constantly busy as his abilities render him highly deserving, and his lectures are of high order, instructive, scholarly and spiritual.

R. F. Livermore writes from Corry, Pa.: "People of our city, who are interested in the grand truths of Spiritualism, have enjoyed a grand treat by having Mr. C. B. Nichols, of Andover Ohio, the materializing and slate-writing medium, with us for one week. Mr. Nichols held several seances, which were surprisingly successful, the manifestations were very fine, furnishing opportunity for friends to meet friends, those who had been separated by so-called death, and to exchange loving greetings, proving beyond a doubt that those who have left the mortal form still live and are actively interested in the welfare of those who are left and waiting. Mr. Nichols insists on strict test conditions for his seances, precluding all possibility of fraud, and no one attending can entertain the least suspicion. We most confidently recommend Mr. Nichols to the friends of our cause."

Louise E. Zimmerman writes from Elmira, N. Y: "Our meetings are creating a widespread interest among the people of our city and many the remarks and compliments do we hear upon the discourses given through the mediumship of Brother Edgerly, who remains with us this month, but will be followed by Mrs. Kate R. Stiles for the month of April, as he goes to Boston, Mass., at that time. At a recent Thursday evening meeting (which we devoted to tests and messages) when Bro. Edgerly was giving the tests, a lady present remarked to the friend who accompanied her, 'He knows all these people he is talking to,' when he immediately turned to her and told her of an old aunt who had passed away in the West (no one here but herself knowing anything about it), and much more which astounded her. It goes without saying, she changed her opinion, and is somewhat frightened, which is useless, as our loved ones will never injure us, but they do cause us to think and know. 'It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die,' when an opportunity is given them, under the right conditions. The members of the society here are working harmoniously and hope to do much good for the enlightenment of humanity and the upbuilding of our cause as time advances."

Henrietta Straub writes from Port Orange, Fla.: "Though The Progressive Thinker be my most valued friend, having done more to clear and strengthen my spiritual vision than I can express in words, yet undismissable duties have lately so much monopolized my scanty spare time, that I read Miss Batchelor's article in The Progressive Thinker only some days ago. The striking similarity of some of her views with my own expressed Jan. 30, prompts me to ask, Is this a new proof of the existence of a vast fountain of thought, where incarnate spirits may drink at the same time, unknown to their respective personalities? That excarnate spirits find avenues of approach under conditions that have nothing to do with a mortal's individual character, has been to me a settled fact for some time; but, I confess, I lacked the courage to declare it openly, until the impulse became too strong to suppress it. It certainly requires courage to advance a thought that strikes against established opinions. Miss Batchelor has done it more forcibly and elaborately than myself, and her words filled my soul with joy and hope and thankfulness. May she kindly accept my warm, appreciative greetings."

A fine audience gathered at 1565 Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, Sunday evening, Feb. 21, the home of the Church of the Students of Nature. After music, solo and congregational and reading of a poem, President Warne of the Illinois State Association, addressed the meeting, closing by presenting the society with a charter as auxiliary to the State body and welcoming it to the duties and responsibilities of that relation. Christening of two infant boys followed, conducted by the pastor, Mrs. M. Schumacher, who substituted white carnations for the sacred waters of church fonts and made use of ceremonials fitting to the occasion. Mrs. Noyes, a visitor at the meeting, closed with welcome remarks and some astrological readings for children in the audience. The charter members of this auxiliary were as follows: Mrs. M. Schumacher, Mr. A. Merkel, Mrs. Goetze, G. H. Zielow, Albert A. Stowell, Millie D. Richards, Dr. A. Rasmussen, Henry Smith, W. F. Schumacher. On merging with the State Association the society surrendered its old charter direct from the N. S. A. Mrs. Schumacher was presented with a handsome bouquet from Mr. and Mrs. Goetze.

The Brooklyn (N. Y.) Standard has the following: "A new church was organized last night and articles of incorporation were duly filed to-day by ex-Judge Abram H. Dailey, who is one of the founders and prime workers in the movement. The new church will be known as the First Spiritual Church of Brooklyn. Its founders and incorporators have adopted a formulated creed which was enunciated at the meeting last night and accepted unanimously. It is based on Scriptural injunctions and precepts taken from the New Testament, and includes the Sermon on the Mount. The creed is a codification of passages of Scripture bearing directly on spirit. The fundamental doctrine of the new church is spirit communion with living mortals. The Rev. May S. Pepper, a Spiritualist medium, has been chosen as pastor of the church, and services will be held in the Aurora Grata Cathedral on Bedford avenue. The incorporators of the new church are composed for the most part of members of the Church of the Fraternity of Soul Communion, which was founded by Ira Moore Courliss and which was a prosperous organization until the death of Mr. Courliss last summer, when it began to disintegrate. It had no formal articles of faith. It has been decided to disband the old church and form the new one with as many as can subscribe to the creed. Mr. Dailey, assisted by Dr. Pepper, codified the articles of faith which were adopted last night. George D. R. Hubbard called the meeting to order, and A. R. Robertson was chosen clerk. After the 'enunciation' was read by Mr. Dailey and accepted, the constitution and by-laws which are to govern the body were read and adopted. The election of officers was then proceeded with."

J. FRANK BAXTER.—One by one the valiant pioneers of our cause are passing hence to the Land of the Everliving beyond the mortal. The latest to answer the call of the Messenger is J. Frank Baxter, a name known wherever Spiritualists congregate, and wherever our gospel has been preached in this broad land. Long and honorably associated with the lecture platform as a speaker of proven ability and a test medium of rare powers, our ascended brother rendered noble service in the days when our path was not the comparatively smooth roadway of to-day. Also, as a musician and vocalist his voice lent a charm to his platform duties, which proved an additional attraction to the multitudes gathered to listen to his utterances. His abilities, combined with a notable and attractive personality made him naturally a remarkable figure in our ranks. As our readers will recall it was stated in the Banner of February 13, our good brother was taken sick. He was hopeful, but the attack of typhoid fever proved too strong in character, and on Sunday last, Feb. 28, he passed quietly away from the earthly body, at the Frost hospital, Chelsea, leaving an only daughter behind, Mrs. Barron. When he was about 30 years old Mr. Baxter began to gain reputation as a lecturer on Spiritualistic subjects, and soon came to devote his entire time to that work. He made several tours over the United States and through Canada as a lecturer, singer and medium. The departure of our co-worker will create a vacancy it will be difficult, for the moment, to adequately fill. He will be greatly missed by a very large circle of friends, and fellow-laborers. We may not mourn his loss, for, after many days of faithful service, he has earned that rest which change of scene, and entrance into higher realms, confer upon us all. He rejoins a beloved wife, meets again old-time friends, and learns by actual life therein, how real is the world of the Summerland, and its people, for whom he strove so freely, and who guided him so lovingly in his work for our cause.—Banner of Light.

Emily E. Philp writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union is still holding its regular meetings. We enjoyed a fine lecture by Dr. J. H. Randall, Feb. 28. We expect good speakers through March, and the first of April Rev. Harry J. Moore begins an engagement with us as a permanent pastor. We know his many friends will be glad to welcome him again as one of us."

Mrs. Nora E. Hill writes: "There will be a Social held at my home, 750 W. Lake street, on Saturday evening, Mar. 12. There will be a grand, good time. Luncheon will be served, of home cooking. Collection of 25 cents. All will be made welcome. Come and bring your friends and have a good time."

Dr. Ballard writes: "Those who assembled at the Church of Higher Forces, Douglas Hall, Indiana avenue and 35th street, Sunday, Feb. 21, to listen to the thoughts expressed by by Dr. Walter DeVoe on the new thought, were highly edified. J. W. Caldwell spoke to us last Sunday on Spiritualism. Next Sunday, March 6, Prof. Marsh will discourse on the problem of life. If the problem of life were lived true to nature or as God has dictated, there would be a better demonstration of truth among mankind than there is today, deception would lessen, and charity unfold. The ladies of this church gave their eleventh social last Saturday night, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Aitken, 253 East Thirty-first street. We had a lovely time. The twelfth social, which will be of unusual interest, will take place March 13. Come and commune with your spirit friends and listen to the sweet strains of music."

H. F. Coates writes: "Feb. 28, a large and appreciative audience greeted Mr. T. W. Sherk at Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. While Mr. Sherk has not been on the Spiritualistic platform a great while; the thought is not new to him, and all who have had the pleasure of listening to him cannot help but say his reasoning is logical and presented in such a manner that it leaves a lasting impression. Dr. Freedman, the Australian Healer, sang for us and gave demonstration of healing. His work was well received and many gave evidence of being relieved. The doctor will sing and demonstrate again for us March 13; so bring your sick and let them be treated free. Messages are always given. Conference at 3 p. m. is well attended, and very interesting. So come to our meetings and obtain spiritual food."

Geo. Adkins writes from South Dakota: "In The Progressive Thinker, No. 745, received yesterday, I notice the reference to what Prof. Delitsch says about the 'findings in recent excavations in Mesopotamia,' and I fully agree with him in his objections in reference to teaching children the fables that are taught about such things that he names. I know too well what the struggle has been in my own life to rid my mind of the same kind of trash. In my childhood I was taught all of it, also with the terrors of an eternal hell hanging over me if I did not profess to believe it. If at the time that my ever active and vivid memory flies back to, I had had the privileges and pleasures that your ever Progressive Thinker gives every week, I would have been basking in the glorious sunlight of spiritual progress many years ago, instead of having to wade and struggle through the theological quagmire which that old popish aristocratic church built up, with which to gull the flock while they were robbed of their fleece."

Alice C. Barry writes from Clinton, Iowa: "I have just completed my seventh week as speaker and medium for the Philosophical Society of Spiritualists, and for the present will answer calls for funerals within reasonable distance of Clinton. Address General Delivery, Post Office. I am trying in my own simple way and without any flourish of trumpets, to tell the wonderful story of life, love and progress that is revealed to us in the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. I only hope that some good is being done; some lives made more helpful; some hearts less frieghted with sorrows. I love this work. My heart and soul is in it, and because of the light and knowledge it has revealed to me I am glad to be able to bring even a little of it into the lives of others. It seems to me that Spiritualists of all others should be a happy, harmonious people. We know that death is but the gateway of life, and that the gate not only swings inward but outward so that those who enter may also return to us. We know we have not only this world in which to pursue our investigations, but we have the glorious privilege of lifting the curtain that hangs between time and eternity, and gathering up some of the gems of truth that lie scattered along the shore of the hereafter."

If there are any Spiritualists at Huron, S. D., or Watertown, S. D., will they kindly write to Mrs. Wm. Beach, Vandervoort, S. D., or Henry Laclaire, Jolly, S. D., or both.

Niles, Mich.—George F. B. Collins, a local attorney, who had been seriously ill, went into a trance, and his relatives, supposing him dead, summoned an undertaker. When he placed the remains in a casket several hours later the undertaker discovered perceptible indications of returning life, and medical aid was summoned. The patient now bids fair to recover.

Geo. H. Brooks closed a very pleasant and successful month's engagement with the Buffalo (N. Y.) society the last Sunday in February. He spoke in East Aurora, N. Y., the first Sunday in March. The second Sunday is not taken. The last two Sundays he lectures for Mr. T. M. Locke's society in Philadelphia, Pa. He would like to lecture during the week at different points in the state; also make engagements for April, or a part of it. Address him at 605 North Seventh street, care T. M. Locke, Philadelphia, Pa.

On Sunday, March 13, at 8 p. m., H. F. Arnold will lecture at Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Subject, "Casting Out the Demon."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be favored by a lecture from Dr. Agnes Chester See, editor of Higher Thought, on March 13. Come if you want to get something good. Our meetings are growing, and we promise something good at every meeting. Services every Sunday evening, 7:45, at 323 East 55th street. Our card parties are still popular. Our next one, a progressive euchre party, will be held at the club room, 474 East 55th street, near Greenwood ovenue, on March 15, in the evening. The game will begin promptly at 8. There are to be six pieces of hand-painted china given as prizes. Score cards 25 cents, for both gentlemen and ladies. Light refreshments."

Hattie E. Sherwood writes from Worcester, Mass.: "We are regretting very deeply here in the East, the death of J. Frank Baxter, of Chelsea, Mass., who passed out after four weeks' sickness of typhoid fever."

W. W. Aber writes: "I desire to inform my many friends through the columns of The Progressive Thinker that I will be in Chattanooga, Tenn., the remainder of this month (March), then I return to my home, No. 3422 East 10th street, Kansas City, Mo."

Mrs. Chas. Ingram writes from Renovo, Pa.: "Chas. Theo. Schneider is again working hard to bring people into the cause of Spiritualism. His lectures and test work is instructive as well as convincing. He came here from Harrisburg, and returns to Williamsport, and then he starts for other places in the field. I consider him an honest, earnest and truthful worker."

Lila Powers, secretary, writes from Wichita, Kans.: "We have organized a Wichita Spiritual Society and elected the following officers: President, Minnie Martindale; secretary, Lila Powers; treasurer, Hubert Child. Mediums and speakers please take notice. We are soliciting engagements."

O. H. Maxham writes from Ohio: "I cannot say enough of the paper's value. I look forward to its coming as much as I look for my three meals a day. I was more than interested to read all the articles from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, for I was reared and always lived three miles from Lily Dale. I sat by the side of my dear old uncle and listened to Mr. Howe over forty years ago. I also remember Liby Low about the same period."

Mrs. Dr. Hurster, medium and healer by suggestion or (spirit power) and author, has been seriously ill at her home in St. Louis, Mo. Mrs. Hurster is a well-known Spiritualist, and is the mother of the famous little boy medium, Willie Hurster. She is now recovering, and feels a benefit from all those who have been ably assisting in her way of believing, to restore her to her better way of life.

A Sermonette.

Last Christmas morning, while indulging in a few moments' perfect rest, and listening to the solemn chimes of the church-bells, the following words entered my mind:

Why hail and adore one savior, when thousands are needed and can be had without claims of adoration, only wanting appreciation and support?

That one savior was only a foreshadowing produced by the great mind of humanity—a seed from which will start a large crop of saviors, redeeming the world from vice and misery.

Why wrestle over questions that can be solved at some later hour, and postpone the urgent ones of to-day?

The conditions on earth determine the conditions in the spirit world.

Criminal spirits will diminish in number proportionate to the diminishing of criminal mortals.

Obsession will stop when the growing mental and moral strength of humanity forbids obsession.

It is not from the top, but from the foundation we must begin buildings, and this consists in the moral and social conditions of mankind, which cannot be separated.

It is ridiculous to preach high principles to men who toil from sunrise to sunset, with scarcely any breathing-time between. Their gospel is: "Work in order to keep alive!" On the other hand it would be absolute lack of wisdom to raise the man from the slums to a life of ease and luxury.

Sybaritic life weakens the marrow of mankind, physically, mentally and morally. But all should have a chance to gain the right medium—a decent existence that leaves room for a healthy physical and moral development, and grants individuals some quiet moments now and then in which they may listen to their own minds and ask themselves the great question. "Whence do we come, and whither are we bound? and which is the safest road for us to travel?"

Phenomena-hunting alone cannot satisfy thinking people any more, and the spiritual philosophy should occupy at last its rightful place in the front ranks of all ethical endeavor, as a safe, yet far-sighted guide through this life as well as the next one. Rise, ye "would-be saviors" of a crime and misery stricken humanity! Pledge yourselves to the work of true salvation this very day! Do not work only with the mouth or pen, but in whatever form you can.

Expand, ye narrow minds and closely-tied purses; but do not stop at alms and momentary emotion; unite and work with a will at the temple of human brotherhood, the only true, the only rational salvation of mankind!

TWO METHODS.

Soul Mediumship and Mind Mediumship

We recognize two methods of communicating with spirits. One as being reliable, the other as being unreliable. One as moralizing, the other as demoralizing. One as promoting education and intelligence, the other as retarding education and promoting ignorance. One as leading to health and happiness, to cheerful, vivifying light and a longer stay in the flesh; the other as leading to sickness and misery; to dismal, blinding darkness and a shorter stay in the form. One we term soul mediumship, the other mind mediumship. In soul mediumship the message is delivered through the uncreated soul; in mind mediumship it is delivered through the created mind, a very important distinction to truth seekers and all who would be healthy, happy and free from obsession in the practice of mediumship

Mind mediumship then signifies that the messages are given through the mind, or lower self, that was formed during the growth of the material body.

In this process the operating spirit functions largely in the region of the basilar brain, frequently resulting in obsession and a long train of concomitant evils. No one was ever Christed in the constant practice of this method. The reasons are apparent. In consequence of the impure tendency of the mind, it becomes the receptacle of impure thoughts, and therefore a fit channel, and the only one, for the passage of impure and unreliable messages to earth's children by undeveloped spirits. Those who continuously permit such messages to pass through the mind, will sooner or later become diseased physically and morally, thus approaching misery and ruin too fearful for pleasant description.

In the use of such mediumship the communicating spirit cannot deliver his message accurately while the medium is thinking on another subject, as can be done in the use of the proper method. He must, therefore, subdue the mind or hold it in abeyance, or the message will be greatly modified if not altogether interrupted, whatever its nature may be. This frequent cessation of thought vibration makes conditions for the injection of impure sentiments often resulting in lasting lodgment and luxuriant growth, which is antagonistic to physical, moral, spiritual and mental development.

The preceding paragraphs furnish an explanation of the incoherent thoughts, ignorant expressions, numerous misrepresentations, descriptions and barefaced lies given through mediums, otherwise apparently very good instruments.

No wonder the morally developed Biblical mediums looked with suspicion on the method, uttering condemnatory language, and no wonder that all truly spiritual and highly developed psychics in every age have denounced and anathematized it in the severest terms.

The phase of mediumship called mental belongs under this head, because the message, instead of going to the soul first, goes directly to the mind where all errors originate that are not injected by an external evil influence. But there is a phase out of its place here, similar to this called mental, which is a misnomer, because the message first enters the soul and then passes to the mind and is therefore soul or intuitive mediumship; but the passage is so rapid that often the medium does not recognize and understand the process.

Do not conclude that the motives of all practicing mind mediumship are hereby impeached. By no means. Many very good, honest persons who would not do a mean thing, and detest a falsehood or anything degrading, have fallen into this method and continue in it, because they know no other and hence their constant struggle with adverse and annoying influences. This writing is not to point out errors with pleasure, nor to wound the feelings of any, but to suggest the better way, the constant practice of which is only attainable on a high moral plane where there is complete self-control.

Soul mediumship signifies that the messages are given chiefly through the soul, that is they first enter the soul and then pass to the mind.

The soul is the same substance as that of the Universal Soul and therefore at-one-ment with the same, or one with the Father. In some way, it always did exist, and always will. It is the personal I AM, the higher self, and its pure Deific nature is not contaminated by incarnation.

It is the monitor, the suggester of good thoughts, the chief builder of the spirit body, and owing to its eternal purity and good work is a fit instrument for pure decarnate spirits, and being so nearly on the same plane of spirits of the just "made perfect," when the medium is well developed morally and psychically very little change in vibration is required for communication, which is so easy and natural that it is very much like the conversation of two persons in the flesh.

The soul and communicating spirit are not dominated by external influence, not even by the co-ordinate mind, and can therefore deliver a message while the medium is thinking oppositely, or on an entirely foreign subject, which renders communication far more accurate than the other method, in the use of which, the mental operation of the medium either greatly modifies or wholly deteats the deliverance of the message.

Soul mediumship is vivifying, healthful, rejuvenating, purifying and so fills the entire being with love, heaven, and glory, that the life-work becomes a parallel movement with the Universal Soul. On this moral, purified altitude the impure spirits cannot vibrate and therefore cannot control the medium. He is entirely above them, above mind mediumship, the lower self, where they function. He dwells in the soul realm, has obtained a powerful concentration, freedom and can go in spirit whithersoever he wills, commune with purified intelligences and with them roam over the illimitable fields of light and glory and bask in the sunshine of eternal love. Such mediumship is destined to show that Spiritual Science is on the High Plane and will continue to shed forth its redeeming radiance on this blessed planet until "all shall know, from the least to the greatest" that it teaches eternal truth and happiness, that it is the science of the Great Soul permeated with the true light that lighteth every man that cometn into the world."

A NEW CATECHISM,

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book of reason. E. P. Powell, the well-known author, the reviewer and critic, says: "The remarkable thing about this 'Catechism' is that it tells the truth." It deals with the questions of God, Immortality—the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer and Salvation; Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Christian Scriptures, and many other philosophical, scientific and ethical questions with the utmost candor, courage and clearness. 188 pages. Cloth 75c; paper, 50c.

ASPHODEL BLOOMS
AND
Other Offerings.
BY
EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.
The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.
The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."
That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."
Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."
Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."
The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,
Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crockee. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. R. S. Bell: Q. On page 235, at the bottom of the book, "Bible of Bibles," by Kersey Graves, is a statement of how John Calvin died. A co-laborer says: "He died forlorn and forsaken of God, blaspheming to the end. He gave up the ghost despairing of salvation, and evoking devils from the abyss, and uttering oaths most horrible, and blaspheming most frightful." Most always he gives the authority by name. Is the above true, and what and where is the authority? It seems a just ending for one who taught such a creed.

A. This story has been widely circulated, and as this correspondent says, such a "death-bed scene" is a just climax to a life devoted to the promulgation of his terrible creed. The story grew, probably, out of a sense of poetic justice. It may have been true, although difficult to prove. Of course his biographers would suppress every word reflecting on his sanctification, just as they did his dastardly actions in the arrest and burning at the stake of Servetus.

The probabilities are in favor, for Calvin was a hypochondriac, the insanity of poisoning by a diseased liver, which left his blood saturated with gall. He mistook the fever in his blood for the fires of hell.

Miss Pearl M. Smith: Q. Wishing to study Chromosophy, exhaustively, what books are most reliable and essential?

A. The works of Prof. Babbitt contain about all that is at present known on the subject. He was among the first to advocate the use of the sun's rays for the cure of disease and the first to elaborate a systematic treatment by the color method.

All the speculations as to the curative virtues of the "X-rays," of "sunbaths," and the latest "radium cure," are outgrowths of what should be called the "sun-cure."

It may be accepted as a fundamental proposition that the light of the sun contains all possible rays from the beginning of the visible spectrum, to the wave tension beyond the violet, and indefinitely passing out of vision into the the actinic and unknown "x" vibrations, and the forms of force and energy manifested by "radium" or other agencies. The sun-light gives them all, for the sun is the vortex from which they are dispersed into space. It is nature's creative or evolutionary force for the production and advancement of living beings, and her destroying energy as well.

From this proposition may be deduced the conclusion that the rays of the sun are more powerful, directly received, than they are from any substance in which they may be stored. Thus coal will not give more light or heat than was stored by the leaves of the plants from which it was made. A storage battery returns no more than it receives. As in the sun's disc all known elements mingle in incandescent gas. And in the light of that luminary all forces mingle and radiate.

It is a catchy trick to exploiter some portion of this force and advertise it well as a new and miraculous remedy. The electric light, magnetism, heat "X-rays," have special sanitariums, and are widely advertised, and it would seem that if any one dies it shows criminal neglect of the means thus furnished for prolonging life indefinitely. Yet we know that whatever these contain, is blended in the light of the sun and if we bask in that we receive a stronger influence than from these artificial contrivances.

The air through which sunshine passes is purified and its oxygen polarized into that active state in which it most readily imparts its stored force or is transformed into vitality.

Hence of all "cures," the "light cure" is among the mast important. Yet we should not be carried away by a hobby and allow one idea to exclude all others. There is no universal panacea and a "golden mean" which includes the best of all systems, most to be desired.

J. M. Scofield: Q. Who are the Jains, and their belief?

A. According to their own holy writings the Jains originated about 700 B. C., and became established 200 years later. It has been conjectured by those who have studied the subject, that this account was mythical, and that this Hindu sect originated in a reaction of the old Braminism against Buddhism, and that this occurred in the fifth century of our era, after Brahminism had been subject for at least a thousand years to Buddhistic control. The cunning priests who guided the movement, adroitly wove the two systems together, thus silencing objections of either sect. The reverence for holy men who by self mortification and suffering had become next to gods, was inculcated, and thus Gautama Buddha was enshrined as worthy of worship. They restored the order of castes, which had been abolished and interpreted the Sacred Vedas to suit their purpose. They avoided mention of that portion treating of animal sacrifice, and favored the Brahmin priests to the exclusion of the Buddhists. The name is derived from the Sanskrit, Jina, meaning one who is a victor, as applied to one who has conquered all passions, desires, aspirations, hopes, pride, affection, love, and reached a state of perfect apathy. When he gets to this point, and can sit bowed over, unconscious of everything passing around him, absorbed in the contemplation of vacuity, he becomes "all wise," "supreme lord," "god of gods," and above the necessity of ceremonious acts. He has "crossed the ocean of births," that is passed through numberless reincarnations, and thus had all experiences.

Instead of seven reincarnations of the Buddha, as held by the Buddhists, the Jains have seventy-two Jinas or holy saints, who have reached in earth-life the sublime state of absolute apathy.

It requires all the descriptive words in the Hindu vocabulary to describe these Jinas. They were of exquisite beauty, and without hunger or thirst; they did not grow old or infirm. Their heads were surrounded by a halo. As there was nothing but imagination to draw from, the description could be as the fancy pleased. The first Jinas was 500 poles high and lived 8,499,000 years. The morality taught is of a high order, gentleness, charity, honesty, and truthfulness are inculcated. But with this is a mass of ritualistic ceremonies, repulsive to western intelligence.

The priests officiating at the temples are Brahmins, the Jain priests are alms collectors, necromancers, fortune-tellers, jugglers, mendicants, and arrant knaves. They profess extreme sanctity, and regard for life, and carry this to absurd extremes. They would not disturb the most filthy parasite, or annoying insect, and under the stress of this doctrine the people become a prey to wild beasts and venomous serpents, whom none dare destroy for fear of killing some great personage or near friend, reincarnated in them.

Recently this country has been visited by a Jain priest and strange as it may appear a good deal of favor has been expressed for this senseless doctrine, that has nothing more in its favor than a few moral platitudes. It has been asserted that the vast literature and knowledge was something entirely unknown to the western mind. There were mysteries, and "occult science," which might be gained of these mendicant priests who had by fasting, prayer and suffering, reached a state of the supreme negation.

It is true that there is an overwhelming mass of writings, poetry, fables, myths, polemics, and speculations on the impenetrable mysteries of God and his relations to mankind. There is nothing on science or history. The Hindu mind had a singular disregard of passing events and made no record of them. Equally careless were the best thinkers of India of facts, as facts, for they were so absorbed in contemplation that they had no time or inclination to observe.

It is interesting to read these books illustrative of the psychic growth and condition of a great race, but beyond that they furnish nothing more than moral precepts which are the common property of mankind. There is absolutely nothing in the writings of India that would be of practical value to the western mind.

Terrific as the career of life through interminable reincarnations, is presented, the methods and results do not appeal to active intelligence. Life's meaning is doing, not apathy to all sensations, and the priest, sage or fakir, I scarcely know which to call him, who has reached the stage of sainthood according to the Jain conception, is about the most worthless and contemptible creature that can exist.

Nor is the reward promised for this sacrifice of everything that makes life valuable inspiring to a healthy mind.

The end was Moksha, the final liberation of the spirit, beyond which it would not be required to again clothe itself in flesh, but those who have studied this subject are at a loss how to understand the obscure and mystical language; whether this is the meaning, or whether it is a cessation of being, and absorption into the bosom of the infinite Brahm. It has become divided into many sects, among some of which the most horrid rites are observed, and superstition shows its most degrading form.

The two great parties into which they are divided are the "white-robed" and the "sky clad" naked ones.

Their moral code is like the Buddhists, forbidding killing, lying, stealing, adultery and worldly mindedness, and commanding mercy to animals, alms-giving, reverence for the sages and worship of their images, confession of sins and fasting.

Blessedness of Immortal Life.

Ah, futurity; it is established, it is grounded on immovable rock, having an unfailing light-house, for the safety of the poor mariners who are tossed on the waves about it. We are yet mortals: we have caught a glimpse of immortality, and through our spirit guides and friends, we have gained entrance to fairer fields than we had dreamed of; we have heard whispers from the eternal side, and our spirit faculties have arisen to claim affinity with the unseen.

Having reached the high plane where Benevolence delights to walk, instead of harkening to her pleading tone, they spurn angel visitants and shut their eyes upon the dismal prospects toward which she turns with mild and pitying look. When a friend accosted the prince of the Latin poets with questions why he studied so much accuracy in the plan of his poem, the propriety of his characters, and purity of his diction, he replied: "I am writing for eternity." We are sowing here, and the harvest will not be until the sun of the last day has shone upon it. "Homeward bound" to our spirit home—to a country possessing indescribable loveliness, where variety and beauty blend in untold richness; intelligence has reached us of the wonderful scenery there, of unsurpassed architecture, beautiful mansions, lovely streets, delightful fields watered by crystal streams. We hear from the spirit side of life of aromatic breezes.

The time of departure must come to all. We are embarked on the voyage and the "boatman's oar" is bearing us on to the farther shore. Socrates and others of antiquity, when they came to the final conflict, strongly hoped they should know of victory and possession in another land; and their hope had its influence. But we who live under the spiritual influence, "within the veil," may sing with triumph the songs of immortality, and shout with exultation as our banner is lifted before this conquering life, and immortality is brought to light, adorned with an arch encircling all, upon which may be seen in ever-enduring characters, "He that overcometh shall go no more out."

SAVE THE CHILDREN.

P. A. Seguin a Victim of Catholic Hatred.

There is no more needed reform amongst Spiritualists than to teach them to quit sending their children to any theological school, seminary, college or church, to be educated to disrespect the religion of parents who have their eyes opened to the truths of the spiritual philosophy. Children thus educated blankly refuse to employ a Spiritualist speaker at time of demise of their parents—catering to popular opinion. I think children have rights, but parents have, also. I grant that a proper child properly educated will act properly about this matter, but let us Spiritualists see to it that none of the sectarian ministers, preachers or prelates officiate at our funerals and end up their prayers with a "for Christ's sake."

Let us protest against such nonsense being mumbled over our bundle of clay, while we live, and not wait till we commit that great psychological crime of returning through some medium and giving the protest second-hand.

There is no teaching that can appeal to the heart and mind of a young child as that of spiritual science. What is greatly needed is a children's paper, devoted to subjects of practical every day importance.

Unless we look after the enlightenment of our little children, we are criminally culpable as parents and teachers. It is much harder work to unlearn what we were taught in childhood, than to learn anew when older grown.

Book education falls far short of true enlightenment. Practical education means practical usefulness along any line selected. Children are far happier and healthier when they can combine book study with brain and hand study, giving their own expression in mechanical results.

Save the children!

P. A. Seguin.

Let me urge all those who feel interested in helping the worthy workers to send donations and a cheery letter to P. A. Seguin, Amboy, Minn.

In October last he was attacked by a Roman Catholic mob while lecturing at Dike, Iowa. His arm was broken and he was otherwise injured. He is sadly in need of money to keep his family from suffering. I trust this will meet the eye of some person who sees the importance of helping one who risks his life to expose the actual facts of the Romish priesthood and confessional, for he was a prominent priest for fourteen years, and knows whereof he speaks. It proves beyond a doubt that he tells the truth, for the Roman Catholics would not try to kill him, instead of having him arrested and tried.

Mr. Seguin and his wife are earnest, conscientious speakers and should be kept in the field. Every camp in the United States ought to arrange for two or three lectures from these very reliable victims of the Romish church, because they speak from sad experience, and of all people, Spiritualists should be fully informed upon this momentous question. Better let the glorious beauties of the Summer land rest for a while and pay some attention to the welfare of this earth land.

FLORA W. FOX.

WHEN RAW WINDS SNARL AND BITE.

The raw winds struck like water cold,
They almost angered me.
A mind, rough as a chestnut burr,
Hurt me distractingly.

* * * * * *

What if I do live in a place where the sharp winds snarl and bite?
Shall I fight them till I fall?
Shall I line up my face with frowns, and hate them with all my might
Till my good blood seems as gall?

Oh, no! I'll not strike at the wind, it it gnaws me to the bone;—
I can never conquer it!
I will meet it, this unseen force, like a piece of smiling stone,
Wasting good strength no bit.

This rugged sense, which I have learned, applies to human kind;
Some are worse than snarling winds.
They bring to duty discontent, and a most unwilling mind.
Till even Love's labor grinds.

They will curse what they cannot change, till the bad work mars and blights;
Why not be self-absolute?
It is only weakness to cry, and sob through the rayless nights,
Or eternal law dispute.

It is folly to cry down law because one collides with it.
Best say, "I was out of place!
I will learn the law; it is good, and remember where it hit,
By my bruised and blackened face."

I will smilingly keep my strength; not fritter it all away
On something which wounded me.
I am not God's pet, who must hedged be that I may not go astray!
That would not develop me!

The sooner I fall in line and march with the universe,
Not stopping to catch each lie,
The richer am I in my gains. It were waste of strength to curse,
And the sooner one must die.

To love, and to try to help on to the good of the whole is best;
It metes more to all, and you.
Sow love, not hate; push! push! don't pull back! as the world creeps on to rest,
When the farcey show is through.

To rest?—not rest! but dying worlds, except that they still revolve,
Do as human corpses die.
But Nature holds, and whirls them on,
disperses and re-evolves
New stars in some new sky.

Ah, me! the mote I am to-day! and yet
I am part of all,
Never dropped out from the plan.
What countless things I've been, till now, industriously in thrall,
Would aeons of ages span.

So heart, hope on! my soul, aspire!
work true in your place to-day.
Good work brings its own rich dues.
I know that the atoms which make up
me only a space will stay,
But cannot be barred from use.

A Characteristic Letter From George F. Perkins.

To the Editor:—Perhaps a few lines from the writer may be admissible, inas much as so many readers of your truly progressive instrument of Divine humanity have shown such a generous inclination to assist those who are unfortunate enough to be sick.

I have been extremely busy day and night with duties pertaining to the care of Mrs. Perkins, and answering the letters sent me, which contained not only grand benevolent thoughts but financial demonstrations as well, from 10 cents to $10, thus enabling me to pay up some old bills of small dimensions and house rent; also purchase the necessaries of life. By being as economical as possible, I have provided for at least the house rent for the coming March. The surprises came thick and fast during January, and included a whopper from the N. S. A., which in itself was a great surprise, and stirs up all the feelings of gratitude with which we are possessed.

I am more than ever before impressed with the idea that Spiritualists, especially those who read the Spiritualist papers, are the most generous people in the world. There is no class of people that respond individually so quick to the cry of a fellow being in pain and distress, which is the strongest evidence that if they were properly organized and their power focalized with a special humanitarian object in view, Spiritualism would rapidly rise to a powerful and influential body of wholesouled, intelligent people.

The N. S. A. rightly pleads for funds with which it may relieve the distress of worthy workers. I am anxious to earn money to contribute to the relief fund. If any one doubting my condition could follow me 48 hours he would be convinced that I am driven day and night, and strung up to the highest pitch, as Mrs. Perkins has been suffering with an extremely nervous and painful phase of the combination. I have given quite a number of written readings under great difficulties, but think I can do more and better work in the future month. Not a few reply favorably, and the majority assure me of the wonderful correctness of the delineations. I have, besides attending to the great amount of household duties, appeared many times at public halls in the capacity of a test medium, singer, or general entertainer. The Ladies' Aid and several organizations have been extremely kind to us this winter.

Mrs. Lillie, speaker of the Progressive Spiritualists, having been especially prominent in conducing beneficiary meetings, has endeared herself to us all, and stimulated a large body of Spiritualist ladies to be on the watch for the sufferer wherever found. The Chicago Spiritualist friends have responded nobly, and the manager of the Progressive Educator has stood out like a beacon light, shedding the rays of benevolence over the entire world as an example for us all to imitate. I am trying very hard to perform the duties set before me with a proper patience, an ingredient in my combination which I fear is lacking; I therefore ask for more patience. Soon I hope to be speaking for the uplifting of humanity every Sunday. Allow me to send my soulful thanks to all friends.

ANOTHER NOBLE WORKER GONE TO THE HIGHER LIFE.

One by one the noble workers—those who have done valiant service on behalf of our cause are leaving our ranks and going to join "the great majority."

Friday forenoon, the 26th ult., Mrs. Mary Severance (better known to the Spiritualistic public as Mrs. A. B. Severance), passed to spirit life from her late home, 1300 Main street, Whitewater, Wis.

Mrs. Severance had been confined to her room during the winter months, but was hopeful of the return of physical strength until a short time before her transition. When the change came, she passed out of the worn out body that had served her for more than seventy years, as quietly as she ever passed into a restful sleep.

The subject of this notice was a medium of more than national reputation; her correspondence as a psychometrist, extended to foreign countries. For more than twenty years her work was familiar to the Spiritualists of Australia and New Zealand.

The funeral services were held at the family residence, Sunday afternoon, the 28th ult. The occasion brought out a large concourse of people, among whom were many residents of Whitewater, who probably for the first time listened to the message of Spiritualism. The services were simple and impressive. Mrs. Sanford of the Morris Pratt Institute, rendered beautiful and appropriate vocal selections at the opening and close of the exercises. Rev. A. J. Weaver, superintendent of instruction and teacher, connected with the Morris Pratt Institute read the old poem:

"He who died at Azam sends Back this message to his friends."

At the conclusion of the reading, he offered a soulful invocation, most fitting for the occasion. The writer followed with a brief address, setting forth the Spiritualistic ideas of death and the after-life. She referred to Mrs. Severance's grand work on behalf of the cause she loved, and left a message with the loved and loving ones who mourn the physical absence of the mother, sister and friend, such as Spiritualism can only give.

Mrs. Severance was a resident of Whitewater for forty years. She was a faithful exponent of her principles everywhere. The town, with few exceptions is largely orthodox, but souls are larger and better than creeds. In times of sorrow love and sympathy reach beyond sectarian lines. Let us rejoice that even at such times hearts beat tenderly for one another. These sentiments have been verified in the going away of Sister Severance. Tender, loving tributes are paid to her memory. The near relatives, including a son, daughter, two brothers, and Mr. T. B. Watson who, for more than a third of a century, was the faithful amanuensis and companion of Mrs. Severance, have the sympathy of many friends. In spite of one's opinions and professions, nothing tells like a true life.

Thy voice, dear one, though hushed to mortal ear,
Shall reach the souls of those to thee
most dear,
And they shall know thy blessed presence here.

ORDERED TO QUIT CITY.

CLAIRVOYANTS AND MEDIUMS UNDER POLICE BAN.

Preying on Foolish Women—Maj. Sylvester Determines, in View of Many Complaints Received, to Rid the Capital of the Entire Profession—Extracts from Letters on File at Headquarters—Would Amend the Law.

The police department announced yesterday that war is to be waged on all clairvoyants, fortune-tellers and mediums in the District. One of these practitioners has been ordered by Maj. Sylvester to leave the city, and although his wife was at headquarters yesterday pleading for an extension of time it is understood that the order will be enforced at once.

Maj. Sylvester, in speaking on the subject, said that he most probably would recommend to the Commissioners the adoption of an amendment to the present license law which will exclude this class of people. The law as it now stands, he said, puts clairvoyants and fortune-tellers on the same basis as business men.

Apropos of this, the detectives have received numerous complaints recently. All the victims were women, and they were mulcted, so they said, of sums ranging from $1 to $100, but woman-like they refused to prosecute for fear of publicity. Consequently Maj. Sylvester determined to take the law in his own hands, and issued the order above mentioned as a measure of protection for the gullible women of the District.

Complaints from Victims.

A collection in one of the pigeonholes of Capt. Boardman's desk, illustrates to what distances the victims have allowed themselves to be led. There are several anonymous letters. One of these reads as follows:

"I want to call your attention to this wonderful man, Prof. ——. His name should be Prof. Dead Beat, for he is the biggest humbug I ever had the 'pleasure' of meeting. He talked me right out of my money, and instead of bringing back my husband, as he promised, he seemed to drive my husband away, for I am now alone. My husband has gone to Pittsburg. When I told this alleged professor about it he would give me neither my money back nor any satisfaction. He is shrewd, for he said that if I had him arrested he would tell all my story, and would swear besides that I was after another man instead of my husband. He guaranteed all his works of conjure and mesmerism, but he failed on me. I met other women in his office and each of them has given up money in varying amounts.

"From a Foolish Woman in Trouble.."

In another letter was a card advertising "a famous English clairvoyant and psychic palmist," and the writer characterized the advertised one as "fake."

One of Heisman's Victims.

Still another woman confessed to having been robbed by Frederick Heisman, who was recently arrested here for the Boston authorities on their complaint that he had persuaded two trusting women to give him their entire fortune of many thousand dollars.

One other contribution to the stack of complaints is a tiny yellow envelope stamped on the outside, "Phychio Magneto, Nepal, India." The woman who gave it up confessed that she had paid $5 for the envelope, which was supposed to contain an all-powerful powder, which had only to be placed under the pillow for so many nights to accomplish as many wonders as Aladdin's lamp. The powder failed of its purpose, and the remnant of it still lift in Captain Boardman's desk needs only a taste to prove that it is nothing more than common table salt.—Washington Post, Feb. 19, 1904.

THE LITTLE INDIAN LASS.

One eve in dreamy stillness, as I lay upon my cot,
In came a little heathen who never heard of God.
She had never seen a city, a church, or heard a prayer,
Nor heard of Adam's sinning, or of the "Golden Stair."
She knew the sun made flowers, and winter rains made grass,
But never heard of Jesus—this little Indian lass.

I pitied her in silence, and told her of my God,
When doubtingly she asked me why I quite forgot
To tell her how I knew him—if he's the real thing,
Or like the feathered gnomon whereof
the Indians sing;
And if he came to visit the "paleface"
prayer shop,
And why he never entered the red man's "wickyup."

And when I told of Jesus, how he our sins forgives,
She asked if that's the reason the pale-
face lies and thieves,
And drinks the fiery water, and steals
the Indian's hay,
When this, the Christian Jesus, takes all the blame away?
Or is he like your other—the God you said you saw,
Or is it but a story made up of grass and straw?

I told her of our heaven, where good men went to dwell,
And of the fiery furnace where bad men roamed in hell.
This statement quite unnerved her,
with fear she looked around,
And said that she had only the Indians' hunting ground.
She said, "Yes, by their actions, few'll go to that good place,
And there'll be place in plenty for our untutored race."

I thought the lesson over which my angel mother taught
Of God, Jesus and the trinity, and the fear in me it wrought;
But when this life is ended—when I will have to go,
Will I then tell St. Peter that mother told me so?
For she has never seen them, nor I.
Could we be wrong?
Then was it truth or fiction that I was taught when young?

I asked my spirit mother to clear my wicked doubt,
And give me light and knowledge upon my heavenly route.
She came while I was slumbering, and plainly said to me,
"Those lessons taught in childhood,
which I have given thee,
Were all that men could fathom in history's early age,
As step by step they groveled in each progressive stage."

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances, Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

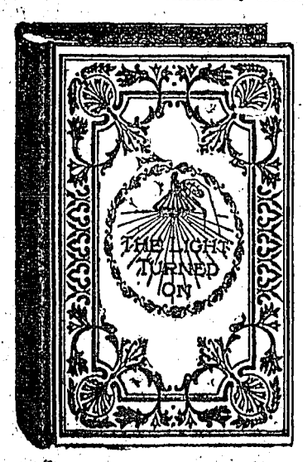
A Remarkable Doctor Book



HAS JUST BEEN ISSUED, ENTITLED

THE NATURE CURE

BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS, ILLUSTRATED.

A Bridge from the Old to the New; the Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. A Clear, Short-Cut Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Disease.

By MARVIN E. CONGER, M. D.
Assisted by ROSA C. CONGER, M. D.

Nature Cure teaches how to heal by simple home remedies.
It teaches how Nature cures.
It does not use poisonous drugs.
It does not endorse dangerous experiments with the surgeon's knife.
It will save money in every home.
It is entirely free from technical rubbish.
It teaches how typhoid and other fevers may be cured at once.
It teaches how pneumonia, la-grippe, diphtheria and other forms of disease considered dangerous, may be cured in twenty-four hours.
It is, as a medical book for homes, THE BEST, and is up-to-date in every particular.
There is no similar book, no medical, hygienic or reformatory doctor book that compares with THE NATURE CURE.

The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of THE NATURE CURE.

The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as in NATURE CURE.

Our Definition of Medicine.—Any method or remedy that will remove, alleviate or modify pain and restore the sick to normal condition, is practical medicine.

Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. NATURE CURE will lead the way to certain success.

The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

The book contains 375 pages, and is finely illustrated; the mechanical and artistic work are the very best. Bound in fine English cloth, marble edges, $2.00; common cloth $1.50.

MINNESOTA.

Spiritual Enterprise Near the Twin Cities.

Many of your readers will be pleased to learn that the Ladies' Aid, under the auspices of Lake Minnetonka Spiritualist Association has the lumber on the ground for a Spiritualist temple, the second one in the state. It has a deed to the lot donated by Joel and Margaret Stubb. The society hopes to have the temple completed by September 1, 1904. The society has one or two clairvoyant speakers who will lecture Sundays. There is a great awakening here, several being developed for different phases of mediumship. There will be a lyceum for the children as soon as the temple is finished. In connection with our temple are several acres of maple timber, giving a fine grove to hold picnics, grove meetings and camp meetings. The temple is located between two lakes, giving us cool breezes in midsummer heat; one and a half to 2 miles from two railroad stations. During the summer months there are from 12 to 14 daily trains which pass, that connect us with the twin cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul, which have over five hundred thousand inhabitants. The excursion rates are low.

The Ladies' Aid has nearly thirty working members, and the society nearly fifty members.

The street cars will run out to Lake Minnetonka next summer. Lake Minnetonka has 400 miles of lake shore. It consists of a number of lakes connected by outlets; a number of islands and points extending in between lakes, making fine scenery. The lakes abound with abundance of fine fish. It is one of the largest and best watering places and summer resorts in the Northwest. Hundreds of cottages dot the many shores. Cottages range in price of construction from $300 to $50,000.

In connection with our temple are 30 or 40 acres of land that can be bought on reasonable terms. We wish that some good Spiritualist, or our State Spiritualist Association would buy it for camp grounds. Lying between two lakes, it would have two front views. It could be platted and sold for summer cottages for Spiritualists to build on. It lies close to the great cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and accessible to the twin cities by railroad or electric lines. In the vicinity and around our temple grounds there are a great many small fruit farms. The farmers have organized into a Co-operative Fruit Growers' Association. The land around is well adapted to small fruits and cereal grain.

As soon as our temple is completed one member has offered to donate his library consisting of all of Andrew Jackson Davis' works. Other members will donate some of Moses Hull's and Dr. Peebles' works.

Let the good work go on. We need more spiritual temples throughout the states, where we can hold our meetings and social gatherings without trespassing on other people's rights. One can feel better to have a place of their own.

We would like to have other good Spiritualists come and settle near our beautiful Lake Minnetonka, buy property, and help build up our association. We have free rural delivery throughout our district. The farmers are very thickly settled here. There is an effort now being made to have telephones put into everyone's house that wants one, and connect with the main lines that run around us. We think this will be done this summer.

INDIANA CONVENTION NOTES.

Thirty-five or more local societies represented. Every delegate was in his place in good season at almost every session.

The presence of John B. Chrisney, of Chrisney, Ind., and John F. Harms, of Tell City, did much to encourage their fellow-delegates.

Brother Bonman, of Pennville, has lost none of his vocal power, neither has he taken any backward steps in his thoughts. He fairly made the welkin ring.

Brothers John Congdon, Dr. F. P. Bitters, A. W. Heine, W. S. Woods, J. H. Yorke, J. H. Rees and J. A. Wertz were ever at their posts of duty and were not afraid to speak out in behalf of organization.

Brother Gardner Haines' Methodist fire has followed him into Spiritualism. He was frequently under the "power," when he spoke for co-operation and brotherhood.

Brother O. L. Harvey, of Lafayette, a recent convert to Spiritualism, was on hand, and had good reasons for the faith that was in him. His muse sings all the sweeter now that Bro. Harvey is a Spiritualist.

Brother Newcomb, of Elwood, was an earnest worker at all meetings he attended. He was called away by a telegram announcing the serious illness of a relative, before the convention closed.

Sister Carrie H. Mong, of Muncie, the secretary of the state association, was the secretary of the convention. Her position was no sinecure, as the delegates were there for business, and kept "motions, substitutes and amendments" flying thick and fast.

It is said that Rev. E. W. Sprague, when he saw delegates from more than thirty-five societies file into the church, went into the vestry, leaped into the air some four or five feet, and brought his heels together three or four times before he touched the floor, in the exuberance of his joy. N. B.—This statement is only hearsay testimony; it is not avouched for.

A stray dollar or two got into the assembly one afternoon, and Rev. Sprague at once sensed that fact, he having exceedingly sensitive offactories. In ten seconds or minutes, those dollars rolled toward the treasurer of the association, having been magnetically drawn to the place where the gifted missionary stood.

In studying Brother Sprague, even the casual observer recognizes that fact, that our talented N. S. A. missionary prefers his apple pie seasoned with sugar rather than salt, and that he does not fear even 404 pounds avoirdupois of Christianity; in brief, he is a whole team in himself.

When the convention adjourned Bro. Sprague's deep sigh of rejoicing at its success echoed through the church. It brought Bro. Charles A. Gaines up on the rear to see if some one had thrown a dynamite bomb, but seeing the rapt look on Brother Sprague's face, Bro. Gaines took off his hat and stepped one side as Bro. Sprague passed by.

CORRESPONDENT.

A Prominent Worker Passed to Spirit Life.

Clarence M. Folsom, one of the most faithful workers in our ranks, and a medium whose place would be hard to fill, passed to spirit life on Sunday, Feb. 28, at 3.30 p. m., aged 43 years. He was taken sick on the 15th with what was supposed to be lagrippe, but in a few days the disease assumed the form of erysipelas, and after ten days of awful suffering, peritonitis set in and nothing could save his life. Every care was given him by his faithful and devoted wife, the doctor and a trained nurse, but all was unavailing.

His funeral took place on Tuesday, March 1, the Odd Fellows taking charge and the address was given by his friend and associate, C. W. Stewart. A very large concourse of friends was present and the room was a veritable wilderness of floral offerings, most of them very large and appropriate. His mortal form was buried at Pickett Cemetery in Southwest St. Louis.

He was conscious to the last, and one of his dying requests was that his darling Josie should go on with the work of spreading the glad tidings of Spiritualism. His death was a marvel of heroism and patience, not a single murmur passing his lips during his awful suffering. Never a thought of self, but all for his wife and son that he was leaving behind. His hosts of friends in various parts of the country will regret to learn of his transition, for his marvelous mediumship has convinced hundreds of a future life. C. W. STEWART.

Catarrh Cured

If you Suffer from Catarrh in any form, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any Lung Weakness read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU

THIS TREATMENT FREE

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the noted specialist in Catarrh and Bronchial troubles has found a SURE, Speedy and Permanent Cure for Catarrh. It not only quickly relieves and permanently cures Catarrh but gives almost instant relief in Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung Troubles. It completely removes the disease from the system and makes the diseased tissues like new. Mrs. Weaverling, of Seattle, Wash., writes—"I suffered from that dreadful disease catarrh, for twenty years, and found nothing that would help it until I began your treatments. I improved from the first and in a short time was entirely cured. You have rendered me a great blessing, and I recommend your treatment most highly to those having catarrh." We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of Catarrh and Bronchial troubles in all forms and stages but they would not tell you what the treatment will do for You. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself and believing that it will Positively Cure any case of Catarrh no matter how long standing or how many treatments have failed in the past, that we will send a full two weeks' treatment with Dr. Peebles Medicated Air Inhaler to any sufferer wishing to try it. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you? IT IS FREE. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 23 Madison St. Battle Creek, Mich.

The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,

With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. But the author, ELEANOR KIRK, lays special stress upon the fundamental principle that "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." DR. ES-PAN-TO

Surrounded by his Spirit Band of Indian Healers.

IN HIS PEERLESS METHOD OF TREATING HIS PATIENTS PLACES NATURE IN DIRECT TOUCH WITH HER SUBJECTS.

DR. ES-PAN-TO

Is a direct descendent of the ancient tribe of Aztec Indians of Old Mexico, a tribe that thoroughly understood Nature, and knew how to turn aside the many little warnings sent by Nature to her people. They recognized the power of the Master that had placed healing agencies within their reach, and it is from their teachings that Dr. Es-pan-to has placed before a suffering public cures for their ills, prepared from roots, herbs, barks, gums and oils, given him by Nature, with the knowledge of how to properly prepare and deliver. Take heed and enter under the tent of the one healer in the country that takes his cures from natural products and administers them by natural methods.

Dr. Es-pan-to has nothing to give away, nor does he claim to be able to perform the impossible.

Science itself recognizes Natural Law in the Spiritual World, and the power of bringing one's self en-rapport with the Unseen Forces working in harmony along a chosen line for the betterment and advancement of suffering humanity.

Healing the Sick is Dr. Es-pan-to's Life Work.

He has attracted to his wigwam a Spirit Band of Indian Healers, ancients of his own race, the methods and customs of which he still adheres to; then he is aided by all the later discoveries of Medical Science, and combining the two, he has modernized and made perfect the Send on your contributions to Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., 600 Pa. Ave. S. E., Washington, D. C., and do not delay.

☞ It ought to be a pleasant duty to care for those whose lives have been sacrificed upon the altar of a truth as palpable as is that of the eternal truth of Spiritualism. It is a shame to have to acknowledge the neglect of this duty by begging for their support when afflicted.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mary F. Williams passed to spirit life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bise, Feb. 10, at the age of 87 years. She was born in Green county, Pa., and when she was sixteen, she went to Quincy, Ill., with her parents, where she married M. L. Williams seven years later. The result of this union was ten children, seven of whom are still living. Her husband died in August 1899, at the age of 91, and immediately thereafter she became an invalid and has been bedfast practically ever since. She came from Oklahoma along with Mrs. Bise, last September, having been in the latter's care the past two years.

Marysville, Wash. W. R. BISE.

Promoted to the higher life, at Rochester, Minn., on Feb. 17, Mrs. Mary Weed after prolonged illness. Sister Weed was an outspoken Spiritualist, but made the mistake of miseducating her daughters in the Universalist church. Then no wonder she was denied the services of a Spiritual speaker when most needed to give her spirit consolation and teach that "death is but a kindly frost that cracks the shell and gives the kernel room to germinate." F. W. F.

Passed to the higher life, Jan. 27, 1904, from his home in Sandstone, Montana, by paralysis, Zebina Titus, aged 69 years. He was one of nature's finest specimens of manhood, and a firm believer in our beautiful religion, realizing the presence of his loved ones constantly. His strict honor and integrity endeared him to all who knew him. He leaves a son and daughter. M.

Mrs. Mary V. Tamplin, wife of James H. Tamplin, passed to the higher life after a brief illness, from her home in Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 22, aged 73 years. She was for many years a firm Spiritualist, a woman of strong individuality, broad in her views, a loving wife, an attentive and kind mother. Mrs. Tamplin's spiritual sight was illuminated just before her transition, and she saw her spirit mother and other friends who came to welcome the new-born soul into the higher life.

W. V. Nicum was called from Central Kentucy to officiate at the funeral.

MRS. STELLA NICUM.

Passed to the higher life, on Feb. 26, Mr. C. A. Schaddock, from his late country home, one-half mile north of Brighton, Ind., in the 83rd year of his age. Mr. Schaddock was one of La Grange county's most honored citizens, and loved by all who knew him. He leaves a widow and one son to mourn his transition. He was an advanced Spiritualist, and lived and died in the light of that philosophy. The funeral was held at his late residence, on Sunday, Feb. 26, conducted by Dr. E. H. Denslow.

An Old Woman With Wonderful Occult Powers.

One of the Most Remarkable Occult Experiences the World Has Ever Seen.

A WEIRD OCCULT EXPERIENCE.

As Related by Numa Numantius, a Prominent Chicago Physician.

The improbable sometimes occurs. It did in this case. The writer is well known to the editor of The Progressive Thinker, who does not believe him to be insane or laboring under an hallucination. Some twenty-five years ago he related to many his remarkable experiences as detailed in thls communication, and with a sincerity that could not fail to carry conviction. His wife, a most estimable lady, who was with him, declares most emphatically that all the incidents connected with this narrative are true. The fact that the medium, Home, was levitated on one occasion, carried along in mid-air by the spirits, and that the passage of matter through matter has been repeatedly proven, brings within the range of possibility every statement made by Numa Numantius. That the central figure in this narrative possessed wonderful occult powers, was known to many.

In 1872 I was located (in medical practice) within thirty miles of Chicago, on a farm, among farmers—plain, honest people and the best of neighbors.

My circuit covered an extensive area, and my wife was wont to accompany me during those long and otherwise monotonous rides. Thus, one afternoon we were nearing the farm of a Mrs. J., whose house was situated directly on the highroad, opposite an unpainted, deserted church—a gloomy enough neighborhood.

Mrs. J's. son was then under my care for a fractured thigh, having just recovered from a similar accident to his left forearm. The direct causes of these consecutive fractures were almost universally laid to the worthy dame herself, or to her "evil eye," which, in the opinion of most people was able to work damage at a distance. Let me explain:

Mrs. J. was known to old and young as the "EVIL-EYED WITCH," and was shunned by all, because of her supposed ability to bewitch anyone by her disliked. Everybody was in actual terror of this woman. The reader must remember that in those days less was known of things occult, and, besides, I then was an out and out materialist, consequently illy prepared to cope with such matters.

The public dislike of this woman I explained through her repugnant physique, carrying her right shoulder "a la Richard the Third." She, as if in mock reverence, bent her "off knee" in a jerky manner, stumbling more than walking, all the while muttering unintelligible words in croaky voice, mayhaps to some invisible entity. Who knows?

Her lips, as thin and expressionless as a slit cut in sole leather, were never without motion. From her emanated that weird, witchlike, nonsympathetic magnetism, all for evil and none for good.

Yes, she looked like a witch, soaked in evil, and one could well imagine her besmeared with that Devil's Ointment, supposed to be prepared in unholy confab on the Blocksberg, from clergymen's fat, clergymen who had served the devil in heaven's livery! Her eyes seemed to borrow their expression from the devil-fish, and, taken all in all, this woman certainly looked a witch! She was the best shunned woman, near and far, amply abused in her absence, while most obsequiously flattered when present. Young and old did homage to the "EVIL-EYED ONE."

I must go back a little in time, for, previously, I myself had witnessed the wholesale slaughter of a litter of pigs by this "witch," the property of her neighbor, a Mr. K. During a professional call at this farmer's house, I had occasion to praise the healthy appearance of a litter of pigs. To my astonishment, Mr. K., an unusually intelligent farmer, asserted that "nothing can save this litter, for the witch has 'evil-eyed' them!" Such STUPIDITY required correction, and I then and there gave vent to much "scientific" horror with what he said, but without shaking his belief in the old woman's "powers." As related the next day by Mr. K., EVERY PIGLET "TOOK ITS LITTLE TAIL BETWEEN ITS TEETH AT SUNSET, THE DAY PRIOR, AND TWIRLING ABOUT FASTER AND FASTER, DROPPED DEAD." What killed the pigs I know not, but that they were dead I saw for myself.

A STRANGE, WEIRD OCCURRENCE.

But let us return to our story and relate what happened at the home of the "witch," that memorable evening:

Mrs. J's. son, Fred, lived with her, so also his little wife, who, at all times, presented a well pronounced "scarey look." On arriving, I hitched my ponies to a post outside, asking Mrs. Fred to entertain my wife while I entered the house, a rickety affair, whose timbers appeared ever ready to fall apart, but somehow clung together. Before that I had passed repeatedly through the long and narrow shed that served as the main entrance to the living-room, but never without a vague sensation that forced me to hasten my steps. I always chided myself for entertaining such uncanny feelings, but there they were! On that day I actually suffered while going through the shed and was truly relieved when once in Fred's room, the "large room" of a farm house. But I was there doomed to further misery, the worst that can befall a physician. Fred hailed me with ill-suppressed impatience, showing agony of mind as well as of body, hurling all kinds of opprobrium at me. Let me here remark that I had bandaged his legs some five days prior, in plaster of paris, to prevent too inquisitive interference. The bandages showed no signs of having been tampered with, and I could not understand Fred's impatient greeting:

"Doctor, I beg of you to come to me quick. Mother and I have had a rumpus, and ever since I am in agony. Something is the matter with my broken thigh, for there is a crawling sensation all over and around it. Mother has 'BE-SPOKEN' the leg." In reply I simply felt Fred's pulse, believing him under febrile excitement. However, his pulse was normal and the skin moist and cool. My sole attention was now turned to the fractured limb. I dreaded gangrene and set to chiseling the thigh from out its plaster of paris incasement.

A MOST HORRIBLE SIGHT DISCLOSED.

I doubt whether the sudden disappearance of that very limb, then and there, would have more confounded me than the horrible sight before me when the bandages fell from the thigh. THERE, IN ALL THEIR SLIMY HELLISHNESS, CRAWLED OVER AND ABOUT THE THIGH AND BEDDING, WHITE WORMS FROM ONE TO TWO INCHES LONG! These worms were different from those I had ever seen, in hospitals and on battle-fields, where wounds had to be neglected from various causes. It must also be remembered that this was a simple fracture, without even the slightest scratch accompanying it.

How did all this happen, or was it an illusion?

To me and to Fred those worms at that time ACTUALLY EXISTED. They were there to my utter bewilderment and I had not yet regained that mental equilibrium so necessary to a physician, when a low mocking laugh behind me caused me to turn and recognize Mrs. J. She seemed to enjoy the situation, but soon quieted me with the assurance that the worms were caused in nowise through my neglect, but that she simply wished "Freddie" to respect his "mammy" more and to call her less names. She added: "I regret causing you this extra trouble doctor," but, gone she was, shambling out of the room through the gloomy shed into the yard and beyond. While my eyes followed her as she passed out of sight, back to her work on the farm, a shout of surprise from Fred called me back to my duty. My patient pointed to his injured limb, where not a worm or trace thereof could be seen! His mother had not fully entered the room, remaining in the doorway. Her position even obstructed full view of the leg and its condition. Yet GONE THEY WERE, every single worm, leaving the limb clean and ready for my surgical duties.

Where did these worms come from?

Where did they go to?

What, indeed, had they been?

SEND THE RED COCK ON THE ROOF.

Pulling myself together best I could, I rebandaged the leg, while Fred aired his long pent up feelings by the recital of the weird happenings there, as strange occurrences in "BLACK MAGIC" as perhaps were ever recounted to mortal. Even the recent death of a brother he believed the work of entities servile to his mother, for that death was prognosticated by the "witch" exactly as it happened. At another time, when that brother refused to advance money, Mrs. J. threatened that if the same was not handed to her by Wednesday, she would "SEND THE RED COCK ON HIS ROOF," at midnight of that day. Though Jim's house was situated on Milwaukee avenue in Chicago, some thirty miles distant, and his mother did not leave her farm, a fire actually started on the roof, but was readily extinguished, after which the "witch" promptly received the money.

Fred tearfully referred to his little wife, who was rapidly failing amidst such depressing surroundings and because of the shameful treatment she received from the old hag. I advised Fred to leave his mother and take his wife with him to Chicago, there to manfully work, and in peace and happiness support her, as in duty bound. His other remarks, touching on black magic, I also met, but with pity and scorn, doing my best to reach his "benighted pate" with sufficient of the "light of this enlightened century" to meet and overcome all such "medieval nonsense."

All my pains were for nothing, for Fred implored me to keep my counsel and to not further raise his mother's ire. "For," as he added, "she hears every word you say."

Pointing to his mother working some five hundred feet distant on the farm, Fred further explained:

"IN SOME STRANGE MANNER MOTHER FEELS WHAT PEOPLE THINK, AND I AM POSITIVE THAT SHE NOW KNOWS ALL YOU SAID AND ALL YOU THINK, FOR, FROM MY CHILDHOOD UP SHE ALWAYS KNEW MY THOUGHTS AND THERE WAS NO ESCAPE FROM HER."

Entirely then unacquainted with occult possibilities, I let fly at him my undisguised disgust, and after reviewing in cutting ridicule all he had said, I left his presence and joined my wife, waiting for me in the garden fronting the house. Bidding adieu to Fred's wife, we were soon seated in the phaeton, getting ready to leave, I thankful for the superstition-destroying rays that science, by a not to be overestimated chance, had ensconced into my thought-box! Never had proud aristocrat so thoroughly despised the low-born as I on that eve those "benighted plebeians!" But, my punishment was to come.

A MOST EXTRAORDINARY MANIFESTATION.

While about to start the ponies, ever ready to answer the whip, Mrs. J., suddenly appeared from behind the phaeton, and, with a peculiar distant expression in her eyes, passed about the team in a circle. This procedure was a sort of "Devil's Good-bye," and introductory to as bad a night as God ever permits the devil to torment defenseless man with!

Attempting to start, I found to my utter dismay, that every encouraging word and even the whip's convincing lash failed to induce the horses to stir, though PREVIOUSLY WILLING AND NEVER BALKY. My attempts proving futile, I turned to the old hag, who then waved her bony hand at us, apparently in high glee, screaming: "NEXT TIME DON'T GIVE ADVICE TO MY FAMILY; AND REMEMBER THAT IT IS OFTEN DANGEROUS TO BLOW WHERE IT BURNS YOU NOT. YOU MAY KNOW A FEW BOOKS, DOCTOR, BUT I CAN DO MUCH THAT YOUR WISDOM CANNOT EXPLAIN!" With an energetic wave of her sinewy hand, retracing her steps around our phaeton, she finished her tirade, shouting: "Go on, doctor, go on! You will shortly be in greater danger than this!"

MORE WONDERFUL OCCULT MANIFESTATIONS

Onward the ponies sped, apparently relieved, and we were glad to have the distance betwixt us and the "witch" increased. By this time evening had set in and we hastened on, yearning for home.

Such is the blessing of a good wife, that soon, under her quieting influence, the above occurrence was no more thought of. We were chatting of future plans, of our contemplated return to Chicago, when suddenly, without the slightest warning, the ponies stopped short, standing stock still, at the same time trembling violently, as if shaken by some controlling force. At first our thoughts did not recur to the "witch" and her threat, BUT WHEN THE HORSES, BUGGY AND CONTENTS, ALL OF IT AND US, WERE UNMISTAKABLY RAISED FROM THE GROUND, REMAINING THUS AFLOAT, VIOLENTLY SHAKING, I WAS FOR THE FIRST TIME INCLINED TO CONSIDER THE POSSIBILITIES OF WITCHCRAFT! While arguing the point with my wife, I chanced to look down at the wheels. The sight that there met my eyes added not to my valor, for at each wheel I plainly discerned a dwarf, or humanlike "something" real as life, of stubby but strong build, lifting with all its might, and evidently the cause of the shaking-up we were still undergoing. All efforts at making the horses stir proved without avail, and in despair, braving the consequences, I jumped from the phaeton, to personally examine matters. The "something" had vanished; at least I saw them no more. But I found the ponies and the wheels still some half-foot from the ground, suspended in the air. I repeatedly passed my hands under the horses' hoofs and the wheels, scarcely believing what my senses of sight and touch now plainly demonstrated! I attempted to turn a wheel, but, though suspended afloat in air, it would not move.

After a hurried consultation with my wife, whose bravery under such trying circumstances was certainly remarkable, I returned to the phaeton, she finally agreeing to leave the buggy. In stepping out her dress caught, securing her directly between the large wheels, at which moment the buggy lowered suddenly to the ground and the horses took a turn to the left, bringing the wheels closely together, within a few inches, certain to crush my wife's body, as she was still held there. I remember her piercing shriek, but cannot recall aught else, save that I saw my wife fall to the ground. A hasty examination revealed no injury!

How was my wife saved from being crushed to death?

We both positively know that she was between the wheels while they met; the distance between them being less than two inches. We cannot explain, though we know these things to have happened.

FLOATING ACROSS A DEEP RAVINE.

We were quite a distance from home and so were forced to return to the phaeton. The spell seemed to be off and we sped up the steep road, both sides of which bordered with deep ravines, cut by the rains of many years. It was as if some intelligent force suddenly deliberately headed the horses towards and over the ravine to the right, some twenty or more feet deep. Though the buggy and ponies touched the ground while on the road, we now floated across this deep ravine, and thus returned without touching its bottom.

I may as well remark right here that the next morning, accompanied by a number of farmers and others, the tracks of the horses feet and of the wheels could be plainly distinguished on the road and also where the team had turned towards the ravine and back again. These tracks led to the ravine's edge, and continued on the other side, the returning tracks equally plain. But the closest examination did not reveal the least mark at the bottom of the ravine, unrefutably proving that we had really floated both ways over the ravine. Indeed, had we not, and had we fallen into said ravine, we could not have escaped injury or even death, and, at best could not have left the ravine without human aid, until the coming day.

A PREDICTION VERIFIED.

Returning to the road, we concluded to leave the horses at the nearest farmhouse, some half-mile distant. All spooks and spookery had vanished. Slowly progressing, it now became quite dark ere we arrived at the farm. My wife was now seized with a great dread lest something evil should befall me at the farmer's, and urged me to pass by and on. But what could I do? It was impractical to lead the horses home, a mile or more, and I rapped at the rear door of the farm-house, several times without recognition. About to try once more, the door suddenly flew open, revealing the farmer, Mr. F., with gun pointed at me and evidently about to fire! My wife's shriek and the fortunate intervention of Mrs. F., recalled the fellow to his senses, and, as if combatting with some unseen influence, he threw the gun far from him, evidently relieved, sinking exhausted to the floor, his blanched cheeks evidencing the turmoil that shook his powerful frame. When we had sufficiently recovered from our surprise, Mr. F., related how an hour or so before, he had strangely been forced to take down that old gun from a hook where it had been forgotten for many years, to clean and load it, and, finally to point it at me, with every intent to kill. He had not recognized me at first, though we were old acquaintances, until my wife's shriek saved him from murder. And, thus, the "witch's" threat, that I would be in greater danger that very night, became verified.

Strange to say, the farmer and his wife ridiculed us for our "superstitious fears," when informed of our experiences, and Mr. F., proposed to drive our team to my home that very night. Wisely, I had kept from him the more occult aspect of our adventures, merely stating that our ponies were balky, due, possibly, to Mrs. J's. influence. But, whenever this couple was ready to start, armed with a large lantern, a sudden whiff of wind, coming from nowhere, extinguished the light, and in the ensuing darkness the same manifestations occurred that had confronted us! The farmer was tenacious and tried again and again, hitching the ponies to a heavy box wagon, but such was the deviltry sure to follow, that these worthy people now peremptorily refused to harbor either of us or our team for the night! "You are both possessed of the devil," was their invariable answer to our request to keep our team over night. Finally I prevailed on him to call on a neighbor, who, ignorant of the trouble, agreed to take the horses to his farm. Nothing further occurred than that we had to walk home, our hearts and heads laboring under conflicting emotions.

THE FINAL END OF THE WITCH.

The above happened years ago and the reader may wish to know what has become of the "witch." It is but a few months since that a physician, my successor there, wrote me of the sudden demise of Mrs. J. To my knowledge, she was an old woman thirty years ago, and I am assured that she looked no older when the accident that removed her to the place where witches are said to go, befell her. It is solemnly stated in that neighborhood that she had made a compact with the Evil One, on promise of certain powers, he agreeing to not "claim her soul" so long as her feet touched the earth, or remained within three feet of the same. This accounted for the one-story, ramoling house above referred to, the long shed without flooring, etc. Mrs. J. might be alive to-day had she not forgotten her pactus with the Evil One, and refrained from mounting a wagon of manure, thus standing over three feet above ground, and, besides, not on soil. The Doctor reports that she was suddenly hurled from the wagon, and when picked up it was discovered that her neck was broken.

As to any such compact with an evil spirit I know not; BUT I DO KNOW THAT ALL I HAVE RELATED ABOVE IS IN STRICT ACCORDANCE WITH THE TRUTH. Though a number of years have since passed, every happening therewith connected is too vivid in my memory to be forgotten. I have since delved in things occult, for over a quarter of a century, and know more than I did then, and, hence, can solve the puzzle somewhat more to my satisfaction, but still I ask the kind reader's assistance in unravelling the above experience. I REPEAT MY ASSURANCE THAT I HAVE RENDERED A TRUTHFUL ACCOUNT, ON WHICH I STAKE MY HONOR. INDEED, I DARE NOT TELL ALL THAT HAPPENED—THEN AND AFTERWARDS—FOR FEAR OF COMMENT.

NUMA NUMANTIUS.

THANKFUL.

I have clothes, a well-filled stomach and a pleasant place to sleep,
And my thankfulness of spirit runs proportionately deep.
There are people who are freezing, and are hungry to the core,
Who for lack of work and shelter are now sleeping out of door.

When I see the mansions gaudy, and provided with the best,
I am thankful that "good fortune" has a brother being blessed.
But I wonder that "good fortune" with so many things in store,
Gives one plenty while another starves and freezes out of door.

When I see the stately churches where the wealthy go to pray
That the "meek and lowly Jesus might their sins all wash away,"
When the means might be expended for the good of mortals more,
I feel sorry for the wealthy who must plead at heaven's door.

I feel thankful there is justice in the somewhere and sometime,
And the thought uplifts my spirit with a radiance sublime,
For the Present seems so partial, with the good things in its store—
All to few men, while their brothers freeze in hunger out of door.

SPIRITS AS CAUSES OF VICE

A Careful and Critical Examination of the Subject.

Any mystical, psuedo-religious system, or advanced spiritual philosophy (whether it be Spiritualism, the New Thought, Christian Science, Theosophy or Quietism) which purposely ignores a thorough analysis, and investigation into the real psychological causes of vice, sin, and crime, will always be treated with moral suspicion.

The first question asked is this, viz., is the system morally clean? Not is the philosophy of the system infallibly true?

If it is not clean the people declare that they do not want it in their families.

The fact that our special reverence for the unseen, and our love for the marvelous is so great, that we would sooner worship, and become the pupils of the most foul and ignorant spirit out of his skin, than the wisest and cleanest saint in it, does not change the matter in the eyes of the public.

Spiritualism is both objective and subjective. In the objective sense, a spirit may be a cause of vice, as when a person is obsessed.

In the subject sense, some psychological force of one's own soul may be a vicious cause.

This view is not flattering. In this last sense a standard of moral responsibility is fixed. Let us take our medicine bravely. It may do no harm, if it does no good, to call attention to the psychological fact that the human passions of jealousy, lust, despair and hate were, by the Jews, personified as spiritual entities, in James 4:5, Numbers 51:17, and other places.

This view belongs strictly to the phase of subjective Spiritualism, i. e., as distinct from the objective phase of obsession.

In the former case, the person is simply self-deceived, drawn away from common sense, and enticed by the spirit entity of their own personal lust, whether it be jealousy, avarice, fear, hate, or the desire for power or sexual conquest.

In the objective experience they are drawn away, and enticed and overpowered by deceiving spirit entities, which besiege them from without, and which spirits are animated by one or the other of the above passions.

Let us continue to bravely take our own medicine.

Let us frankly admit, however, that all the danger to wrong doing does not come from without; that not being infallible (ethical beings) that there may be such a thing as a capacity for self-deception in every human heart that beats.

That human moral evolution implies (in the very term itself) the former existence of immoral psychological states, out of which morals and ethics were evolved.

This question is one which belongs to the sphere of subjective Spiritualism. It concerns the moral condition of my own spirit—not that of a guide. Subjective Spiritualism, therefore, is related to all those moral and ethical conditions relating to my own moral responsibility. In this sense my own fierce, savage passions I personify as the spirits, which are the natural causes of my vices.

My savage ancestors of the zoological garden knew nothing of morals. My ethics are an evolution. Those who have descended from the archangels had a better start. But I was not permitted to come that way. I had come the way of the savage races and the zoological gardens. I had a bad beginning; this is why Darwin took so much pains to declare the nature of my ancestry; for a good man's pedigree is little hunted up. If I have the seeds of savage, cruel and unjust passions lurking within (the elements of my own subjective Spiritualism) I know where they came from; so does Darwin. This is a grim historic fact—not humor or romance. Let us be thorough-going with our view of evolution, or let it alone.

Suppose, then, that I persist in personifying the left-over elements of my own savage passions, as the spirits, which are the natural evolutionary causes of my vices, what then? Well, it necessitates a thorough analysis and investigation into the real psychological causes of the vices of my savage ancestors, as well as those of my own.

The lives of my ancestors of the zoological gardens, and my own life, therefore, began with passions, not with conceptions of the intellect, or with the perceptions of sensation, viz., the child at birth begins with hunger, fear and anger, which are passions—not with conceptions of the intellect or sensations of the senses.

In this sense vice has five distinct stages of psychological growth.

1. The stage of hereditary and self-developed passion, i. e., as of vices which originate in the passions of hunger, fear, anger, hate, jealousy, love of domination, avarice, sex, the seeds of which are in every Spiritualist, living and dead.

2. The stage of the sensations of the senses, i. e., of seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, tasting.

3. The stage of the conceptions of intellect, i. e., of vicious thoughts, mental images, ideas, generic images, inferior concepts, superior concepts. A continuous line of vice-thought always leads to action.

4. The stage of temperament, habit or disposition.

5. The acquired stage of impulsive, self-deceptive secret pleasures; secretly enjoyed for years.

Now, my own spirit, and every developed obsessing spirit that has ever lived on earth, had their natures developed—whether for lofty virtue or degrading vice—according to the above five psychological laws. Therefore, to know anything intelligently of spirits, as causes of vices, we must study and teach the elements of their psychology, as a means of moral self-protection. To evade or ignore these unflattering studies of human nature is as unwise as it is to neglect the careful examination of the sewerage plumbing of a cholera invested district.

An Old Woman With Wonderful Occult Powers.

One of the Most Remarkable Occult Experiences the World Has Ever Seen.

A WEIRD OCCULT EXPERIENCE.

As Related by Numa Numantius, a Prominent Chicago Physician.

The improbable sometimes occurs. It did in this case. The writer is well known to the editor of The Progressive Thinker, who does not believe him to be insane or laboring under an hallucination. Some twenty-five years ago he related to many his remarkable experiences as detailed in thls communication, and with a sincerity that could not fail to carry conviction. His wife, a most estimable lady, who was with him, declares most emphatically that all the incidents connected with this narrative are true. The fact that the medium, Home, was levitated on one occasion, carried along in mid-air by the spirits, and that the passage of matter through matter has been repeatedly proven, brings within the range of possibility every statement made by Numa Numantius. That the central figure in this narrative possessed wonderful occult powers, was known to many.

In 1872 I was located (in medical practice) within thirty miles of Chicago, on a farm, among farmers—plain, honest people and the best of neighbors.

My circuit covered an extensive area, and my wife was wont to accompany me during those long and otherwise monotonous rides. The reader must remember that in those days less was known of things occult, and, besides, I then was an out and out materialist, consequently illy prepared to cope with such matters.

The public dislike of this woman I explained through her repugnant physique, carrying her right shoulder "a la Richard the Third." She, as if in mock reverence, bent her "off knee" in a jerky manner, stumbling more than walking, all the while muttering unintelligible words in croaky voice, mayhaps to some invisible entity.

Who knows?

Her lips, as thin and expressionless as a slit cut in sole leather, were never without motion. From her emanated that weird, witchlike, nonsympathetic magnetism, all for evil and none for good.

Even the recent death of a brother he believed the work of entities servile to his mother, for that death was prognosticated by the "witch" exactly as it happened. At another time, when that brother refused to advance money, Mrs. J. threatened that if the same was not handed to her by Wednesday, she would "SEND THE RED COCK ON HIS ROOF," at midnight of that day. Though Jim's house was situated on Milwaukee avenue in Chicago, some thirty miles distant, and his mother did not leave her farm, a fire actually started on the roof, but was readily extinguished, after which the "witch" promptly received the money.

Fred tearfully referred to his little wife, who was rapidly failing amidst such depressing surroundings and because of the shameful treatment she received from the old hag. I advised Fred to leave his mother and take his wife with him to Chicago, there to manfully work, and in peace and happiness support her, as in duty bound. His other remarks, touching on black magic, I also met, but with pity and scorn, doing my best to reach his "benighted pate" with sufficient of the "light of this enlightened century" to meet and overcome all such "medieval nonsense."

All my pains were for nothing, for Fred implored me to keep my counsel and to not further raise his mother's ire. "For," as he added, "she hears every word you say."

Pointing to his mother working some five hundred feet distant on the farm, Fred further explained:

"IN SOME STRANGE MANNER MOTHER FEELS WHAT PEOPLE THINK, AND I AM POSITIVE THAT SHE NOW KNOWS ALL YOU SAID AND ALL YOU THINK, FOR, FROM MY CHILDHOOD UP SHE ALWAYS KNEW MY THOUGHTS AND THERE WAS NO ESCAPE FROM HER."

Entirely then unacquainted with occult possibilities, I let fly at him my undisguised disgust, and after reviewing in cutting ridicule all he had said, I left his presence and joined my wife, waiting for me in the garden fronting the house. Bidding adieu to Fred's wife, we were soon seated in the phaeton, getting ready to leave, I thankful for the superstition-destroying rays that science, by a not to be overestimated chance, had ensconced into my thought-box! Never had proud aristocrat so thoroughly despised the low-born as I on that eve those "benighted plebeians!" But, my punishment was to come.

A MOST EXTRAORDINARY MANIFESTATION.

While about to start the ponies, ever ready to answer the whip, Mrs. J., suddenly appeared from behind the phaeton, and, with a peculiar distant expression in her eyes, passed about the team in a circle. This procedure was a sort of "Devil's Good-bye," and introductory to as bad a night as God ever permits the devil to torment defenseless man with!

Attempting to start, I found to my utter dismay, that every encouraging word and even the whip's convincing lash failed to induce the horses to stir, though PREVIOUSLY WILLING AND NEVER BALKY. My attempts proving futile, I turned to the old hag, who then waved her bony hand at us, apparently in high glee, screaming: "NEXT TIME DON'T GIVE ADVICE TO MY FAMILY; AND REMEMBER THAT IT IS OFTEN DANGEROUS TO BLOW WHERE IT BURNS YOU NOT. YOU MAY KNOW A FEW BOOKS, DOCTOR, BUT I CAN DO MUCH THAT YOUR WISDOM CANNOT EXPLAIN!" With an energetic wave of her sinewy hand, retracing her steps around our phaeton, she finished her tirade, shouting: "Go on, doctor, go on! You will shortly be in greater danger than this!"

MORE WONDERFUL OCCULT MANIFESTATIONS

Onward the ponies sped, apparently relieved, and we were glad to have the distance betwixt us and the "witch" increased. By this time evening had set in and we hastened on, yearning for home.

Such is the blessing of a good wife, that soon, under her quieting influence, the above occurrence was no more thought of. We were chatting of future plans, of our contemplated return to Chicago, when suddenly, without the slightest warning, the ponies stopped short, standing stock still, at the same time trembling violently, as if shaken by some controlling force. At first our thoughts did not recur to the "witch" and her threat, BUT WHEN THE HORSES, BUGGY AND CONTENTS, ALL OF IT AND US, WERE UNMISTAKABLY RAISED FROM THE GROUND, REMAINING THUS AFLOAT, VIOLENTLY SHAKING, I WAS FOR THE FIRST TIME INCLINED TO CONSIDER THE POSSIBILITIES OF WITCHCRAFT! While arguing the point with my wife, I chanced to look down at the wheels. The sight that there met my eyes added not to my valor, for at each wheel I plainly discerned a dwarf, or humanlike "something" real as life, of stubby but strong build, lifting with all its might, and evidently the cause of the shaking-up we were still undergoing. All efforts at making the horses stir proved without avail, and in my despair, braving the consequences, I jumped from the phaeton, to personally examine matters. The "something" had vanished; at least I saw them no more. But I found the ponies and the wheels still some half-foot from the ground, suspended in the air. I repeatedly passed my hands under the horses' hoofs and the wheels, scarcely believing what my senses of sight and touch now plainly demonstrated! I attempted to turn a wheel, but, though suspended afloat in air, it would not move.

After a hurried consultation with my wife, whose bravery under such trying circumstances was certainly remarkable, I returned to the phaeton, she finally agreeing to leave the buggy. In stepping out her dress caught, securing her directly between the large wheels, at which moment the buggy lowered suddenly to the ground and the horses took a turn to the left, bringing the wheels closely together, within a few inches, certain to crush my wife's body, as she was still held there. I remember her piercing shriek, but cannot recall aught else, save that I saw my wife fall to the ground. A hasty examination revealed no injury!

How was my wife saved from being crushed to death?

We both positively know that she was between the wheels while they met, the distance between them being less than two inches. We cannot explain, though we know these things to have happened.

FLOATING ACROSS A DEEP RAVINE.

We were quite a distance from home and so were forced to return to the phaeton. The spell seemed to be off and we sped up the steep road, both sides of which bordered with deep ravines, cut by the rains of many years. It was as if some intelligent force suddenly deliberately headed the horses towards and over the ravine to the right, some twenty or more feet deep. Though the buggy and ponies touched the ground while on the road, we now floated across this deep ravine, and thus returned without touching its bottom.

I may as well remark right here that the next morning, accompanied by a number of farmers and others, the tracks of the horses feet and of the wheels could be plainly distinguished on the road and also where the team had turned towards the ravine and back again. These tracks led to the ravine's edge, and continued on the other side, the returning tracks equally plain. But the closest examination did not reveal the least mark at the bottom of the ravine, unrefutably proving that we had really floated both ways over the ravine. Indeed, had we not, and had we fallen into said ravine, we could not have escaped injury or even death, and, at best could not have left the ravine without human aid, until the coming day.

A PREDICTION VERIFIED.

Returning to the road, we concluded to leave the horses at the nearest farmhouse, some half-mile distant. All spooks and spookery had vanished. Slowly progressing, it now became quite dark ere we arrived at the farm. My wife was now seized with a great dread lest something evil should befall me at the farmer's, and urged me to pass by and on. But what could I do? It was impractical to lead the horses home, a mile or more, and I rapped at the rear door of the farm-house, several times without recognition. About to try once more, the door suddenly flew open, revealing the farmer, Mr. F., with gun pointed at me and evidently about to fire! My wife's shriek and the fortunate intervention of Mrs. F., recalled the fellow to his senses, and, as if combatting with some unseen influence, he threw the gun far from him, evidently relieved, sinking exhausted to the floor, his blanched cheeks evidencing the turmoil that shook his powerful frame. When we had sufficiently recovered from our surprise, Mr. F., related how an hour or so before, he had strangely been forced to take down that old gun from a hook where it had been forgotten for many years, to clean and load it, and, finally to point it at me, with every intent to kill. He had not recognized me at first, though we were old acquaintances, until my wife's shriek saved him from murder. And, thus, the "witch's" threat, that I would be in greater danger that very night, became verified.

Strange to say, the farmer and his wife ridiculed us for our "superstitious fears," when informed of our experiences, and Mr. F., proposed to drive our team to my home that very night. Wisely, I had kept from him the more occult aspect of our adventures, merely stating that our ponies were balky, due, possibly, to Mrs. J's. influence. But, whenever this couple was ready to start, armed with a large lantern, a sudden whiff of wind, coming from nowhere, extinguished the light, and in the ensuing darkness the same manifestations occurred that had confronted us! The farmer was tenacious and tried again and again, hitching the ponies to a heavy box wagon, but such was the deviltry sure to follow, that these worthy people now peremptorily refused to harbor either of us or our team for the night! "You are both possessed of the devil," was their invariable answer to our request to keep our team over night. Finally I prevailed on him to call on a neighbor, who, ignorant of the trouble, agreed to take the horses to his farm. Nothing further occurred than that we had to walk home, our hearts and heads laboring under conflicting emotions.

THE FINAL END OF THE WITCH.

The above happened years ago and the reader may wish to know what has become of the "witch." It is but a few months since that a physician, my successor there, wrote me of the sudden demise of Mrs. J. To my knowledge, she was an old woman thirty years ago, and I am assured that she looked no older when the accident that removed her to the place where witches are said to go, befell her. It is solemnly stated in that neighborhood that she had made a compact with the Evil One, on promise of certain powers, he agreeing to not "claim her soul" so long as her feet touched the earth, or remained within three feet of the same. This accounted for the one-story, rambling house above referred to, the long shed without flooring, etc. Mrs. J. might be alive to-day had she not forgotten her pactus with the Evil One, and refrained from mounting a wagon of manure, thus standing over three feet above ground, and, besides, not on soil. The Doctor reports that she was suddenly hurled from the wagon, and when picked up it was discovered that her neck was broken.

As to any such compact with an evil spirit I know not; BUT I DO KNOW THAT ALL I HAVE RELATED ABOVE IS IN STRICT ACCORDANCE WITH THE TRUTH. Though a number of years have since passed, every happening therewith connected is too vivid in my memory to be forgotten. I have since delved in things occult, for over a quarter of a century, and know more than I did then, and, hence, can solve the puzzle somewhat more to my satisfaction, but still I ask the kind reader's assistance in unravelling the above experience. I REPEAT MY ASSURANCE THAT I HAVE RENDERED A TRUTHFUL ACCOUNT, ON WHICH I STAKE MY HONOR. INDEED, I DARE NOT TELL ALL THAT HAPPENED—THEN AND AFTERWARDS—FOR FEAR OF COMMENT.

NUMA NUMANTIUS.

THANKFUL.

I have clothes, a well-filled stomach and a pleasant place to sleep,
And my thankfulness of spirit runs proportionately deep.
There are people who are freezing, and are hungry to the core,
Who for lack of work and shelter are now sleeping out of door.

When I see the mansions gaudy, and provided with the best,
I am thankful that "good fortune" has a brother being blessed.
But I wonder that "good fortune" with so many things in store,
Gives one plenty while another starves and freezes out of door.

When I see the stately churches where the wealthy go to pray
That the "meek and lowly Jesus might their sins all wash away,"
When the means might be expended for the good of mortals more,
I feel sorry for the wealthy who must plead at heaven's door.

I feel thankful there is justice in the somewhere and sometime,
And the thought uplifts my spirit with a radiance sublime,
For the Present seems so partial, with the good things in its store—
All to few men, while their brothers freeze in hunger out of door.

SPIRITS AS CAUSES OF VICE

A Careful and Critical Examination of the Subject.

Any mystical, psuedo-religious system, or advanced spiritual philosophy (whether it be Spiritualism, the New Thought, Christian Science, Theosophy or Quietism) which purposely ignores a thorough analysis, and investigation into the real psychological causes of vice, sin, and crime, will always be treated with moral suspicion.

The first question asked is this, viz., is the system morally clean? Not is the philosophy of the system infallibly true?

If it is not clean the people declare that they do not want it in their families.

The fact that our special reverence for the unseen, and our love for the marvelous is so great, that we would sooner worship, and become the pupils of the most foul and ignorant spirit out of his skin, than the wisest and cleanest saint in it, does not change the matter in the eyes of the public.

Spiritualism is both objective and subjective. In the objective sense, a spirit may be a cause of vice, as when a person is obsessed.

In the subject sense, some psychological force of one's own soul may be a vicious cause.

This view is not flattering. In this last sense a standard of moral responsibility is fixed. Let us take our medicine bravely. It may do no harm, if it does no good, to call attention to the psychological fact that the human passions of jealousy, lust, despair and hate were, by the Jews, personified as spiritual entities, in James 4:5, Numbers 51:17, and other places.

This view belongs strictly to the phase of subjective Spiritualism, i. e., as distinct from the objective phase of obsession.

In the former case, the person is simply self-deceived, drawn away from common sense, and enticed by the spirit entity of their own personal lust, whether it be jealousy, avarice, fear, hate, or the desire for power or sexual conquest.

In the objective experience they are drawn away, and enticed and overpowered by deceiving spirit entities, which besiege them from without, and which spirits are animated by one or the other of the above passions.

Let us continue to bravely take our own medicine.

Let us frankly admit, however, that all the danger to wrong doing does not come from without; that not being infallible (ethical beings) that there may be such a thing as a capacity for self-deception in every human heart that beats.

That human moral evolution implies (in the very term itself) the former existence of immoral psychological states, out of which morals and ethics were evolved.

This question is one which belongs to the sphere of subjective Spiritualism. It concerns the moral condition of my own spirit—not that of a guide. Subjective Spiritualism, therefore, is related to all those moral and ethical conditions relating to my own moral responsibility. In this sense my own fierce, savage passions I personify as the spirits, which are the natural causes of my vices.

My savage ancestors of the zoological garden knew nothing of morals. My ethics are an evolution. Those who have descended from the archangels had a better start. But I was not permitted to come that way. I had come the way of the savage races and the zoological gardens. I had a bad beginning; this is why Darwin took so much pains to declare the nature of my ancestry; for a good man's pedigree is little hunted up. If I have the seeds of savage, cruel and unjust passions lurking within (the elements of my own subjective Spiritualism) I know where they came from; so does Darwin. This is a grim historic fact—not humor or romance. Let us be thorough-going with our view of evolution, or let it alone.

Suppose, then, that I persist in personifying the left-over elements of my own savage passions, as the spirits, which are the natural evolutionary causes of my vices, what then? Well, it necessitates a thorough analysis and investigation into the real psychological causes of the vices of my savage ancestors, as well as those of my own.

The lives of my ancestors of the zoological gardens, and my own life, therefore, began with passions, not with conceptions of the intellect, or with the perceptions of sensation, viz., the child at birth begins with hunger, fear and anger, which are passions—not with conceptions of the intellect or sensations of the senses.

In this sense vice has five distinct stages of psychological growth.

1. The stage of hereditary and self-developed passion, i. e., as of vices which originate in the passions of hunger, fear, anger, hate, jealousy, love of domination, avarice, sex, the seeds of which are in every Spiritualist, living and dead.

2. The stage of the sensations of the senses, i. e., of seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, tasting.

3. The stage of the conceptions of intellect, i. e., of vicious thoughts, mental images, ideas, generic images, inferior concepts, superior concepts. A continuous line of vice-thought always leads to action.

4. The stage of temperament, habit or disposition.

5. The acquired stage of impulsive, self-deceptive secret pleasures; secretly enjoyed for years.

Now, my own spirit, and every developed obsessing spirit that has ever lived on earth, had their natures developed—whether for lofty virtue or degrading vice—according to the above five psychological laws. Therefore, to know anything intelligently of spirits, as causes of vices, we must study and teach the elements of their psychology, as a means of moral self-protection. To evade or ignore these unflattering studies of human nature is as unwise as it is to neglect the careful examination of the sewerage plumbing of a cholera invested district.

The Progressive Thinker Still Leads the Procession!

Items of General Interest in Connection with Spiritualism.

Since writing my last letter to The Progressive Thinker I have done considerable wandering, visiting many towns and trying to spread the good word as best I can. As the towns visited are too numerous to mention in one lotter, I will confine myself to the work of the last ten days, as to my mind the most important features have arisen in that time.

Leaving home in answer to the calls received, I visited Pepin, Wis., and spoke to the good people there. I found a very desirable refuge in the home of Bro. and Sister Foster, and learned that wherever we go we may find noble souls who are striving to unfold the higher elements of character to the best advantage. To say I was royally treated in this pleasant home would not express my feelings. Good companionship in the form, good companionship from the spirit-side of life, and then the Spiritual papers in abundance—The Progressive Thinker Library and a number of those Royal Roycroft books turned out by Elbert Hubbard and his co-workers. What more could a man hungry for the world's best thought want?

I spoke in the very comfortable hall which was placed at my disposal, and had a fine audience the first night—then the second evening, what an audience greeted me and made me feel that Spiritualism was not devoid of interest to hungry souls yet. The hall was crowded, and nowhere have I received any better attention than here. So pleased was I with my reception that I immediately threatened to visit them again, and shall certainly do so.

The next point was Porcupine, Wis. After a merry ride of fourteen miles with the representative of "Uncle Sam" I arrived at this little village, and in the evening held forth in the school house. A goodly number of seekers held down the seats, and gave me all the attention I could desire, on Wednesday evening. Thursday it stormed heavily, but in spite of the inclement weather, the school was filled with people who came from I know not where. There is not much to see in Porcupine, but they do have people in goodly numbers. While here I was entertained by Bro. and Sister Chas. Myers, who are old-time Spiritualists. A feature of the meetings there was unusual in my experience. I had been talking some time, and looking at my watch discovered that my tongue had been "wagging" for nearly an hour and a half. I was surprised, as it had not seemed so long. I remarked on the fact and said it was time to stop, when a gentleman spoke up quickly, saying, "turn your watch back and go on." Well, Bro. Francis, I had known of things that pleased me less than that did, and I simply mention the occurrence to show that the people are eager for light upon this most fascinating subject. I wish to add further that if a really first-class medium and speaker will go there they will give him, or her, even better attention than they gave "yours truly."

Friday again found me on the wing. Once more a fourteen-mile drive up and down the hills with Uncle Sam's mail carrier; then a swift ride by rail, and I found myself in "Odd Fellows' Hall," in St. Paul, Minn., stowing away the good things prepared by the Ladies' Auxiliary. Here was in session the Midwinter Mass Meeting of the Minnesota State Spiritualist Association.

A conference conducted by that veteran worker, Mrs. C. D. Pruden, of St. Paul, opened the sessions. A lively discussion of points relative to the cause of Spiritualism made the conference of interest to all. In the afternoon, a fine audience greeted the workers, and I believe felt well repaid for their attendance.

Those taking part were Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, Mrs. S. M. Lowell, and your correspondent. Mrs. Lowell gave the address, and was cordially greeted by her old friends and admirers. Mrs. Whitwell gave the Invocation and I gave a few messages from the friends beyond the border. The whole program was interspersed with music and song, and presided over by Mr. J. S. Maxwell.

The evening session was well attended. The workers were the Zumbachs, in music and song; Mrs. Asa Talcott in an invocation, Mrs. Eva McCoy of Marshalltown, Ia., and someone else, I believe, whose name has slipped my mind, as message bearers, and myself as disturber of those who wished to spend a portion of their time wrapped in the snares of the Siren "Morpheus."

Saturday, Feb. 27.—By this morning's conference, which was presided over by Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, the friends who began to flock into the hall, were thoroughly awakened, and began to take hold of the work in real earnest. The subject, "What can we do to promote our beloved cause of Spiritualism," proposed by Sanford Niles, of Minneapolis, was the "open sesame" to the realm of thought, and like scintillating rays of light came the mental gems, hot from the forge of thought. Those who spoke were Sanford Niles, J. P. Whitwell, Mrs. Tryon, Mrs. Pruden, Mrs. Lowell, Mrs. Shaft and many others, including the "boy from Wisconsin."

At 2:30 a still larger audience brought inspiration to the workers, who were Mrs. C. D. Pruden, who gave the invocation; Mrs. Carrie Tryon of Minneapolis, who, in spite of physical difficulties, gave a very excellent address; and Mrs. Sauer of St. Paul and Will J. Erwood of La Crosse, as message bearers.

In the evening another royal audience, and the work went merrily onward. Force had accumulated until the very halls vibrated with power. Once more the Zumbachs gave voice to their beautiful songs. Mrs. Lowell opened the service with an invocation. Remarks, trite and to the point were made by the vice-president of the association, Mr. J. P. Whitwell of St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Whitwell has the happy faculty of always having something to say ,and of saying it well. After Bro. Whitwell the address of the evening was given by your correspondent, and then came more messages by Prof. Zeno, of Minneapolis, and Mrs. Eva McCoy.

Sunday, Feb. 28 will be a red letter day in the history of Spiritualism in and around St. Paul. Certainly it was one of the most successful days I have ever seen anywhere, and contains a lesson that every Spiritualist in the country should seek to learn, and an example that all societies should seek to follow. An excellent address was given by Mrs. J. P. Whitwell at the morning session, and messages were given by Mrs. Sauer and the writer. Dinner over, an immense audience gathered in the large hall, and the feature par excellence was presented.

The children of the St. Paul Lyceum, fifty strong, marched into the hall and upon the stage. Carrying flags and graded from the tiny tots of four up to the boys and girls of sixteen and seventeen they made a beautiful sight. After singing "America," the children took the seats reserved for them, and then came the real surprise.

Recitations and songs were given by many of the members, including Elsie Johnson; Lily Cedarleaf, Ethel McKay, Iver Johnson, Leroy Traeger, Jennie Wallenberger, Edith Wallenberger, Alvira Wallenberger, Marjory Smith and Mamie Pease. Then came the orations of the older children, ranging from 10 years of age to 17, which showed to its fullest value the work of the Lyceum during the four years of its existence.

So important is this phase of the work that I hope you will publish this part of my report, at least, verbatim: The first little speaker was Miss Annie Whitwell, aged 10. Very slight and childish she looked, with her bright golden hair and blue eyes, but strong and clear was her voice as she spoke to us on "Spirit Return."

"Mr. President and Friends:—I would like to tell you something about "Spirit Return." I think everyone ought to know about it. If my papa and mamma were to go to the spirit world I would be very sorry to lose them, but it would be much harder if I thought they had gone away from me forever, and could never come back to me. But you see I know they could come to me, and if I were to go to the spirit world I could still be home with papa and mamma. YOU SEE WE DO NOT DIE, BECAUSE THERE IS NO DEATH; and we do not go away; we just stay at home, where we love to be.

"It is called 'Spirit Return' because people used to think the spirits went a long way off to heaven, but they don't have to do that; they just stay at home and love their papa and mamma like they used to do in the body, and they enjoy God, too, because you know God is everywhere. So I think you all should know of 'spirit return.'

"It exists whether we know it or not, and it gives so much comfort and happiness when we do know of it. Then it will help little folks to lead a good life. Perhaps mamma or papa is watching them from the spirit world. I know I would not like my pa or ma to see me do anything very naughty, and I think if all you papas and mammas who have little folks in the spirit world knew that they could be in your home with you, you would not feel quite so sad, and when you go out in the world to work you would try to be good, because your little girl is near; and when you go to your home in the spirit world you will meet and talk to your own little child again; and I know I would not like my pa to be naughty or unkind. So spirit return helps us to be happy and good, and teaches us that we shall some day return to help and comfort those who are left behind after we pass to spirit life." * * *

The next oration was that given by Master George Whitwell, aged 17. The subject upon which he spoke is the all-important one of the Lyceum. How well he presented the question can be appreciated by the following:

The Lyceum.

"Mr. President and Friends:—It is my privilege to speak to you this afternoon on the benefits of the Lyceum. The Lyceum was founded many years ago by Andrew Jackson Davis, after having seen a vision of one, shown to him from the spirit world. In this vision he saw a lyceum composed of children and grown people, who had passed from our sphere of life to the spirit world. They were formed into groups according to their age and knowledge, and each of these groups was taught by a leader.

Our lyceum in St. Paul is arranged on this same plan; we have four groups—the first for little girls, the second is for boys, the third group is for young ladies and the fourth group is for adults. I belong to the second group, and have been a member of the lyceum ever since it was formed by Mr. and Mrs. Kates, four years ago, and I believe it would be a good thing if all Spiritualists would send their children to the lyceum. Parents should remember that they cannot always control their children, and if they wish to learn the beautiful truths and religion of Spiritualism, they should bring them or send them to the lyceum while they are still young, and, it is equally important that the young folks should be prepared and instructed to carry on the work of Spiritualism when the parents have passed on to the spirit world.

"So I extend to you all, in behalf of our own members, a hearty welcome and invitation to attend our lyceum on Sunday afternoons.

"Our lyceum, as I have said, has been formed for four years, and while we have not grown very fast in numbers, I feel that each of us who have attended has gained much in knowledge of the laws of life, both here and hereafter. I understand that it is better that we should reason out for ourselves some of the problems of life relating to our spiritual unfoldment, rather than to depend entirely upon our parents and teachers for a knowledge of these things, because each one of us has his own life to live, and his own experiences to pass through, in order to gain perfect development, mentally and spiritually.

"In our lyceum we are taught to bring and express our own thoughts on questions pertaining to Spiritualism, and in this way we hope to attain a still higher knowledge of truth, and get out of some of the old ruts which people have followed in for many years, just because their parents walked in these ruts before them. This gives us confidence in ourselves and also teaches us to express our own thoughts in a proper manner.

"I know a great many people make a great mistake, in thinking the lyceum is only for children. This should not be so; for if the older people and leaders of the classes do not come out, the children will soon become discouraged, and stay away also, for children generally like to do what they see older people doing. And there is as much for the older people to learn of Spiritualism and of the spirit life as there is for children to learn. If you know all about leading a good life here, and of the spirit life hereafter, come and help to teach us of it. Your knowledge is not given to you for yourself alone, but for the benefit of humanity, and you do wrong to hide it. If you do not know of these things, come with us to our lyceum and grow with us in a knowledge of Spiritual truths, and give us the strength and encouragement of your presence with us.

"It is much better for children to be present at the lyceum on Sunday afternoon, learning how to purify the body, mind and soul, than to spend the whole day in aimless amusement, and it certainly is an advantage and a great help to grown people to lay aside material and worldly affairs, once a week, and seek earnestly for a knowledge of their own spiritual nature, and also of the spirit land toward which we are all travelling." * * *

Next in order came Master Eddie Hottinger, age 15, who voiced the following suggestive sentiments on "The Value of the Circle:"

"Mr. President, Co-workers and Friends:—As has just been announced by Mr. Whitwell, the subject upon which I am to give a short talk is 'The Value of the Circle.' To derive a benefit from a circle, a great deal depends upon the Spirit Guides who use the mediums as their instruments. Some guides have in the past had more experience in controlling mediums than have others, and, as the old saying is "practice makes perfect," so experience has the same effect upon the guides. This also refers to the medium. The more a medium is controlled, the easier it is for their guides to handle them to a better advantage, and to give a fuller understanding of Spiritualism.

"Now to get closer to my subject I think it would take something more than words to express the value of the circle. After attending some half dozen services you will see that you will desire to come in closer touch with your spirit friends. So my, friends, by attending circles you can acquire all this, and can come in closer contact with your loved ones on the other side of life than you can by attending public evening services. You can also develop mediumship, if you have mediumistic powers within you; furthermore you can discuss more fully the many subjects pertaining to Spiritualism than you can otherwise.

"It forms a firm and unshaken foundation for young manhood and womanhood—your hungry souls will be fed by the wonderful words which come from the unseen world, and you will feel thankful for the couple of hours in the week you may chance to spend in a circle. It is a place of consolation, happiness and good thoughts.

"Harmony should reign in the heart of every person sitting in a circle, for with harmony the best results only can be obtained. I myself have at the present time the great pleasure to attend a circle; it has given me a truer and nobler view of this grand religion called Spiritualism and has made me an entirely different young man than I was two years ago when I first took to investigating this religion.

"The power of understanding was slow at first, but during the last year I have learned and made more progress than ever before. It has given me a broader thought, of understanding what Spiritualism really is, and I more than comprehend what it is to lead the life of a true Spiritualist. It is the same with many other Spiritualists of to-day as it is in my case.

"As the time is short, I must come to a close, but I wish to state that I sincerely wish that many in this hall, in the days to come, will spend a couple of hours a week in attending a circle. Do so when you have the chance, because it will benefit you, and you will never regret having done so. I say this with earnestness, because I know it of my own experience." * * *

Those who listened to the sincere tone of the above mentioned young man could not doubt but that he spoke as he felt. After him came another boy of 16, whose effort made many of us open our eyes in astonishment. This was Master Joseph Whitwell, Jr., who entertained us by telling us, in simple, well chosen language of the profit to be gained by an understanding of "The Power of Thought."

"Mr. President and Friends:—I have often heard it said that "thoughts are things," and I believe it to be true, because every day I see the effects of thoughts written in the lines of people's faces. To me "Thought" is the great principle or foundation on which we build our success in life. Every act of our lives is preceded by a thought, and if we allow a bad or wrong thought in our minds and do not try to put it out it will certaintly lead to a wring act. If, on the other hand, we do put the wrong thought out of our minds by turning our thoughts to some other object, we become much stronger ourselves and the wrong thought will not be so apt to return again, and if it does, we shall find it much easier to get rid of than we did the first time; and this is the way that habits are formed which will build for us a beautiful character.

"The old commandments have said, "Thous shalt not do wrong." I think if they were written again to-day they would read, "Thou shalt not think wrong;" for if a man does not think wrong, then he is clean of heart and he never will do wrong. And from this I should say our "thoughts are things" which can be controlled and guided and cultivated by the use of our will power, and by getting them into proper channels of usefulness. The mind is, or should be, at all times active, and when a wrong thought comes to the mind, the right thing to do would be to take up some thought or work of usefulness, with energy and so learn to control the action of the mind.

"It is just as practical to change a current of thought from one channel to another as it is to change the current of water, taking it from a course of waste and destruction, to one of construction and usefulness. No man is a strong man until he has learned how to control and to change the current of his thoughts at will.

"Reading good books has a good effect on the reader, because it opens new channels in the mind through which the powerful currents of thought may be turned at any time, adding character and grace to manhood, and the more channels for good thoughts that are opened up the less opportunity or danger will there be of the disastrous floods of evil thoughts overwhelming the mind, as these channels will be closed from the fact that they have not been used. Then also we must remember that there are books that we should not read at all, as they but serve to open up channels through which the currents of thoughts may flow without benefit to ourselves or humanity.

"Realizing the power of thought, we should try at all times to know what is right; then we can think right and teach what is right. I do not think it is right for people to ask one another to take a drink, for while some people can and do drink moderately, the very person whom you ask to drink might become a drunkard, making to himself the excuse, "Oh, Mr. So-and-so is a fine fellow, and he drinks; so why shouldn't I?" and in a short time the habit has such a strong hold on him that he cannot overcome it.

"Then through the power of thought we can form a good, happy disposition, or we can form one just the opposite. By keeping cool and not allowing every little thing of this life to aggravate us and make us angry, we become stronger. If we get angry we become weaker, and soon it becomes a habit to grumble at every little duty in life. If we expect to be happy we should try to be pleased with things as they come to us, and remember that no one else can make us happy if we will not try to make ourselves and others happy. So I say we should always keep and cultivate the best and highest thoughts, and we shall surely do the best and noblest actions, and we shall be doing our share towards bringing heaven and happiness on earth." * * *

Two very fine efforts were those of Miss Mamie Pease, age 15, and Miss Olive Crooks, aged 13, the former dealing with music in the Spiritual way, and the latter with the benefits of mediumship. Unfortunately I was unable to secure their manuscript, so am unable to do more than mention them. Some beautiful thoughts will be found in the following address on "Spiritualism," which is the last I have to report, and which was rendered by Miss Carrie Jordan, another of the 15-year-old orators. These lecturettes I am giving verbatim, as written by the pupils themselves, and to say that they show what has been accomplished by faithful training in that lyceum should bring a blush of shame to all who have failed to see the need of lyceum work. But to proceed. "Spiritualism," by Miss Carrie Jordan.

"When Christ came upon this earth and began his teachings he was understood by few, and many religions have drifted from his teachings. He laid the foundation for Spiritualism—sowed the good seed—and to-day we are reaping the good thoughts from his actions and good deeds.

"We may say that the Fox Sisters had the first rappings; they may be the first to make their gift of Spiritualism known to the people. Spiritualism existed long before Christ was born, but the people who were gifted with spirit return, or who were possessed by Satan, as the ignorant people called it, who could talk with their departed dead, kept their belief a secret for fear that the ruler of their country or some other religion would put them out of existence.

"Spiritualism tells us to live in harmony with one another—to 'do unto others as we would that they should do unto us.' Spiritualism says you can talk with your loved ones in the Spirit World. We know what we are living for—we know our mission on this earth. We know that these great mechanical inventions were made on the other side of life, and then were brought to this world, made by some one, who possibly did not know what Spiritualism is, or what it was, only that his body was the instrument that the spirits could handle to bring out their work, which would uplift humanity. We cannot become a Spiritualist simply because we attend Spiritualist meetings, and not understand, or take some interest in the service, nor if we do not live the life of an honest man or woman.

"Friend, to prepare for ourselves a beautiful home on the other side of life we should throw a ray of sunshine into a gloomy wanderer's path, whose road to the dark and silent river is e'er shrouded with trouble and misery. He who cannot help himself because he was left by the roadside under some influence.

"The road of Spiritualism is long and narrow; we can be easily led astray from the beautiful path on which we have endeavored to remain, and to stick to as long as we could. Oh, the road is long for the weary wanderer, and many a steep he has to climb to reach his long hoped-for destiny. Their paths, as they journey on through life, may be full of misfortunes, but friends on the unseen side of life are ever near them, waiting to give them a hand, to help them overcome the obstacles, but are shut out by other forces. Part of their lives may be shaded with trees and flowers, while other parts may be barren and hilly. They who are struggling to reach the goal or the silent River of Death, and be ferried across by their spirit friends into the land of eternity; oh, let us give a helping hand and a kind word to help them on life's way, for such is the work of Spiritualism."

This closed the lyceum exercises, and the program was augmented by a thirty-minute lecture each by Mrs. Pruden and Mrs. Talcott, and messages by Mrs. Eva McCoy and the writer. Also music by the Zumbachs.

In the evening an immense audience taxed the seating capacity of the hall, necessitating the opening of an adjoining dining hall to accommodate the people. After the usual invocation, and a few remarks by J. S. Maxwell, the writer gave the address of the evening, and was followed by Mrs. Mary Jacobs and Mrs. Eva McCoy with messages from arisen friends. Altogether this was one of the most successful and harmonious meetings I have ever attended. The music was fine. All the workers were in fine fettle and the audiences large and appreciative. President Maxwell was much in evidence and aided largely in making the meetings a success, speaking a good word when needed and losing his voice entirely, when wishing the "man from LaCrosse" to do his begging for him—then mysteriously finding it when he learned that the friends responded quite liberally. Fraternally, WILL J. ERWOOD.

ALWAYS SOME ONE BELOW.

On the lowest round of the ladder
I firmly planted my feet,
And looked up at the dim vast distance
That made my future so sweet.

I climbed till my vision grew weary,
I climbed till my brain was on fire,
I planted each footstep with wisdom,
Yet I never seemed to get higher.

For this round was glazed with indifference,
And that one was glazed with scorn,
And when I grasped firmly another
I found under velvet a thorn.

Till my brain grew weary of planning,
And my heart strength began to fail,
And the flesh of the morning's excitement
Ere evening commenced to pale.

But just as my hands were unclasping
Their hold on the last gained round,
When my hopes, coming back from the future,
Were sinking again to the ground.

One who had reached near the summit
Reached backward a helping hand,
And refreshed, encouraged and strengthened
I took once again my stand.

And I wish—oh, I wish—that the climbers
Would never forget as they go,
That though weary may seem their climbing
There is always some one below.

Important Work.

Under the auspices of the international Physio-Psychic Society of 1204 Broadway, New York, and at Berlin, there will shortly be issued a most interesting and important work by Mr. Emil Sutro, author of "Basic Law of Vocal Utterance" and "Duality of Voice," entitled "Duality of Thought and Language."

In this book, the author, having again, for five years, given his entire time and attention to further research, repudiates the materialistic tendency of the age, and shows, by undeniable proof, derived from a study of the essence of language, that man is of dual nature, from his first incipience in the cell, and that the spiritual in this duality prevails over the material.

It will further say that divinity, as we endeavor to view it, and as man has ever endeavored to view it, is a conception emanating from ourselves; that the God, of any period or nation, is the outcome of the more or less advanced civilization of that period and nation; that man is subject to immutable laws of whose origin it is impossible for him to form any true conception.

For the first time in the world's history, metaphysics have been practically applied. True underlying principles have come to light and are furnishing safe guides to knowledge. Thus the road to rational teaching has been opened.

CUBA---ITS WONDERS.

SPIRITUALISTS TAKING POSSESSION OF THE ISLAND.

Mrs. Marian Carpenter Holds the First Spiritualist Meeting There.

To the Editor:—In the sunny and far-away land of Cuba, "The Pearl of the Antilles," many readers of The Progressive Thinker are spending the winter.

The Detroit party consists of E. E. Carpenter and wife, Mrs. Marian Carpenter; W. E. Cole and wife, Dr. C. E. Ford and wife, and F. M. Gates and wife, also Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Carpenter and E. U. Carpenter of Gaylord, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Baldwin, of Grand Rapids, and Mrs. Ellen Randolph, of Delaware, O.

The trip through the south and across the Gulf was uneventful and uninteresting. But when our little ship sailed through the narrow neck of the harbor, under the shadow of the uncompromising and stately Morro Castle, past the ancient and frowning Fort Cabanas, and neared the ill-fated Maine, whose smokestask and watchtower rise many feet above the water, all passengers were on deck, breathlessly watching, as they realized that the distance between them and the historic city of Havana, was rapidly lessening. We soon came to anchor in the midst of busy local craft, sloops unloading their tropical wares from South America and the adjacent islands, steamers from Europe, and three dignified German battle ships. An important little tug comes sputtering to our ship's side, bearing the health officer, who, upon being assured that there was no illness on board, other than that usually attending ocean voyages, allowed us to board the lighter, and we were soon at dock. At dock did I say? I meant fairyland for "behold old things have passed away and all things have become new." This is the realization of the pictures of the prophets in our old geographies.

The city boasts of 260,000 inhabitants, of all colors and types, from the full-blooded negro, up through all the intermediate stages of color, which would puzzle the ethnologist to classify, to purest white. It is hard to tell where the black man ends and the white man begins in this country. We are somewhat handicapped by not being able to speak Spanish, but there are many Americans on the island, and all of the hotels employ interpreters who, if we are sufficiently watchful, will not bleed us more than is consistent with their firm conviction that every American is rich.

Not the least of our pleasure is to go shopping. The principal business thoroughfares are so narrow that canvas is spread across the streets, from roof to roof, as a protection from the merciless tropical sun. Every inducement is offered to tempt the traveler's pocket-book, and rarely does an American come away without a souvenir, in the shape of the beautiful feather work or silver filigree, both indicative of this most interesting country.

Uncle Sam's money is good everywhere. In Santiago none but United States money will be accepted, but in all other places the ratio is $1 American to $1.36 Spanish; for instance if we buy an article worth $1.25 Spanish money and hand the dealer $1 American we receive 11 cents change.

The Cubans are much dissatisfied with the depreciated coin left by Spain, and an effort is being made to adopt United States currency as the standard of value, and will probably be consummated in the near future.

The street cars of Havana, a modern system of belt lines, charge 5 cents American money or 7 cents Spanish.

The city is very clean, General Wood had it thoroughly renovated, and the Cuban government is under treaty obligation to keep it so. In case of failure, the United States is privileged to step in at any time and clean it. Not only did the Americans clean the city, but they paved it, put in sewers and electric lights, also the street car system, and the Cubans' pride, the breakwater, which is a stone wall running for miles along the blue waters of the Gulf. The Island has not yet recovered from the impoverishing effects of thirty years of war, and the Cubans realize how much enterprise and American capital have done for them, yet only the rich and the property owners are in favor of annexation.

While you are shoveling snow off your walks and coal in your furnaces, we are sitting in the park studying the flora, which to the northerner is a never failing source of wonder. We have taken automobile rides 20 miles out of Havana, and our eyes have not rested upon a single tree that we had ever seen its like before. These roads, hundreds of years old, are smooth as a floor, and on either side are tropical trees whose branches interlace, thus forming a canopy over our heads. For picturesque beauty, first place must be given to the Royal Palm, whose smooth trunk towering without branches 75 or 100 feet in the air, is crowned with a mass of waving leaves sensitive to every southern breeze. The heaviest shade trees on the island are the mango, which also furnishes a favorite fruit, and the Indian laurel. Cedar and mahogony are now being lumbered, the former being used on the island for cigar boxes; the latter, squared and exported to the United States, to be made into our finest furniture. Many of the people are not aware of the commercial value of mahogany, and how it shocks our ideas of the eternal fitness of things to see fence posts, foundations and fuel made of that choice wood. The ceiba tree is also in evidence. This uncanny tree whose trunk is almost bursting with its own immensity, is regarded as sacred by the natives, who say, "If you cut it down you will die within the year." At Santiago we stood under the great ceiba, ten feet through at the base, known as the Peace Tree, for it was here that the Spaniards surrendered to General Shafter.

Smoking is a universal custom among the men, and common among the women of the lower classes. Go where you will the men smoke. So far as I can learn, there are no restrictions relative to the use of this obnoxious weed. Between courses at dinner, the men light a cigarette; conductors of railroad trains collect your fare wile puffing a cigar, and clerks behind the counter do the same. Even the porter who made up our berth in a Pullman sleeper, was smoking.

There is a rumor afloat that when a Cuban baby is born, they grease it all over, put a cigarette in its mouth and let it shift for itself. After much inquiry we were unable to verify this rumor or trace it to a reliable source, but certain it is, that outside of the cities, where the Americans interfered, the children wear no clothing until six or eight years of age. We have seen hundreds of these little black babies wearing nothing but a pair of ear-rings or a smile. Every palm-thatched shack boasts of from five to nine children, and of these at least three are too young to be dressed. There is no race suicide troubling Cuba. This strange custom grew out of necessity. During Spanish occupancy these poor Cubans were taxed for nearly everything they possessed, including household articles, such as knives and forks, and all clothing. The climate being mild the oppressed people allowed their children to go without clothing until it became a custom of the country.

There is so much to see and describe that we must turn regretfully away from the fascinating city of Havana, and go 350 miles Eastward. We take the Cuban Central railroad, passing through the provinces of Havana, Matanzas and Santa Clara into Camaguey. Here we leave the main line of railroad and take the Puerto Principe and Nuevitas railroad, whose terminus has a line of New York steamers. We get off at Canet, a most flourishing American colony with a genuine American hotel kept by F. M. Gates and wife, assisted by Mrs. L. A. Henderson, all of Detroit. The colonists are rapidly building homes and in a land where oranges, bananas, pineapples and vegetables grow spontaneously, and cattle graze all the year round, success is assured. The company has been organized one year, controls 1,800 acres of land and owns its horses, mules and agricultural implements. E. E. Carpenter's Southern home is in process of construction, and Mr. Cole and Dr. Ford are drawing plans, and will build soon. Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Cole have two acres set to oranges, which in this climate will produce from the budded stock in about two years. The company contemplate setting out 100 acres or more this season to oranges and grape fruit, which is becoming more popular each year in the States. A capable school teacher from Detroit is expected on the next ship.

It is well known that the Cuban ladies read but little, and are not interested in the topics of the day, but the first thing these American women did at Canet, was to organize a literary club. Is it not true that wherever the American goes there follows schools, books and everything that makes a better citizen? We ought, however, to check this feeling of superiority over our Cuban sisters, and remember that public schools are an innovation instigated by the Americans. Under Spanish dominion there were only private teachers, and none but the rich might learn to read. Now there are compulsory school laws in all of the cities, and the study of English obligatory. I am uninformed as to the rural districts, but believe the opportunity for education are limited.

Last Sunday was the banner day at Canet, for Mrs. Marian Carpenter held the first Spiritualist meeting ever held on the island of Cuba. The dining-room of the Gates Hotel was cleared, and every available chair placed for the expected audience.

The residents are not Spiritualists, but they came en masse. Mrs. Carpenter delivered a lecture in her own inimitable style. Her subject, "Spiritualism as taught in the Bible," was chosen, for her hearers were those unacquainted with the philosophy of Spiritualism. The lecture was well received by the people who expressed surprise that nothing objectionable happened. One skeptic remarked that it was what he had always believed. Even the Baptist missionary's wife attended and was favorably impressed. There was a unanimous request for a meeting every Sunday evening. The heart of every auditor was won. There is only one Marian Carpenter!

There seems to be a widespread notion among Americans that tobacco is the staple product of this island. Nothing can be farther from the truth. It is true that the best tobacco is grown in Cuba, but it requires a certain soil and certain conditions not obtainable on all parts of the island. A tobacco plantation such as owned by Mr. Gray, of Cincinnati, Ohio, 12 miles out of Havana, is a rare investment. The plant grown has a small leaf and is used exclusively for fillers. The tobacco is irrigated and grown under cheese cloth covers when necessary. This care, coupled with the natural properties of the soil adapted to tobacco, produces not only an abundant crop, but the choicest variety, and brings the highest price in the market.

But not all land is suitable for tobacco. The wealth of this island lies in sugar. Eighty-five per cent of all exports is sugar. We visited a sugar plantation and mill, said to be the next largest in the world. It is situated 6 miles from Canet, and 20 miles from Nuevitas, its nearest shipping point. Mr. Sanchez, the owner of the plantation, made us very welcome, and took great pride in showing us his home, his garden, his mill and his 12 children. His home is built in the beautiful Spanish style, open courts with marble floors and a patio, filled with flowers and other tropical plants. In the garden were growing coffee, which we picked; cocoanuts, which were beyond our reach; almonds, bananas, oranges, grape fruit, cocoa, guavas, mammees and strawberries. We saw no grapes, and were informed that under the Spanish regime, grape culture was prohibited. A family, however, was allowed two grape vines, but had to pay a tax of $2.50 each to the crown. The mother country purposed to furnish Cuba with her wine.

Mr. Sanchez owns 42,000 acres of land, 10,000 of which are planted to sugar cane. There are 4,000 men in his employ, and 500 yoke of cattle. Narrow gauge railroads radiate from his mill to the cane field. The plantation is dotted over with stations which are connected with the office by telephone. Unlike products with which we are familiar, cane is planted only once in 10, 15 or 20 years, according to the quality of the soil. We watched the trains bring loads of juicy cane to the mill, where a traveling crane picked it up and placed it in the crusher. Verily the machine seemed to possess human intelligence, so deftly and accurately did it work, The cane passes through two crushers of many tons pressure and the refuse is sufficiently dry to run the immense engine. No other fuel is required. We shall bring home samples of sugar in its various stages of manufacture. The season of a sugar mill varies from three to six months of each year. The capacity of this one is 325,000 pounds of sugar per day or about 32,000 pounds each season, all of which is shipped to New York City to be refined. It goes without saying that Mr. Sanchez is in favor of annexation.

If Cuba would cast in her lot with the United States, her progress would undoubtedly be much more rapid, but no one hurries in Cuba.

If American schools, capital and, energy would control, I suppose the musical "beunos dios, senora," with which the natives now greet us would be changed to the plain, every-day "good morning" of the Americans.

NEW BOOK.

Psychic Light.

BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

A VERY IMPORTANT CALL IS MADE.

A GENEROUS OFFER, AND A CALL TO SPIRITUALISTS.

To the Spiritualists at Large:—A generous offer has been made by a prominent Spiritualist in this city to give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., for the benefit of aged and needy mediums, provided the Spiritualists at large will contribute another Thousand Dollars to the same relief fund by the first of June next. The N. S. A. is now paying out a large monthly sum in pensions to worthy mediums; the calls for aid increase and the fund is constantly being depleted. Let every generous soul who has not already done all possible for this worthy object, kindly send contributions, large or small, to the following address, each will be acknowledged with thanks. The generous man who makes the offer desires to be unnamed to the public.

ARE SPIRITUALISTS SUPERNATURALISTS?

The Question Correctly Answered by W. F. Jamieson.

Spiritualists have enough to answer for without an extra straw of accusation. For my own part, I think more of a Spiritualist right than a Materialist wrong.

"The Torch of Reason," now "Liberal Review," did not, before it expired, believe in "spooks," but it was terribly afraid of them! Before it died itself it charged the Spiritualists with supernaturalism. I knew this is not true, and endeavored to set it right—in fact, to right it on two wrongs.

The Torch said Ingersoll ended the supernatural, something which millions of orthodox Christians still believe. If it meant to say he logically ended it, it is wrong in both instances; and so I wrote the following which The Torch printed:

Does The Torch wish to be understood as having discovered an inconsistency in the attitude of the spiritual journal? While I do not agree with our spiritual brethren on the question of "spirit return," I do agree with them in about nineteen-twentieths of their very liberal philosophy. Years before Colonel Ingersoll delivered his first lecture on the "Gods," Spiritualists declaimed against "the supernatural." If there was any borrowing done, the Colonel borrowed from the Spiritualists, not the Spiritualists from the Colonel. I have been, ever since 1870 an admirer of the Colonel; liked his moral courage, bold, free speech; but "honor to whom honor is due." Is it a fact that Colonel Ingersoll originated the famous expression, "An honest God is the noblest work of man"? If so, let the credit be fixed beyond question.

I did not mean to be unkind in spreading that spider-web trap, but it had set just such a trap for The Progressive Thinker, which was right and the Torch wrong. Here is its reply:

To Friend W. F. Jamieson (Page 6)—We do distinctly wish thee and "the rest of the world" to understand that The Progressive Thinker, of Chicago (Spiritualist), by quoting the passage referred to and refusing to answer it, has placed itself "in an attitude of inconsistency as a spiritual journal," an attitude which grows worse and worse the longer it is continued. Yes, Ingersoll in that passage ends the old notion of "a natural or spiritual supernaturalism," and leaves those of that belief "up to their own funeral," and nothing else. "An honest God is the noblest work of man," was Ingersoll's "own;" but he went it one better when he knocked out all possible Gods and devils, spirits and spooks by the said passage from his last speech, which The Progressive Thinker can quote, but never answer.

This is what I wanted. I then sent the following reply to show that this journal and Spiritualists are leaders in some things at least; but the Torch went out before my last words could reach it. This is what I said:

Did not the Spiritualists logically end supernaturalism a full decade before Ingersoll appeared on the ground? "Hell," "Damnation" and the "Devil" were "ended," logically, a century, or more, by the Universalists and Unitarians, before the genial Colonel made his first bow as a Freethought orator, although I have heard many persons "claim" that Ingersoll ended those dogmas. That he ably re-echoed the teachings of those people, concerning the horrible doctrines, is a fact.

Let us not forget that Swedenborg did a mighty service in liberalizing thousands. The "hells" he retained were mild.

The Spiritualists always taught that their spiritual world is as natural as Neptune or this earth.

This very week, Prof. J. S. Loveland, a scientific gentleman, and one of the finest orators I ever heard, a Spiritualist for fifty years, says in this week's Progressive Thinker:

"Modern Spiritism has but two basic affirmations. 1. Discarnate spirits communicate with spirits still in the flesh. 2. The method or laws of communication is purely natural. These two propositions sweep away all the Gods—all the miracles, and all the religions of humanity, unless we except pure Buddhism."

"Purely natural," says this profound scholar. And so have taught Edmonds, Hare, Brittan, Hardinge, Peebles, Lockwood, and scores of other leading Spiritualists. The literature of Spiritism abounds with teachings against supernaturalism, and in favor of naturalism; that Nature is all in all; that the "Summer Land" is as natural as this earth; that the spirits are as natural as we are.

Some who have not made a close study of this modern movement have been misled by the expression "supramundane"—but that does not mean supernaturalism.

I do not want to see history misstated by any Freethinker. As Ingersoll used to say, Let us have the "Truth of History."

I asked you, "Is it a fact that Colonel Ingersoll originated the famous expression, 'An honest God is the noblest work of man?' If so, let the credit be fixed beyond question."

You answer: "'An honest God is the noblest work of man,' was Ingersoll's 'own.'"

I conclued that the best way to settle this point was to write to the gentleman who, I was strongly impressed, is the real author, Dr. Andrew Jackson Davis, the celebrated Poughkeepsie Seer, and, as I have often said, the intellectual founder of Modern Spiritualism. Here is his answer:

"Boston, Dec. 19, 1903.

"My Dear old Friend, W. F. Jamieson:

"In reply to your welcome letter and question—will say, before the civil war, under the management of Dr. H. F. Gardner in Cochituate Hall, in Boston, one Sunday P. M., in a lecture on the Evolution of a Conception of God in the Human Mind, I took for a text—'An honest God is the noblest work of man.'

"'Mr. Alfred E. Giles was an auditor, and he is still in this world—the others not.

"Years afterwards my attention was called to the same expression by Mr. Robt. G. Ingersoll in one of his discourses. And he was everywhere credited with originating that special reversal of the poet's line.

"Am glad to hear from you! May you enjoy all the good you do and desire—is the New Year's salutation of your "Friend, ever,

"A. J. DAVIS."

"Am very busy."

Let us have the truth at all hazards. "An honest God" belongs to A. J. Davis, the Spiritualist, not to Col. R. G. Ingersoll, the Agnostic.

Another fact: The Spiritualists are Naturalists. W. F. JAMIESON.

NOTABLE SEANCES.

Excellent Results With Mr. P. L. O. A. Keeler.

To the Editor:—We have the honor of submitting to you the following report: The Psychical Research Society of Richmond, Va., secured the services of Mr. P. L. O. A. Keeler, physical medium of Washington, D. C., for two seances and private sittings, on Feb. 20 and 21 last.

The seances were held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Daniels, members of the society, and were of a semi-private character, thirty tickets being issued to members and friends for each evening.

Not knowing the exact character of the seances, made the securing of strictly mechanical test conditions a matter of difficulty for the society, but we thoroughly satisfied ourselves as to the absence of confederates, of trick paraphernalia, and of any sleight-of-hand methods on the part of the medium.

The seances were given in a soft light, strong enough to read by at ten feet distance.

The cabinet was formed by stretching a curtain across one corner of the room, with its top at a height of four and a half feet from the floor. Three chairs were placed side by side in front of this curtain, Mr. Keeler occupying the one to the left (facing audience), and a lady and gentleman, our own people, were seated on the others to the right of Mr. Keeler in order named, thus forming the battery.

Mr. Keeler's right hand was placed on the upper part of the lady's left arm, his left hand clasping the wrist. The lady's right hand grasped the left hand of the gentleman on her right. A smaller curtain was then thrown over this battery and fastened by rings and hooks to the back curtain, at such height and in such manner as to bring the front curtain well up around the necks of the three, thus forming a cabinet for the generation of the necessary force, yet leaving the heads of those in the battery in plain view, as was also the case with the right hand and arm of the gentleman on the right, which was thrust through an orifice made for this purpose in the front curtain.

The first part of the seance consisted of bell ringing, tambourine thumping, imitation of snare-drum playing on the back of a guitar with the two halves of a split clothes-pin, spinning tambourine on cane, playing of guitar in positions which would preclude all possibility of it being done by medium, even had his hands been free, and many other things of a like nature.

All this in the main was pulled off in the cabinet back of the curtain.

The second part of the seance (for which the battery was changed) consisted principally in the materialization of hands in front of curtain, which wrote on pads for those who held them. Five hands were out at one time, frequently three, both above and before curtain.

One hand was positively identified by means of a distorted thumb, the distortion having been caused by an accident. When held the hands melted through one's fingers despite all effort to hold them. Many messages were written on small slips of paper and thrown over from behind the curtain. The light was turned slightly lower for this part of the programme, but the number of hands out before the curtain at the same time, their various shapes and sizes, and the fact that they grasped and retained and wrote messages in plain view of all with the pencils handed them, would render any theory of trickery or artificial hands absurd.

The third and last part of the seance consisted of trumpet work. The light was turned very low for this phase of manifestation, but by careful watching, testing and weighing, those who were close enough to verify their senses are satisfied that it was genuine psychic phenomena.

During the entire seance we repeatedly received full assurances from the ladies in the battery that Mr. Keeler's hands were in position, especially during the time the more startling manifestations were in progress; also we examined the curtain before and after the seances, helped to put them in position and arrange the cabinet, so we know whereof we speak.

George Christy of minstrel fame, is Mr. Keeler's cabinet control, and proves himself not only efficient in this capacity, but also in that of entertainer, and the whose seance is enlivened by his mirth-provoking actions. In the private slate-writing sittings, those who secured same are confident of the genuineness of the messages received and the phenomena, as the very simplicity of Mr. Keeler's method would prove all absence of trickery.

One sitter as a test wrote the name of a person still in earth life, inquiring as to the happiness of the supposed decarnate one, etc., and received an answer from the party's nephew who is in spirit life, that the party addressed was still in the flesh.

A letter from one who passed out some ten years ago was placed between two slates, the letter not having been taken from its envelope in the medium's presence, and these slates were placed at the sitter's right hand on the table with neither medium nor sitter touching them. When opened both slates were found to be written full, the message was signed with the same signature that was signed to the letter in the envelope, and the message itself was full of quotations as to names, places, dates and matter written therein from the old letter written so many years ago, and was a running comment on same. These slate writings were given in broad daylight, by a clear window, at a table furnished by the society, the slates furnished principally by the sitters themselves, and at no time were they out of sight or reach of the sitters and were held by both medium and sitters above the table during the writing.

Altogether the seances and private sittings were highly satisfactory to those of the society, who were in position to scrutinize the work at close range. Those who owing to their position and distance from the curtain at the seances, or who, by failure to secure private sittings, were unable to verify the phenomena presented will be given an opportunity to do so shortly, as it is the desire of the society to secure Mr. Keeler for further work at an early date. Considering the fact that our society is made up largely of investigators rather than converts to the claims of Spiritualism, the showing made by Mr. Keeler and his controls was excellent, and our decision as embodied in this report is forced from us in direct antagonism to our former opinions regarding such matter, by the cold mechanical proof furnished us from this source. We do not wish to be considered as advertising Mr. Keeler. The gentleman knows nothing of this report or its contents, and while we sincerely hope to meet him often upon the warm plane of friendship, yet he came to us in this instance upon arrangements of a purely business character, unknown to us except by reputation, and, possessing the phase of mediumship he does, he needs no advertising from our organization.

Letter Number One.—The Inner Light.

One of the first things that excited my curiosity, and caused me to ask a great many questions, was that which I shall here term the Inner Light. Very learned scientists may give it any name they please, but the general reader will understand me better when I simply say, inner light.

There is an outer or material light, and there is an inner or spiritual light. The outer or material light is given off by suns, but the inner or spiritual light permeates and penetrates all space whatsoever.

Astronomers will tell you that interstellar space, after a certain distance is reached beyond suns and planets, is black with darkness. This might so appear to man if he could reach such an altitude, which, of course, he cannot; but to the spiritual man no such darkness exists. Astronomers and scientists will also tell you that there in space the cold is so intense that the human mind cannot even conceive of it; but to the spiritual man no such cold exists; and as the mortal man cannot reach such an altitude, by any manner of means, so, then, no such cold does exist. Nothing exists that cannot be sensed by the material and the spiritual man.

As I found myself out in the beautiful spiritual or inner light, and had become somewhat reconciled to my new condition, I asked my father if he would tell me what caused this light.

"When I was a little boy, and went to school, you and the teacher told me that light upon the earth was caused by the sun, and as this light is not caused by the sun, or any sun whatever, I am curious to know what does cause it?"

"The scientists of earth would say it was caused by chemical action," said my father. "You will notice that this inner light sparkles with all the softened and beautiful colors of the rainbow—in fact with all imaginable colors—and that this light appears to our spiritual vision as sparkling, vibrating, effervescent; and all things which we see with or through it appear intensely beautiful. The simple act of looking at objects, alone, gives intense pleasure."

"Yes," I replied, "it causes my own soul to sparkle and vibrate with joy, and makes me think of many things that my darling wife has said to me in our past earth life; among others, this, which now comes home to me with a great shock. 'When I was a little girl,' said my wife, 'someone gave me a broken prism; one probably broken from a candelabrum, and when I wanted to be very happy indeed, I would take my prism, and seating myself on a little hillock, look at all objects that were within the scope of my sight; and really it seemed to me, as a child, that I had brought heaven down to earth. It was in the country, and most of the houses were brown, unpainted, and weatherbeaten; barns and outbuildings the same and somewhat dilapidated; but the prism made them all as beautiful as a dream. If the sky was leaden, the prism made it sparkling and bright with all the colors of the rainbow, and all the houses, barns, outbuildings, fences, trees, grass and shrubbery, all took on the beautiful colors that the prism gave to them. My childish mind could not imagine heaven to be half as beautiful, and I thought I should not care to go to the heaven that the minister talked of; I would much rather stay on earth and look through my prism. There was one pretty little place especially, with a newly painted white house upon it, that suited my childish mind to a charm. As I looked through my charming prism, the neat, pretty, white house was transformed into a bower of exquisite loveliness. At last when I became very tired with looking into heaven, as it seemed to me, I would carefully examine the prism to discover the secret cause of all this beauty; but there lay in my hand nothing but a broken piece of three-cornered glass, somewhat soiled by childish fingers and dulled by age, a very common piece of glass that but for the secret beauty it revealed would have been cast unceremoniously into the rubbish heap. I remember how bleak and lonely I felt when I really could look no longer, how disappointed I was at the dull and common appearance of all that had been so charming.'

"Oh, my father, how my wife's story now comes home to me. I am a child in spiritual knowledge and like her I seem now to be looking through a prism. The one white light of earth, or the material light, would now be dull and tame to me after living in this inner, or spiritual light, and all things on the earth look coarse and common, as they did to my wife, after she had looked through the prism; and, like her, I should be bitterly disappointed if I were obliged to live there again.

"You tell me this light is caused by chemical action. I would like to understand how."

"Well," answered my father, "before you could fully understand just how it is caused, you would have to take a long course of study in one of our institutions where chemistry is taught, one of our chemical colleges."

"I thought chemistry a very dull study, when a boy at school," I replied, "and found it impossible to hold my mind to it. I fear I shall never have the patience to go through a course of study, at a chemical institution, to find out the source and cause of this enchanting light."

"But before you are a rounded and perfect soul, you must know everything concerning it," he said.

"Do you know all about it?" I asked.

"Not all," he answered. "Still I have learned very much; but we have eternity before us, you know."

Ah, yes; delightful, glorious thought. Eternity! Eternity! How I stretched forth my arms and hugged the thought into my soul. O, my readers, do you comprehend what the word means? My father looked at me quizzically.

"If you found chemistry dull, when a boy at school, you did not find music quite so dry?"

"Music," I replied, "was, and is my life, my breath, the very center and core of my being. I feel that I could not exist, even in eternity, without it; and that reminds me that I have not yet heard a strain of music since I entered this new life. Father, I can endure it no longer. Music I must have or perish. The inner light is exceedingly beautiful and enrapturing, but music is more so. What must I do, where go, to find and hear muisc?"

"Music is an attribute of the soul," he replied.

"Yes, yes; I know; but I want to hear and perform it," I said. "My fingers are itching for the keyboard. I cannot keep them still."

"And yet," said my father, "it was music that burst your mortal body asunder and let your soul go free."

"And it was music that set Mozart free, and many others," I replied; "and now, father, I want to know if there are musical instruments in this world? In all your writings you have told us that there were. Come, now, I want to see some of them with my own eyes, and play upon them with these fingers that will not keep still for desiring them so much."

"How would you like to visit your old friend, Liszt?" asked my father.

"Oh, delightful!" I eagerly answered. "Let us go at once. Where may he be found?"

"I think we shall find him at his favorite resort—at a grand cathedral not far away."

"A cathedral? Are there cathedrals here?"

"And why not, pray?" he asked.

"Yes, yes; there must be," I said, musingly. "Why not cathedrals as well as colleges?"

"And why not homes, houses, colleges, cathedrals, churches, schools, institutions of learning and so forth, as well as a throne, harps, palms, white robes and crowns of gold, and so on, that the fashionable world below believe in so devoutly? Why not, as well as hell-fire, devils, imps, satan, pitchforks and so forth?" he asked, smiling into my face.

"Ah, yes; why not—why not? Is Liszt still a Roman Catholic?" I questioned.

"The church has yet great power over him," he answered. "Pomp and pride go hand in hand, you know. Franz Liszt loved both, and he still loves them. His musical ability and genius are towering, but his philosophical reasoning powers are not so great. He used, in the earth life, to be very stubborn and dogmatical, and to a great extent he is so still. Like yourself, he cares for very little else but music; and a grand cathedral, with all its beautiful artistic designs, its pomp and grandeur, its lofty music, its incense and choir-boys, its great organ and many pianos, besides other musical instruments, hold him like a spell. Yet he does not remain in a cathedral all the time; he has a very quiet home outside but not far away. Still, I have reason to know that he is within the cathedral now."

When I was in the earth life I had greatly loved and admired Franz Liszt. When in Germany, I had visited him often, and played for him a great many times—in fact, I had played to him nearly all of his own compositions. He was growing old and his touch had become tremulous and uncertain, which greatly grieved him, and as I played some of his most brilliant and charming pieces, the great tears would roll down his cheeks, and sighs, and even groans escape his lips. When I had finished some of his grandest music, he would throw his arms about me and cry out, "Bravo! bravo! You play after my own heart. You understand my music. That is the way it should be played. Music is like a living creature. To murder it is a crime; and so many murder my music. They might as well kill me. You are my own boy—child of my heart—my musical son."

Then he would order cake and wine, and after partaking of it I would leave the old man to his rest; but the picture of him, as I last saw him, was still fresh in my mind—his proud, dominant face, fired by genius; his long, white, thick hair falling about it heavily; his long hands and thin, upright form, now bending a little at the shoulders. Ah, how clear and bright the picture was as memory reproduced it.

"Has Liszt changed very much in his appearance?" I asked my father.

"You shall see," he replied.

We had been moving onward all this time, and now we paused before a gorgeously grand cathedral. I will not now stop to describe it, for really my eyes did not take in all the details, I was so intent on meeting the man I had come to see and hear. We paused just at the wide open doors, and a volume of sound burst forth upon my listening ears.

"Listen!" exclaimed my father. "He is at it. He is the leader here," and my soul drank it in. Do the readers of The Progressive Thinker want to know what my sensations were? If so, I will tell them.

I felt like one who is perishing of thirst, and a cup of cold water is handed him—or like one who is starving, and food placed before him—or like one who has been long separated from the idol of his soul, and then meets her face to face, lip to lip, heart to heart. Music was all this to me, and more. And so I listened, and loved, and ate and drank of it.

The great harmonies roared and thundered so, at times, that they shook the vast edifice so that it trembled like a leaf in the wind; and again the sounds were solemn, smooth and vast like eternity; and again, soft and sweet and gentle, like a mother's lullaby; and again, brilliant, blithe and gay, as the chimes of wedding bells; then, moaning and sobbing like my own grief-stricken wife below.

Oh, those wailing cries! They pierced my heart like sword thrusts. I covered my face with my hands. O! unhappy man that I now was, for the time, for it was through and by me that her grief had come upon her—me, who would have given my life to save her from sorrow. O, if she could only know and believe; but sorrow had seared her brain and blinded her eyes.

"Have patience," said my father; "time will heal the brain and dry the eyes, and the soul will take a grand step upward to meet you. Let us enter," and shortly we stood within the grand edifice. In my next letter I will tell of my interview with the great composer and musician, Franz Liszt.

REINCARNATION.

The Doctrine of Pre-Existence Controverted.

With due respect for those who believe in reincarnation or pre-existence, I am inclined to dissent from their views, and shall here endeavor to state a few of my reasons as concisely as possible. There are many difficult problems to be solved by the pre-existionists before their claims become worthy of acceptance, but as space is limited I shall content myself with bringing forth a limited number of them.

One of the stock arguments used to show the necessity for pre-existence is that "whatever has a beginning must necessarily have an ending." I, however, fail to see any good reason why an eternal past existence is necessary in order to insure an eternal future for humanity; and I therefore believe that the spirit begins its existence with the body.

For an example we will extend two imaginary lines into space. If they converge ever so slightly they will of necessity meet sometime in eternity and cease to exist as two distinct lines. But if, on the other hand, they are slightly divergent, then, though they extend for an incomprehensible distance into space they will never again return to the condition in which they were in at the start, namely, in close proximity to each other. Apply this same reasoning to the spirit. Though like the lines it has a beginning, yet just so long as it continues to unfold and become wider and wider in the range of its thoughts, and does not retrogress and lose what wisdom and spirituality it has gained, just that long there will be absolutely no danger that it will return to its starting-point, i. e., be resolved back into the elements which gave it birth.

The necessity for pre-existence is based upon the assumption that the earth will sometime in the future cease to exist, and therefore all forms of life evolved from it will also pass out of existence. From my viewpoint, however, evolution applies to the structure of the earth as well as to the beings which inhabit it. Events move along in an orderly and evolutionary manner. To suppose that the world will reach an advanced stage and then revert back to the beginning is unsupported by fact or analogy. The earth will change—may even be absorbed into other worlds or systems of worlds—but the purpose of evolution is served thereby. Until there is greater knowledge in this domain of investigation, it would seem more consistent that the future of the spirit be not judged by this illogical theory.

Consider the magnificence of those spirits who have returned from the advanced spheres, compared with the spiritual knowledge possessed by incarnate man. Consider also the message which they bring; that there are spheres of existence far higher than those in which they themselves are dwelling—spheres so exalted that their inhabitants do not return to earth. With the knowledge which they have, can they not foresee any circumstance which might imperil their existence? And being able to foresee, would they not be able to avoid any danger of annihilation? It may be asked, therefore, how anything with the powers and possibilities of the spirit can be removed from conscious existence, whether it began to exist yesterday or has existed from eternity. When we have advanced to the heights of which we have now received faint glimpses, do you not think that we shall be able to control our destinies? Looked at from this view-point immortality becomes a necessary result of evolution and does not seem supernatural, for it may be safely assumed that the mind will continue to find new fields of research, now pinnacles of knowledge to aspire to; and will continue for incomprehensible time to gain more mastery over its environments.

It is cited again and again that whatever has a beginning has an ending, yet we know comparatively little as to its truth. Our field of investigation is perforce limited. The plant, the tree, the animal, the man reaches maturity and dies. Dies; but evolution has only found this stage of existence inadequate for the farther elaboration of the individual. In no form of life is there met what can be called death.

Consciousness does not exist in tangible shape outside of individuality; it is the product of all the elements which collectively compose the spirit. The sentient life on this plane of existence is, like the elements which gave it birth, eternal and indestructible.

There are many other difficulties to be overcome by the pre-existionists before their claims become worthy of acceptance. If the pre-existence urged by some is true—that the soul was not brought into conscious existence until its contact with earth—then, granting that whatever has a beginning has an ending, we will sometime in the far-distant future, again lapse into the primitive unconscious state.

If we have existed from eternity what dull pupils we must be, considering how little we now understand!

And then it may be asked, why should we be incarnated in the body with its various shortcomings and inharmonious connections with higher things of the spirit, when the whole universe lay before us ere we were drawn into the thralls of matter?

Why the various stages of development from the South African savage to the highest type of Anglo-Saxon, if we all began to exist at the same time? What experience does the ignorant Bosjesman gain, dwelling in burrows like a wild animal, if he is an elevated angel trying to improve his time to the best advantage? Can the greater learn of the lesser? Could not an elevated spirit such as he is supposed to be before his incarnation learn more had he turned his attention to higher planes of thought, instead of endeavoring to waste his time in pursuit of knowledge of lower forms of existence which can be of no benefit to him after he has again advanced by the slow and tortuous path of experience to his former greatness?

If a human body receives its life from a pre-existing entity, it naturally follows that the entire animal and vegetable kingdoms must receive their life from the same source; for, if it is possible for an animal to come into existence with its body, it is also possible for a human being to do likewise.

And thus on every hand the theory is beset by insurmountable difficulties. Many are the arguments, brought forward to prove its truth, yet there is not one that cannot be proven to be fallacious. Of course, spirits have returned and corroborated the claims of the pre-existionists, but others have also stated that this life on earth begins the existence of the spirit, and seemingly they can support their views with just as invincible logic as is produced by those spirits who uphold pre-existence. It must be remembered that the opinions held while on earth to a large extent prevent an unprejudiced view of the case, which accounts for the diametrically opposite views expressed by those from the other side of life.

SEANCES WITH W. W. ABER.

Remarkable Experiences with W. W. Aber.

Last July my baby girl, aged seven years, together with two other little girls and an old man, were drowned in our river here while boat-riding.

No one saw the accident, and it was shrouded in mystery. As a matter of course this had a tendency to make my interest more intense, and on the morning of Jan. 22, just six months from the hour the body of our baby was recovered, my wife and I started to Kansas City to visit W. W. Aber.

I thoroughly examined the seance room at various times, both alone and with others, and it was absolutely impossible for any fraud to have been practiced upon us.

The room is an upstairs one of a brick house, with plastered walls and only one door at which we entered. The cabinet in which Mr. Aber sat is three feet square and is located in a corner, the other two sides being made of heavy black cloth suspended from the ceiling.

At the opening of the meeting we were asked to examine the room thoroughly. My wife sewed the pant-legs of Mr. Aber stoutly to the carpet, his coat sleeves to his pant-legs near the knee and his coat collar together, and I filled his hands with oat-meal. After the seance, some two hours later, he was found as we left him with none of the meal spilled. We had to get scissors to clip the threads to loosen him.

We attended five meetings, in which twenty-four persons whom we knew and recognized, came and conversed with us, including our parents and other relatives and several friends. Our baby girl came to us every night, and one time talked with me probably fifteen minutes, talking as she had when here with us, and putting her hands on me and petting me.

While there we saw various tests suggested by ourselves and others, of the absolute genuineness of Mr. Aber's mediumship.

Especially in the voice, features, size, etc., it would have been impossible to deceive us, and I recognized her voice before I saw her the first time, and saw her before hearing her voice at other times and there was absolutely no doubt of its being she.

The other little girls drowned with ours also came and talked with us, one especially sending word to her parents not to grieve so for her, as it hurt her, and stated that she was with them at home, but was unable to make herself felt. A friend, of whom I had not heard for years, and did not know was dead, appeared to me and conversed quite freely. Investigation later brought out the fact that he had been dead several years.

I had a reading through Mr. Aber's control, Sam, in which the old man who was with the little girls and was drowned with them, gave me a message and also appeared personally later, at both times explaining the nature of the accident fully, stating that a limb had fallen and struck him on the head, rendering him unconscious. Otherwise he said he would have been able to have saved them had the boat turned over, and hoped that I did not blame him for the accident. When he materialized, he placed his hand on his head and showed me the scar where the limb struck him. I did not know about the scar before, but have since learned from those who prepared the body for burial that there was a scar exactly where he indicated.

I also had several slate-writings, from my father, mother, brother and others, among whom was the old man who was drowned. Our little girl had never been to school and could not write, but had learned to print in order to write to a brother not at home, and she printed this message to us in a slate writing:

"Dear papa and mamma, I love you both just the same. Olga."

Twenty-three of the twenty-four with whom we conversed came to us without any suggestion. I called for but one person, who appeared in a very short time.

One day I went to a store and purchased a folding slate. It was never out of my hands until after the writing had been performed and read by me. Both sides of the inside of the slate was entirely covered. I had three of these slates, one of which is written in different colors. The colors are not arranged in regular order, but words here and there are of different colors. This slate is signed by three persons, of whom our little girl is one. No money would tempt me to part with these, and I have framed them and hung them in our home, where friends can examine them.

Should any one desire further information relative to my experience, it will be cheerfully given by addressing me at Sparta, Tenn.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

REMEMBER PLEASE, THAT YOU ARE NOT ENTITLED TO ANY OF THESE PREMIUM BOOKS UNLESS YOU SEND IN WITH YOUR ORDER A YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION TO THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you order one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the two following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "Seers of the Ages, or, Spiritualism Past and Present," by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills an exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have TEN Premium Books only, and you can select from them as follows:

Any three of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any seven of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the ten Premium books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Lastly all of these TEN valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.10, a price never before equaled in this country or Europe. The following is the list:

TEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.10.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.
2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.
3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.
4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.
5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.
6—The Next World Interviewed.
7—The Occult Life of Jesus.
8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.
9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.
10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present.

Read This Carefully Before Remitting.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and their price, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

These ten books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art, will be furnished to our subscribers for $3.10, a price which modern machinery and enterprise has rendered possible in The Progressive Thinker office only. Sending out these books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—a bargain the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS!

To Clubs of ten or more we offer the following terms to each one: The Progressive Thinker one year, and ONE of the following books, $1.15: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science"; "Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present"; "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands"; "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," Vol. 3. The one who gets up the Club will be entitled to the paper one year free, and any two of the books he may select among our list of premiums.

Man and the Spirit World as Disclosed in the Bible." By Rev. Arthur Chambers, Associate of King's College, London. An excellent book for Christian people who would investigate and learn the facts of Bible teachings as well as modern spirit phenomena. Price, cloth, $1.10.

Bible and Church Degrade Woman. By Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Comprises three essays on "The Effect of Woman Suffrage on Questions of Morals and Religion." Price, 10c.

Man the Microcosm. His Infinite and Divine Relations. Intuition—The Light Within. By Giles B. Stebbins. Price, 10 cents.

Father Tom and the Pope, Or a Night at the Vatican. Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "potteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

An Important Question.

Mr. Dowie, of Zion fame, claims he is the Elijah who ascended to heaven in "a chariot of fire, and horses of fire," impelled by a whirlwind. See II. Kings 2:11. It was Elijah's mantle that divided the waters of the Jordan, so he passed on dry land. The mantle which fell from Elijah's shoulders when the whirlwind caught him, was just as effective in the hands of Elisha; for on his return from across the sacred river where he parted company with Elijah, Elisha smote the river with that identical mantle, and the waters were divided as before. It was Moses ROD that produced such wonderful results in the days of that functionary, as it was the hair of Samson which made him so strong and agile with the foxes.

Without that identical mantle which fell from Elijah's shoulders, and which Elisha took up, how is it possible for our modern divine, though inspired by the spirit of the ascended Elijah, to perform miracles? The rod of Moses, and the hair of Samson lost their efficacy when separated from their owners. By provisions of Elijah, and by special request of Elisha, the original magic power invested in that wonderful cloak continued in the hands of Elijah's successor. But it moldered to dust with its new owner, and its power is gone forever.

But here comes a sage question. John 3:13 gives the words of Jesus thusly:

"No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man which is in heaven."

That passage of holy writ, right from the mouth of Jesus himself, knocks into smithereens the claim of Elijah's ascension. Now what is our Brother Dowie going to do about it?

We are told of the voluble Congressman who set his mouth talking, then retired, leaving that organ to address the House indefinitely. Let our brother adjust his vocal organs to the task of making Jesus' words harmonize with his claim, and with the Old Testament record, then we are content, though it shall go on forever.

The Theatre Receives the Wrath of an Evangelist.

Evangelist Munhall has been engaged by the East End Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, to stir the dry bones during Lent. He gave a sermon especially on the subject, "Dancing, Theatergoing and Card-Playing." "Nine-tenths of the actors and actresses are immoral," said the speaker. "The playhouse is the way to hades. The card-playing, theater-going, and dancing members of the church rarely contribute anything to the church but their presence."

The Episcopal church received a vicious kick in passing because of the letter addressed to members of that church asking them to refrain from attending grand opera during lent. "We ought to have lent 365 days in the year," said this evangelist.

The morality of the stage will compare well with that of the pulpit, and presents not as many criminal cases for decision of the courts.

Abuse of Patients at Asylums.

If a tenth part of the charges made by Miss Marion Gray in regard to the treatment of patients at the hospitals of the great metropolis of New York, are true, it should bring a blush of shame to every official connected therewith and excite the execration of every citizen.

Miss Gray spent thirty-five days in the scarlet fever ward of the hospital at North Brother Island. She had the fever, and was taken to the contagious disease hospital. When released she felt it her duty to go before the Commissioner and tell the story of the awful cruelty practiced on the charity patients.

She was carried in prostrated with the fever. For heartless cruelty, and brutality, the account she gives of the death of a baby has no parallel. She says:

"I was put into a bed from which a convalescent had just been taken. The sheets were dirty and blankets looked as though they had not been washed in all the years the hospital had been in use. When I asked for clean sheets, I was told that I was 'too stuck up' for the place.

"The night I was taken to the hospital I was carried to the ward and laid upon the cot with my clothes. I was too weak and ill to raise myself from the cot at first, and lay there in a half-fainting condition. At last I heard a voice at the end of the ward say:

"'What is that woman lying there for? If she thinks I am going to undress her, she can lie there until she rots.'

It was not until hours later that Miss Gray recovered her strength sufficiently to disrobe and crawl between the sheets of the filthy, vermin-infested cot to which she had been assigned.

"In the wards the helpers were a greater danger than disease," said Miss Gray.

"They swore at us and cursed us roundly when we displeased them. They appropriated the food sent to us and used themselves the vichy intended for the patients. They made eggnogs of the eggs prescribed for those upon an egg diet or intended to be made into desserts for the convalescent. Refuse was left standing about in the aisles and by the sides of the cots until the reek of it filled the air. Patients sick unto death were attended to only when it pleased the nurses.

"There was a baby in the scarlet fever ward—a tiny, golden haired little tot, just able to talk—whose death through the negligence of the nurses was a thing to wring the heart of any mother.

"The little fellow lay in a cot just across the room from the one I was in. Burning with fever, the baby tossed back and forth across the vermin-infested bed, moaning piteously. Every few minutes a plaintive cry for water wailed across the ward from the cot of the little sufferer.

"The night helper in the ward—a coarse, brutal woman of the type only too common in the hospital on North Brother Island—roused herself from her chair near the fire and went over to the cot where the little one lay. I breathed a prayer of thankfulness, for I thought her heart had been touched by the wailing cries of the fevered baby; but instead of giving him the water he craved she struck him time and time again.

"'Wait until your two hours are up and you will get some water, but not before,' she said. And the little fellow cowered in his cot, sobbing piteously.

"All night long I heard the baby crying for water. I was too weak to leave my cot to help him, and lay there half-delirious, with his quivering sobs in my ears. I tried to shut out the sound. My heart almost burst with suffering as I heard the moans of the little sufferer growing weaker and weaker. The nurse had gone to sleep by the fire again and gave no heed. The long night hours in the ward were passing more slowly than they had ever passed before and I lay there waiting, waiting for some one to go to the little one who lay there crying through parched, cracked lips for just a taste of water.

"Toward morning the baby rose in bed again, sobbing great, quivering sobs and crying with piteous insistence for a drink. Then, pushing off the bed clothes with his weak, puny little arms, he tried to get out upon the floor.

"In the dim light of the ward I saw the baby fall forward over the edge of the cot. The helper was dozing in her chair, and the child lay by the side of the cot, a huddled mass.

"For two hours he lay there, and to me it seemed a double eternity. I could see nothing but that little huddle by the side of the cot. There were no cries now. The ward was more desolately silent than I had ever known it. I tried to scream, but my voice was a mere whisper. I tried to get out of my cot to go to the baby who lay there suffering alone and utterly helpless, but I was too weak to raise myself. I could only lie there and wait and pray that some one would come to aid the baby I knew was dying.

"At the end of two hours the helper awoke, and, seeing the motionless bundle by the side of the cot, tossed the little fellow back into it and threw the covers over him. Then she went back to her chair by the fire.

"When the ward nurse made her rounds in the morning she noticed that the baby appeared to be in a stupor and sent for the physician. Before ne came, however, I saw them carrying the little body away to the morgue."

And this is a Christian land and this one of its boasted charities! If this cruelty was confined to a single hospital it might be more easily corrected, but it grows out of the system and is more or less apparent in every hospital in the country. Patients may not be put into foul, vermin-infested beds, or children beaten, but there are other methods of torture. Charity patients are material for experimentation with physicians, and the accounts of these are unblushingly published. Women inoculated with cancer germs, infants having the membrane of the spinal column punctured, inoculation with yellow fever, and injection of toxins, are a few of the experiments recorded by the physicians themselves—a demon could not ask for more.

Are these accusations too fiendish to be believable of educated physicians? The Humane Society has sustained these charges, and the everyday publications of physicians proves that the half has not been told. Not only in the medical colleges are thousands of animals dissected alive, but vivisection is practiced on children in charity hospitals to such an extent that the inhuman doctors publish accounts of their experiments as though of the most common occurrence, and other doctors read curiously, unfeelingly.

The Humane Society is endeavoring to push a bill through the Massachusetts legislature restricting the diabolical work of these doctors who claim the right to dissect living animals and children. The doctors are setting up a desperate fight in the name of science! Herbert D. Ward, an author of note, said in favor of the restriction before the committee:

"Children in this state have been at the mercy of vivisectionists. Eight or ten died. It happened at Boston Hospital in 1896. There is in the hospital a record of vivisection of the helpless infants of the poor."

Mr. Ward then produced the following records of fatal results of what are described by doctors as "some experimental work" upon children by way of tapping the spinal canal:

Case 2—Female, aged 20 months. Spinal canal punctured January 17, 1896, January 22, February 16, on day of patient's death.

Case 3—Female, aged 4 months. Punctured January 17, 1896. Patient died January 22.

Case 5—Male, aged 3½ years. Punctured February 3, 1896. Patient died February 4.

Case 6—Male, aged 6 months. Punctured February 1. Patient died in convulsions three weeks later.

Case 7—Male, aged 7 months.

Mr. Ward said Dr. Wentworth justified the vivisection by saying: "The diagnosis value of puncture of the subarachnoid space is so evident that I considered myself justified in incurring some risk in order to settle the question of danger."

The spinal cord is surrounded by a protective sheath continuous with that which protects the brain. This sheath is composed of three membranes, the dura mater, arachnoid and pia mater. Such is the great care in the structure of this dedicate organ, encased in the bony column, and yet further to prevent jar or concussion the space between the pia mater and the cord is filled with a fluid. The experiments on the children were tapping this cavity and drawing of the cerebro-spinal fluid. The doctor was not satisfied with the death of his first victim, he gathered in nine, and watched their agonies! All died, as anyone with common sense would know they would. What was gained for science? Nothing! The experiments were carried on for the love of pain, the lust for torture such as actuated the inquisitors of old.

Church Property in the District of Columbia.

The exemption of property in the District especially under the control of the Federal government, has become so enormous, and made the unfortunate ones who failed to obtain exemption bear such a heavy load, that the District Commissioners have come out boldly against the abuse.

According to the latest list there is of taxable land and improvements in the District $213,250,418, and by hook or crook there is $283,906,848 exempt, or more than seventy millions of dollars more than that which is taxed. Of this amount $6,500,000 is church property, and the churches are besieging the commissioners to receive further exemptions! If the tax was equally distributed it would be less than half as much on a dollar as at present. It is not a matter of wonder that there is a change of opinion as to taxation of church property, and that many think that religious bodies have no more right to freedom from paying taxes than individuals. Not only churches, parsonages, but schools, convents, monasteries, and business blocks owned by churches are exempt. Well does District Commissioner Macfarland say he saw no reason why a church should be exempted from taxation. The question has also been discussed at length in the various citizens' associations, disclosing the fact that there were multitudes who desired to have the church property pay its share of the expenses of the District government.

As yet there is no move in sight on the part of those in authority to have the evil checked, if it is an evil, as so many think.

If the general government would move in this matter it would greatly influence public sentiment.

The New Fire Extinguisher.

We read in "Holy Writ" that Elijah called down fire from heaven, that consumed several captains of fifties, together with their fifties.

But the Christian Scientists of Baltimore in a way outdo Elijah, according to the following statement from the Record-Herald of this city:

Baltimore, March 6.—At a meeting of Christian Scientists to-day testimony was given by a number of persons who had interests in the burned districts, and who told how they saved their property by prayer. One man said, as a result of his mental work, the fire had come to about 150 feet of the building and then turned, burning all around it. Two of the large banks of the city, Christian Scientists state, owe their escape from serious damage to the interest taken in them by Christian Scientists.

"When it was learned that the fire was raging," said Mrs. Ellen Cross, C. D. S., "the Christian Scientists in the city, and also in every place where the news of the conflagration reached, worked against the evil, treating it with scientific prayer. Not supplication, but in the language of the text-book of the cult."

The wonder is that with such wonderful if not miraculous efficacy to their "scientific prayers" these Christian Scientists did not quell and quench the fire in the other parts of the burnt district in Baltimore, and thus saved the terrible loss and suffering. Or was their "interest" solely confined to the two large banks, etc? Verily, Christian Science is a queer cult.

NEVER DESPAIR.

Fight your way on through each storm and privation;
Make of each barrier a power to uplift;
E'en as the vine in its dark desolation
Throws out its arms to each bright sunny rift,
Making a ladder of weed and of bush,
Up which to heaven it may struggle and push.

Fight your way on through each grief and each burden;
Sweet are the blossoms which patience unfolds;
Time in its archives guards safely thy guerdon;
Tighten thy tendrils which faith sweetly holds.
Dark though the day be, and darker the night,
Never a darkness but yielded to light. —Katharine H. Terry.

MUSIC FROM THE STARS.

IT HAS BEEN CAPTURED BY SCIENCE.

Sounds Drawn From Planets Made Audible Through Action of Light Rays on Polished Steel Plate.

It appears from a special dispatch from New York to the Chicago Record-Herald, that we now have music from the stars! Captured melodies from the planets! Professor Albert C. Albertson, the electrical engineer, whose invention of the so-called "magnet train" created a sensation in scientific circles a few months ago, has invented an instrument which he believes is the vital keynote to ultimate communication between the planets. The apparatus upon which he has been working for several years at last, he says, has given him the results he has long hoped for, and a few days ago at his home, 100 Hamilton place, he listened to music played by no earthly hands, but by celestial bodies.

Light rays are the media of bringing the communication with the stars into Professor Albertson's hands. From the new invention, music, the original melodies and harmonies of the stars, may be extracted, as well as other sounds no mortal ever heard before. Not only this may be accomplished, but the light rays from the sun, the moon, or from the remotest visible star in space may be utilized so as to play the music of mortal composers.

"It is a scientific fact," said Professor Albertson to-day, "that a light ray falling upon the surface of a small polished steel plate, for example, will produce a tone.

"About tone being produced from a light ray falling on a polished steel plate—this is inaudible, however, unless the plate is inserted into an electric circuit also containing a microphone or telephone ear-piece. This is the principle underlying my invention.

"The sounds and music transmitted from the various planets tell different stories. For instance, when the instrument is aimed at Arcturus sounds of contrast are heard. At first it sounded to me like an ear-splitting hurricane; then like the roar of a thousand Niagaras; then seething like the melodious, low whispering, exquisitely soft singing, a low, lingering sound.

"Sirius, or the planets above, I would judge from the instrument to be in a state of despair. Hideous noises, unearthly in their weird horror, like mournful spirits in agony, bereft of all eternal happiness, come from this celestial region. The sounds of shrieking, nerve-racking disharmony remind one, as near as I can give an earthly comparison, of the insane in a madhouse.

"There are brighter stars, which sing sweet music, and make one think by contrast of worlds full of angels.

"One would naturally think that the more powerful the light ray, the better the musical result, but this is not so. The far-away fixed star is the one that produces the sweetest tones. This I believe to be due to the noninterference of the reflected light from the invisible planets revolving about the sun.

"The brighter the star, the less pure and clear the tones. When the instrument is played upon by the blazing sunlight a million noises, due to reflected light from this and other planets, undoubtedly spoil the music entirely."

Tolstoi and Principle.

Among all the socialists, and those who voice the discontent of the oppressed, perhaps none has occupied a larger share of public attention. Born to high estate and affluence, the owner of vast estates, whereon the people remained serfs in all but the name he has posed as their champion, and masqueraded in peasants' coarse attire. The attire was a sham, revealing his character, for underneath he always retained the finest raiment. He has written many books, mostly of highly religious tone, and has continuously protested against war. He had no more love for one nation than another, for were not all mankind brothers?

Now comes the exposure of his pretensions and sham philanthropy. He is seized with patriotism which befools the peasant to shout himself hoarse for the czar, and gives a thousand copies of his books, to be sold for benefit of the soldiers engaged in the far East in murdering the Japanese. Tolstoi has not forgotten that he was in his youth a soldier. His blood tingles in his veins as he recalls the days in the field. He fails to see that he confesses to the world his hypercritical pretensions by contributing to the war fund, for should he not give with equal measure to the Japanese if they are brothers? He is a patriot after all, with a narrow love for his barbarous country and its barbarous laws, and would assist it in its injustice.

Such Messages Prove a Nuisance.

To the Editor:—Mrs. Folsom is being annoyed continually by statements from alleged mediums that Mr. Folsom is communicating with them, and sending all kinds of soul-harrowing statements purporting to come from him. Please say to your readers that Mr. Folsom told his wife an hour before his transition, that his first communication would be to her alone, and three times since his death his own guides have told us that he was not yet able to communicate at all; and it is Mrs. Folsom's special request that all such correspondence shall cease. Mrs. Folsom desires to thank all true friends for their expressions of sympathy to her in her awful bereavement.

PURE MEDIUMSHIP.

Practical Lessons Gained From High Experience.

I feel the impression of the spiritual forces to-day to write something in regard to mediumship. I consider any phase of mediumship a gift from the Divine Power that rules all people. There are of course, many degrees of power in each phase; and as for there being any one on this earth planet that can, for any consideration, impart to you a gift that only comes from the unseen, it is to me not to be thought of. Of course I can only speak from actual experience.

Even when one has the gifts of mediumship within themselves they must study and develop that latent power, else it will never be brought to the surface. There are many ways that a person will discover the gifts of the spirit that lie dormant. I can only speak of the way I found mine, and when we grow or develop into a knowledge of these things we will be sure they are given to us by a power not of earth.

Not often does any gift of mediumship manifest itself suddenly, and without a desire or a working or studying to attain some gift. A great many people are mediumistic, but the power is so small it will only be discerned by a medium; while the person will have dreams that always mean something, and impressions that if followed will be good. Such a person will never develop into a medium. They simply have not the gifts of the spirit as a medium must have to be successful. And no matter how long they sit for development, or how much they desire to be given some gift, or what great medium tells them they can be developed for so many dollars, they can not. I heard of one good patient sister that prayed for fifteen years for some gift of the spirit, and she was rewarded. She has just lately gone to the new world and I am glad she was so faithful.

When a medium (the first one I ever heard talk) told me I would write impressionably some day, I laughed at him. When the "white-winged messenger" came to call one of my loved ones to the beautiful sunlit land, I began to study on these things. I studied and pondered for four long months, and had about fifty years of experience, but I received my reward and to me it is glorious! Death was for me the beginning of my "gifts of the spirit," yet I had all the gifts within my spiritual self, but my earthly self had not till then met the conditions; and I often explain it in this wise. There was a veil between my earthly and spiritual vision, and by prayer, desire and study, it was torn away.

Not every one is brought to a consciousness of this power as I was, each must be taught in the way best suited to them to bring forth the latent power or gifts. To me the gifts of mediumship are sacred in a way. I know the Power that gave to me my gifts of the spirit and knowing so well how strong that power is in dealing with earthly people, I am at a loss to understand how any one can claim to be a medium, and live a life entirely given to the flesh. There will be grave charges against such mediums some day, I fear. You cannot advocate mediumship, and hold Spiritualism up before the world as the very best religion of the age, and be licentious, impure, untruthful, uncharitable, full of malice, use tobacco, gamble, drink, swear and do a great many other things that some people think do not matter because you believe in "spirits," and when you die you won't go to hell.

I could not think much of a medium, whose leading spirit, or "control," as some prefer, would allow them to indulge in those things that only tend to drag the spiritual part of mankind down, and also ruin the earthly body for a happy earth life.

I talked with a medium once, who said when he first began in his mediumistic career, his leading spirit made him throw his tobacco away and for years he was not allowed to use it, and had no desire to, but by and by he began again. He said his first control was too good. I am sure the last one was too bad to be allowed to control any one.

But we govern these things ourselves. At least, so it seems to me; like attracts like, you know, and if we choose things degrading, and develop some of the gifts of mediumship, and have in our spirit no desire to live a good pure life, we will draw around us spiritual people just like we are.

I believe any gift of mediumship, is given to uplift and better humanity. And I cannot understand how any one having any gift of the spirit should decry mediumship. To me, it is the pathway that leads me to the ones I love and ofttimes so long to see, and I often think if I were to lose the gifts of the spirit that I claim, the brightness and sweetness would depart from my life and I would be most miserable; and I believe were I to use the gifts that God has so graciously given me for an evil purpose they would be taken away. We have many desires in this world but it seems to me that my greatest desire is to keep my spirit as white and as free from stain as I can. And as we live here so will our spirits grow; live in light, our spirits will grow in light; live in darkness and our spirits are dead to the light beyond.

May each one that reads these lines send forth the vibration of "higher life" while yet we live in our earthly bodies. Greeting I send you.

INDIANA.

Organization of the State Spiritualist Association.

The first convention of the delegates of the various Spiritualist societies of Indiana met in the city of Anderson, Ind., Feb. 26, 27 and 28, 1904, at the Madison Avenue temple, for the purpose of organizing a state association.

The convention was called to order Friday at 10 a. m., by Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A. After the invocation by Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, of Chicago, and music, the address of welcome was made by Dr. Gardiner Haines, president of the Anderson society.

Mrs. Flora Russell, the well-known singer of Alliance, Ohio, sang a beautiful solo, after which President Barrett responded to the address of welcome in his usual happy and entertaining manner.

The remainder of the morning was devoted to the appointing of the various committees, and to short talks from the different delegates, giving their reasons for favoring organization.

At 2 p. m., the convention was again called to order, and the business of the forenoon continued. Lyceum work was discussed at length, and many points brought out showing the benefit of beginning with the children in teaching Spiritualism. Mrs. Major Bitters, of Rochester, said that the present prosperous condition of their society was due to the interest taken by the younger people who were educated in the lyceum. Mrs. E. W. Sprague gave several examples of children brought up in the Sunday-schools, where there were no lyceums, who remained with the church instead of embracing the religion of their parents, showing that the teachings received in childhood have a more lasting impression than those received in after years.

Several members spoke of the great need of a simpler form or leaflet for the use of the younger children, also of a card or booklet to be used as prizes for best attendance. It was also suggested that the convention pass resolutions which are to go to the N. S. A., making the lyceum a part of the work, and that universal literature be adopted.

The superintendents who were to be appointed by the incoming president, were to be instructed to organize lyceums in every society.

At 7 p. m. the following program was rendered: Music by the congregation; invocation by Dr. Gardiner Haines, Anderson; solo by Mrs. Flora Russell, Alliance, Ohio; lecture (20 minutes) by E. W. Sprague, Jamestown, N. Y., N. S. A. missionary; violin solo by Miss Ureth Mosher, Anderson; lecture (20 minutes) Harrison D. Barrett; music by the Temple choir; spirit messages (20 minutes) by Mrs. E. W. Sprague; music, Temple choir; spirit messages (20 minutes) by Dr. Julia M. Walton, Jackson, Mich.; benediction by Thomas W. Smith, Anderson.

Saturday morning, Feb. 27, the various committees brought in their reports, and the constitution and by-laws were adopted.

The credential committee reported that there were 48 delegates present and 23 societies represented in the state. The convention instructed the incoming president to appoint one superintendent for each congressional district; or where there was not much work to be done one superintendent should have charge of more than one district. The duty of these superintendents is to organize societies and lyceums, and encourage and strengthen societies that are weak, and urge all locals to become members of the state association. It was also decided that any local society holding a charter from the N. S. A. could become a member of the state association free of charge, provided they are in good standing in the N. S. A., and have relinquished their charter to the N. S. A.

It was decided that the incoming president of the state association be one of the delegates to the N. S. A., and the others to be chosen by the board, and each local society to choose its own.

At 2 p. m. the convention elected the following officers:

President—Mr. E. A. Schram, Peru, Ind.

First vice-president—Mrs. Elizabeth L. Williamson, Richmond.

Second vice-president—Mr. Charles A. Gaines, Anderson.

Secretary—Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, Muncie.

Treasurer—Mrs. Lou Schwennessen, Muncie.

Trustees—Mrs. Margaert Miller, Rochester; Mr. W. S. Woods, Kokomo; Mr. J. H. York, Peru; Mr. J. B. Foster, Elwood.

Mr. John Congdon, justice of the peace, of Seymour, Ind., administered the oath of office, and President Barrett introduced to the convention the newly-elected officers of the Indiana State Association of Spiritualists.

The business of the convention being completed, it adjourned to meet one year hence, at such place as the board may designate, notice to be given three months prior to time of meeting, if possible.

Saturday evening at 7 o'clock the following programme was rendered: Music by congregation; invocation by E. W. Sprague; solo by Miss Hazel Wertz, Anderson; lecture (20 minutes) by Thomas W. Smith, Anderson; music by Temple choir; lecture (20 minutes) by Harrison D. Barrett; solo by Mrs. Flora Russell, Alliance, Ohio; spirit messages (20 minutes), Dr. Julia M. Walton, Jackson, Mich.; music by Temple choir; spirit messages (20 minutes) by Mrs. C. A. Sprague; benediction by Dr. Gardiner Haines, Anderson, Ind.

Sunday, Feb. 28 at 10 a. m., the services were opened by congregational singing, and an invocation by Dr. Gardiner Haines, of Anderson. This was followed by a conference consisting of five-minute speeches by the delegates and any others who desired to express themselves.

Miss Flora Hardin, of Anderson, for so many years secretary of the Camp Chesterfield Association gave a very interesting talk, and in the course of her remarks spoke of the necessity of reading the different Spiritualist papers that we might know the why and wherefore of the phenomena and the philosophy of Spiritualism. She asked all those who were subscribers to either of the papers to raise their hands, and Mr. Barrett and Mr. Sprague remarked that there was the greatest number taking the papers, in proportion to the size of the audience, that they had ever known.

One very noticeable feature, and one that we feel quite proud of, was the perfect harmony which prevailed through the whole convention; all questions that arose were discussed in the most friendly way possible, and opinions were exchanged without the slightest discord. Mr. Barrett, Mr. Sprague, and Dr. Julia Walton and others who have been in the work for years, said that it was the most harmonious convention they had ever attended.

From a financial, as well as from a spiritual standpoint, the convention was a pronounced success, and our prospects for the future are very promising. We attribute our financial success largely to Mr. Sprague, who has a national reputation in this way; and, in fact, the success of the entire convention was due to the untiring efforts of this well known missionary and his wife, and also to Mr. Barrett whose ability as a parliamentarian and presiding officer is known to Spiritualists all over the United States. Mr. Barrett's lectures are always full of inspiration that appeals to each and everyone who is permitted to listen to him, and fills us with a desire to strive still harder to bring out any good that may be in us. His beautiful word pictures always give us some good thoughts to take home with us and make us feel the better for having heard him.

Mrs. Sprague and Dr. Julia Walton, with their spirit messages, brought comfort to many hearts, and with such earnest workers as these, the success of the convention was assured.

The afternoon and evening programs were as follows: At 2 p. m., Music by congregation; invocation by Thos W. Smith; solo by Mrs. Flora Russell; lecture (20 minutes) by H. D. Barrett; music by Temple choir; lecture (20 minutes) by Dr. Julia M. Walton; spirit messages (20 minutes) by Dr. Julia Walton; music by congregation; spirit messages (20 minutes) by Mrs. E. W. Sprague; benediction by Dr. Gardiner Haines.

At 7 p. m., Music by congregation; invocation by Dr. Gardiner Haines; music by Temple choir; violin solo by Miss Ureth Mosher; lecture (20 minutes) by E. W. Sprague; solo by Miss Hazel Wertz; lecture (20 minutes) by H. D. Barrett; solo by Mrs. Flora Russell; spirit messages (20 minutes) by Mrs. E. W. Sprague; music by the E. Z. Mandolin Club; spirit messages (20 minutes) by E. W. Sprague; benediction.

In closing this convention a vote of thanks was tendered first to the members of the Madison Avenue Society for the use of their temple; to the choir and musicians for their beautiful music; and to the press of the city for its kindly, unprejudiced and fair treatment, and for the notices given of the convention; and to the citizens of Anderson for the entertainment of the delegates.

HELP FOR THE SICK AND INFIRM MEDIUMS

FROM THE N. S. A. HEADQUARTERS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

List of Contributors—Sympathetic and Tender Hearts Touched—Concerning Law Against Mediums.

To the Editor:—I am now ready to make my first report of progress, in the matter of collecting from the Spiritualists at large the sum of one thousand dollars by the first of June, that we may secure the other thousand dollars that has been generously promised to the N. S. A. for the Mediums' Relief Fund. As has been before stated, the National Association is paying seven mediums the sum of twelve dollars a month, each, towards their support; we would be glad to extend the list to take in many more who are in need of aid, but not till the fund increases can this be done. During the present week, we added another aged medium, a resident of this city, to the list. This beneficiary is eighty-two years of age and has no one to look to for aid but the N. S. A. This would have made the eighth on our list in addition to the complete support of Dr. Slade; but we have just learned of the transition of one of our pensioners, Mrs. Kendall, of Massachusetts, and we have to-day forwarded the sum needed for the burial of her remains. Thus the good work is going on. Our beneficiaries are grateful and appreciative, and we feel that we are not only blessing them, but that everyone who contributes to this work is also blessed by it.

Some of the letters we receive with the contributions to this fund are beautiful. One elderly lady, who is herself an inmate of an "Old Ladies' Home," wrote, that in sending ten dollars to the fund, she felt it a privilege; that she would send more, but all she has left is a sum to bear the expense of cremating her body when the spirit takes its flight.

Another aged friend, now ninety-four years old, who has a home with her relatives, sent us the only three dollars she had, saying she could put it to no better use than to have some poor medium benefited by it. A gentleman in a Home in Pennsylvania, sent his dollar with a good word for the work. Sweet little Alice sent fifty cents for herself and "Precious," and wrote, "I sold my chicken for 23 cents, and put that in with the money." Surely these souls must be blessed with good thoughts and happy dreams, who have unselfishly done what they could; to one and all, we send our hearty thanks. Our contributing list stands as follows:

Friend in Old Ladies' Home, $10; Chas. Bolton, $10; Helen A. Haddox, $10; Thomas C. Smith, $15; J. R. Francis, $5; T. B. Wait, $5; Harmony Circle, South Buffalo, $5; Wm. Schroeder, $5; A Friend, Hamburgh, Iowa, $5; E. W. Brooks, $5; Geo. Seifert, $5; Mrs. P. E. M. Dunn, $5; S. A. George, $5; Samuel J. Day or Way, $5; Mrs. A. J. Mintun, $5; Mrs. M. B. Sprague, $3; Mrs. E. J. Woodward, $2; S. A. Tallmadge, $2; John H. Kramer, $2; Lucy W. Houghton, $1.50; Mrs. Nettie Johnson, $1.50; A Friend, $1; Julia Bunker, $1; August Kleine, $1; Chas. Holkirk, $1; Mrs. A. C. Headley, $1; Arthur Peiffer, $1; T. C. Millard, $1; Mrs. S. S. Rockhill, $1; E. Hughes, $1; A. J. Brooks, $1; Mrs. T. L. Schneitzer, $1; Mrs. C. H. J. Bowen, $1; Geo. L. Ralston, $1; David Frolick, $1; C. H. Phelps, $1; A Friend, Providence, R. I., $1; Abner Sisson, $1; John Lynch, $1; Alice and Precious, 50 cents; A Friend, 50 cents; Mrs. Speck, 25 cents; E. Bsorcious, 25 cents; Two Friends, 15 cents.

Mrs. Zoller and Mrs. Williams, two of our good mediums of Washington, with other talent, gave a public benefit for the Mediums' Fund, at Wonn's Hall, March 10, from which we realized the sum of $12.13; this sum added to the amount of foregoing contributions makes a total of $138.78.

We are greatly encouraged, and we feel that if all who can, will send according to their means, and if other mediums in different cities and towns, will also hold a benefit seance or meeting for this fund, that the required sum of one thousand dollars will be in our treasury by the last of May. Please, friends, do not delay, but send your contributions on as soon as possible. Mr. Ralston, whose donation appears in our list, sends a dollar each month for the mediums' Fund; the one noted is the first from him since the thousand-dollar collection was started.

Now concerning the recent statement of a law to drive mediums from Washington, our legitimate mediums are not molested, nor do they fear; they are pursuing their work as formerly, nor will they be troubled. The new law is to reach the sharpers whose doings are nefarious, and who are no part of Spiritualism and its works; one or two have been run out of town, and all decent people are glad that they have gone.

A Critical Analysis of the Present Situation.

Spiritualism and the Trickey Element It Has to Contend With.

James L. Dow, a prominent Spiritualist of Manhattan, Kansas, presents his views clearly and concisely in reference to a fraudulent element that has invaded Spiritualism, especially in all the large cities, and which is preying off the gullibles, and sometimes deceiving the very elect with bogus spirit manifestations. His lecture will be read with interest by those who have been victims of the barnacles who have fastened themselves on our Cause.

Mrs. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—It is a source of sorrow to me, as it must be to every true Spiritualist, to note the decline in organized Spiritualism in the United States, and every one who feels the least interest in its progress must be anxious to know the cause. Undoubtedly every one has some theory in regard to it as well as myself, but it look so plain to me that I would like to advance my theory for it, for the candid consideration of those who are interested in the advancement of truth along the Spiritualistic line. The first and most important thing for any organization to do that wishes to perpetuate its existence is to establish the fact to the satisfaction of the better class of the community who are liable to patronize it, that the objects of the organization are good, and working in the best interests of the people. Secondly, they must establish the fact that they are honest. Thirdly, that the objects of the organization can be carried out. And, lastly, that the claims made for it can be substantiated beyond a reasonable doubt. When these things have been done the success of any organization is assured.

NOW SPIRITUALISM MUST HAVE FAILED IN SOME OF THESE REQUISITES OF A SUCCESSFUL ORGANIZATION, or it would not have declined; this is self-evident. Now let us see if we can find out wherein it has failed; if we can do this we have learn the cause of the decline.

In the first place, what are the objects of organized Spiritualism?

First, to teach and prove that mankind has an intelligent conscious existence after the change called death. Second, to teach and prove that those who have passed through that change called death, can and do communicate with those still in the flesh, in an intelligent and reliable manner, and that happiness comes only through good acts.

Now I take it for granted that there is no one who will dispute that these objects are good, therefore it is evident that it is not in the first count that it has failed.

Now let us look at the second: They must satisfy the inquiring people that they are honest. Have they done it? It seems to me there can be but one answer to this question, and that is NO. There are very few communities in this country that have not been VICTIMIZED BY FRAUDULENT AND UNPRINCIPLED MEDIUMS, AND SOME OF THE GROSSEST OUTRAGES HAVE BEEN COMMITTED BY THEM. I recall an instance where a physical medium was engaged by a spiritual society to lecture, and teach morals and propound the glorious doctrines of Spiritualism, that had to be ordered out of town by the mayor before he had finished his engagement, for obscene and outrageous conduct. Hundreds of fraudulent mediums all over the country have been exposed, who were receiving the patronage and moral support of Spiritualists, and I am sorry to say that most of them have been exposed by outsiders when it should have been the duty of organized Spiritualism to do it. While Spiritualists wait for honest investigators to expose the fraud they have been giving support, when it is their duty to warn investigators against it, and hold it up to public contempt, they may expect to see disgusted investigators and hundreds of good Spiritualists not identified with the movement, and get the name among the better class who are seeking for truth, of being dishonest.

Haven't we given them pretty good grounds for coming to that conclusion? If so, we have failed in the second count.

In regard to the third count: Can the objects of the organization be carried out? To this question I would say, we can never make the people to any great extent believe we can, while a large number of the mediums who are showing through the country under the auspices of the Spiritual societies at the different places where they hold their seances, are producing the phenomena by fraud. While investigators find so much fraud apparently supported by organized Spiritualism, it will be hard to make the best class of them believe that all is not a fraud. Therefore they are compelled to believe that we are not able to carry out the objects of the organization. And hence we fail on the third count.

And last of all, are the claims of the organization being established in the mind of a large number of the investigators beyond a reasonable doubt? To this I think you will be obliged to say no.

A large number of honest investigators can be found all over the country who have attended seances held to receive spirit communications, which were attended by Spiritualists, and given financial support by them, that were proven to be frauds. If honest investigators are invited to attend spiritual seances, by Spiritualists, and they prove to be frauds, the only reasonable conclusion that they can come to (in the absence of other evidence) is that the whole phenomena are fraudulent, and the result is bad for the cause. I know many Spiritualists will say they ought not to condemn all because one proves fraudulent, that you find black sheep in most flocks, that all religious organizations have frauds among them, but no one presumes to condemn them all on account of that one bad one. Why should it be different with Spiritualistic organizations?

Dishonest people can not always be detected, and may be received into good society, because they were supposed to be honest, but if they are proved otherwise, the whole society should not be condemned for the action of this one, for the society could not possibly have known his character at the time they received him. But with the phenomena of Spiritualism it is different; there is no sense nor excuse for Spiritualists upholding and supporting fraudulent mediums, and thereby bringing disgrace upon the whole cause. Spiritualists can and should rid themselves of this malignant tumor, which is eating the very life out of their organization. These fraudulent mediums have so disgraced the cause that at the present day Spiritualists have no social standing among the better classes. Thousands who believe in the fundamental principles of Spiritualism are found connected with the various Christian churches throughout the country, for the reason that they do not want to be socially ostracised by the better classes of the community. They desire for themselves and their families a social standing which can not be obtained as members of a Spiritual organization, therefore they join some church for the social advantages it affords them, while at the same time they know deep down in their better natures that Spiritualism is true, but they hold it concealed and unexpressed. If Spiritualism had as good a social standing as the various Christian churches, the crowd that would leave these churches and become identified with organized Spiritualism would surpass the expectations of the most enthusiastic Spiritualist.

Thousands would leave the church whose doctrines they do not believe and support organized Spiritualism with their money and their influence, and thousands who are not yet believers in the doctrine would follow them to keep in the social swim; these would soon become Spiritualists when placed in a position where they could investigate it.

Now it will be evident to every one who will investigate this subject that it is the low social standing of organized Spiritualism that keeps the great mass of believers from becoming identified with the movement. If Spiritualists had relied upon the common sense and reasonableness of its claims to establish it as a fact in the minds of the people, instead of the phenomena, there would have been thousands in their ranks where now there are hundreds. If Spiritualists could keep fraud out and have only genuine phenomena, then the phenomena of Spiritualism would be a power in their hands to build up organized Spiritualism, but while the country is being flooded with fraudulent mediums who are supported by Spiritualists, it is a hindrance and a damage to the cause.

Some may claim that organized Spiritualism has made as rapid progress in the last ten years as most new organizations, but this can hardly be substantiated. While it may be a fact that the number that believe in the fundamental principles of Spiritualism has been increased, we do not believe that the number who are identified with organized Spiritualism has. There is no question but what the slow progress made by Spiritualists can be rightfully attributed to the low moral and social standing of Spiritualism among the people.

This being the case, what has been the cause of Spiritualism getting this undesirable reputation? To my mind there can be but one rational answer, and that is DARK SEANCES AND FRAUD THAT HAS RECEIVED THE SUPPORT OF SPIRITUALISTS. Dark seances, together with that erroneous belief held by many Spiritualists, that any attempt to expose fraud in a seance would injure, if it did not kill the medium, has opened the door to the most flagrant and disgusting frauds that were ever perpetrated upon innocent and unsuspecting people. As organized Spiritualism has claimed many of these fraudulent mediums as their own, and given their performances moral and financial support, and made no organized attempt to expose them, they are rightfully deserving the social ostracism which they are getting. I do not claim that organized Spiritualism has wilfully and knowingly supported these frauds, but under the false impression that in an attempt to expose fraud they might hurt the medium, they have suffered the most outrageous frauds to go unpunished, and brought disgrace upon the cause. Why do Spiritualists uphold mediums in placing in the only place where fraud could be detected those who are interested, or those who are easily deceived, and barring those who are anxious to see Spiritualism purged of fraud and placed upon a high moral foundation?

Has there ever been a medium killed by an attempt to expose fraud?

Has there ever been a medium seriously hurt (except in their mind) by it?

Has not a large majority of the cases where an attempt has been made to see the phenomena produced in dark seances were fraudulent, or genuine, proven to be fraudulent? Has there been any, or many of these cases proven genuine?

IF A DESIRE TO EXPOSE THE FRAUD THAT IS HANGING ON TO SPIRITUALISM LIKE A LEECH, SUCKING THE LIFE BLOOD FROM IT, DISQUALIFIES ONE FOR PRODUCING GOOD CONDITIONS, THEN DOWN WITH THAT KIND OF A SEANCE. THEY ARE THE CAUSE OF OUR DISGRACE.

If Spiritualists ever expect to have any moral or social standing with the masses, they must be the ones who expose the fraud; they are the ones who should do the grabbing of those who are trying to personate spirits, for the purpose of deceiving those present, and lead them to the light, and hold them up to the contempt of all good Spiritualists, and not leave it for outsiders to do; then try to excuse the medium and call the one who exposes the fraud a contemptible fraud hunter.

It is better for the cause to break up a half dozen genuine seances than let one fraudulent medium go unexposed. There are two ways in which Spiritualism can gain a respectable social standing in community—one is to expose all fraud perpetrated in spiritual seances. This can only be done by turning on light when least expected by the medium. There need be no fears of hurting the medium if their manifestations are genuine; if not genuine you may hurt their feelings, but you will help the cause more than enough to compensate for that.

The other method and the one I would recommend (it being attended with less trouble and hard feelings), is for Spiritualists to refuse to attend any dark seance where an admittance fee is charged, and recommend no medium whose seances are not held under the strictest test conditions. It is the next thing to impossible to get strictly test conditions in a dark seance, therefore I would let the unbelievers attend the dark seances if they choose, but would advise Spiritualists to remain in the light.

The time perhaps was when dark seances were a necessity, but that day has passed and Spiritualists can well afford to dispense with them in order to shut out the fraud which they are supporting, to the disgrace of Spiritualism. One to be convinced of truth of Spiritualism in a dark seance of the ordinary kind, must be endowed with blind faith equal to that required to believe in the divine revelation of the Bible.

All physical phenomena that could possibly be produced in any other way than by departed spirits, should be relegated from the practice of mediums who are under the auspices of organized Spiritualism. When Spiritualists refuse to patronize dark seances or light ones not under strictly test conditions, and warn the public to look out for fraud in them, thousands of pretended mediums will be thrown out of employment, and will be found thereafter either in the kitchen or the coal mine, and Spiritualism will be elevated to the front ranks of the reasonable, rational and respected religions of the world.

It is the sacred duty of all good Spiritualists to expose fraud as far as lies in their power, and more especially when it is found in the ranks of Spiritualism, and whoever exposes a fraudulent medium confers a lasting benefit to the cause. The time has now arrived when organized Spiritualism should put forth every effort to purge itself of the frauds that have so disgraced it. It is to be hoped that the time is near at hand when no fraudulent mediums will be allowed to creep in under the protection of organized Spiritualism. It is better that all phenomena be dispensed with than to support fraud in any degree.

I hope all good Spiritualists will come to feel that it is their duty to rally around and protect only the honest and true, and lend their support to no fraudulent mediums. This course can only be pursued by requiring the most rigid test conditions of all mediums. You can not be too particular about it; be as careful as you may, you are liable to be deceived, for some of these frauds it seems are liable to deceive the very elect. Organized Spiritualism should be the embodiment of wisdom, honor, virtue and truth, with all the rubbish eliminated.

Will you help make it so?

KATE R. STILES.

An Account of Some Remarkable Phenomena.

Some sixteen or eighteen years ago I attended one of Mr. Cobb's notable meetings in Boston. It was made up of variety, both in attendance, talent, and mediumship; and I think did a good work and led many from darkness to light. Among the various mediums that illustrated their gifts, I was especially impressed with the clean-cut, definite, and evidently correct intelligence manifested by the medial agency of Kate R. Styles. Since that time I have frequently noted accounts of her good works and the first impression was always present in my consciousness to give added interest to what I read of her. Within the past eight years I have several times met her in a casual way, and at Buffalo last January, I had the pleasure of hearing her from the platform at the First Spiritual Church, at the meeting hed under the auspices of the New York State Association. This time it was not messages, or psychic readings; but a vigorous, inspired and inspiring speech—"short and sweet," and rich in soulful expression and spiritual vitality.

Such a speech of ten minutes is worth more than ten years of dawdling self-adulation, and pointless commonplaces without soul or sense, which frequently impose upon spiritual audiences. I like solid logic, enthused with a sincere love of truth and desire to do good to the people. But I can endure limping logic, better than soulless, selfish, indifference, seasoned with vanity and evident insincerity.

Early in February, 1904, while resting and waiting for blizzards to forget their evil designs upon the town, I was made decidedly comfortable and cordially welcome at the hospitable home of Chas. H. Swift, 150 Elizabeth street, Utica, N. Y., and then the good fates, or the stars, or the independent free will of an accident, alias a chance, brought Mrs. K. R. Stiles to the same house, and for several days she ministered to the spiritual needs of the house, and some seekers from without, who were attracted to her sphere, and gathered around the social and spiritual altar, and were fed with celestial manna, and blessed. There is such self-evident sincerity in Mrs. Stiles' manner, tangible in her atmosphere, such simplicity and evident truthfulness, that no one seems to question that what they receive is exactly as the medium understands it. There may be mistakes, and failures, but no one, I think, suspects any voluntary fraud on her part. Added to this the messages are often strikingly real and sometimes quite astonishing to skeptics and investigators.

I was much interested in her account of some rare experiences of a unique character. At a certain time and place, which was fitted for good spiritual work, she was directed to procure an autograph album of authors. She had never heard of them and was doubtful; but found one at a book store. She showed it to me. She was directed to leave it open on the bed or table. The room was unoccupied for an hour or so. On her return a fac-simile of the author's signature was clearly stamped on the blank page some two or three inches below the original. From time to time these experiments were repeated until she had the direct Spiritual signature of many—I think all—of the authors whose names were at the top of each page of the album. It would take an expert to copy so closely the signatures of Byron, Shakspeare, Poe, Bryant, and others, even with the best facilities for forgery. But these names are not in ink, or pencil, though plain and strong. They appear like some chemical stamp work or precipitation. Mrs. Stiles assured me that there was no chance for any trick or deception in the production of these signatures.

She was to remain in Utica through February, and I am sure she must make a good impression on all sincere seekers for truth. I believe she was booked for Elmira in April. I wish there were a thousand like her to feed the multitude with spiritual truth.

MATERIALIZATION.

Some Interesting Experiences with Mrs. Pemberton.

The earth was materialized from invisible elements in space.

All the products of the earth, including man and his food and clothing, are materialized, mainly from invisible elements in the air. It requires a number of years to form the body of a full grown man, but his food and clothing are materialized in much less time. Our spirit friends understand the chemical laws that govern these things so well that they can, and under proper conditions do, return and build up temporary bodies of warm flesh and blood. This is one of the ways they take to prove to their earth friends that they yet live.

I have seen hundreds of such forms, and often seen the whole process, from a small quantity of vapory looking substance to a fully developed form. I have seen and embraced in my arms the form of my father who looked as natural as he did during the last years of his life, and talked with him. I have seen forms come up through the floor, talk awhile, and then sink back. I have seen spirit forms while being held in the arms of a friend go out like a flash of lightning. My spirit friends have come to me in materialized form many times, and at widely separated places. Their conversation at such times has been so intelligent and consistent that there could be no possibility of doubt of their identity.

On the 13th of March, 1890, at a private seance in San Francisco, the form of a beautiful young female materialized in the room right before me. She shook hands with me, told me who she was and that she was an ancient, having lived 2,000 years ago, and was my guide. Since then I have seen and talked with her, often in full materialized and etherealized form, and held communion with her through every phase known to Spiritualism. I am almost as well acquainted with her to-day as I am with my own family, though she lived in the age of Pericles in the city of Athens, Greece.

I have two fine spirit portraits of her now hanging in my seance room, both of which were taken by the Bangs Sisters. The first one was taken by their spirit artist, and shows her in her earth form. The last one, taken last August, was produced by my guide's own artist and shows her as a spirit among the clouds. This picture is four by six feet, and is a rare gem. These portraits were taken in my presence, in broad day light, and without the use of brush or pencil or aid of mortal hands.

I also obtained a fine spirit portrait of an illustrious American whose name is not necessary to mention, which also hangs in my seance room.

I have engaged Mrs. S. E. Pemberton, the trumpet medium, late of Bloomington, now of Peoria, Ill., to hold a seance once a month in my house. She is the best trumpet medium that I know. The results we get are simply sublime. My spirit friends come and talk through the trumpet in clear, loud and distinct voice. They tell me they will come in materialized form when I get a materializing medium, and that they could easily do so through Mrs. Pemberton, if she would allow herself to pass under control, which she will not do, preferring to confine herself strictly to her trumpet work. I built my seance room under the direction of my guide, especially the materializing cabinet. She and her distinguished friend talk through the trumpet freely about the room.

Only a week ago they both gave us fine talks. She floated about the room in etherealized form in magnificently illuminated raiment, and came and kissed me. The only person in the room were the medium, my son and daughter and myself.

My son Charles departed this life some six years ago. He was a lad of thirteen and played the French harp beautifully. His mother guards his old harp from the touch of other mortals, but places it on the table at our seances. Charles comes strong enough to pick up his harp and play old familiar tunes.

But I started to talk about materialization. Let me first explain something about the limit of the power of mediums. Some years ago I went to Fred Evans in San Francisco for a slate writing. He very frankly informed me that he was not sure of getting anything for me as the work was entirely beyond his control, but I received a splendid writing signed by the full names of my father and mother.

Some years later I went to Mr. Campbell, the spirit artist, in Chicago, for the purpose of getting a picture. He told me he would not guarantee anything; that sometimes he got fine results and sometimes he got nothing; that the power that did the work was entirely beyond his control. But I had seen my guide in materialized form the night before, and she then told me what she would give me, and I got it precisely as she had told, and under strict test conditions. Now, all honest mediums know that they cannot guarantee anything. If Mrs. Pemberton would guarantee the appearance of any particular spirit, I would at once say she was an ignorant impostor. No honest materializing medium can dare to attempt to produce certain results for pay, whether that pay is a thousand or a million of dollars.

How can mediums know to a certainty what they can produce? Such offers are an insult to the spirit forces.

YES, THERE ARE FRAUDS, AND PLENTY OF THEM, ESPECIALLY IN THE MATERIALIZING BUSINESS.

My spirit son Charles says if you have a counterfeit dollar, that is no reason why you should throw away all your good dollars. I say if you have a thousand counterfeit dollars and only one good dollar, you should save it and not call them all lead. I know that materialization is true. I know it by the same kind of evidence that I have a wife and children; but I have known materializing mediums who possessed wonderful power in that line, and at the same time have been guilty of fraud. And there is where the trouble comes in. Why resort to fraud? Simply because they fall under the control of evil spirits. These few cases come under the charge made by "The Great Psychological Crime." That charge includes all mediums, whereas only a very small number fall victims to evil spirits, and in those few cases the victim had a natural inclination that way.

HEAVEN.

Human Character Its True Meaning.

The Rev. Mr. Batten Declared That Boundaries of Hell Lay In Lives of Men—Work of Human Devils—Billiard Balls Represent Many Broken Homes—Heaven and Hell Have No Geographical Boundaries, but Are Included in Sum Total of All Human Experience.

"Heaven and hell are not matters of territorial boundaries," said the Rev. Samuel Zane Batten in his evening sermon at the First Baptist church, Lincoln, Neb. "They are present realities and human experiences. A man may still be in the land of the living but he may in reality be living in heaven or in hell."

The Rev. Mr. Batten was discussing the subject of "The Heavens and the Hells of This Earth." He took for his text, "Ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem."

Heaven is not a question of geography, and hell is not a matter of chronology," said the Rev. Batten. "Mark the tense of the words in the text."

He spoke in part as follows:

We have fallen into an unscriptural way of thinking and speaking. We often speak and pray as if eternal life were a future endowment. The scriptures teach that it is a present possession. Those who believe in Jesus Christ have passed out of death into life. Those who love sin are living in death and the wrath of God abides upon them. The great poet of the universe, Dante, has made this truth very plain and real. He writes in his deathless, unfathomable love "of hell, purgatory and paradise." But, as has been pointed out, the scenes which he points out are not future but present. He sees many souls in that world of woe who are yet living upon earth. He says: "Wicked men may be truly called dead." He wants to make us see that the soul of man is now passing through hell, purgatory or paradise. Down in the abode of darkness he sees a man. He still eats and drinks and puts on clothes. One day a scoffer asked a Christian: "Where is hell?" The Christian answered: "Anywhere that God is not."

Some years ago, spending Sunday in Chicago, I went to a Y. M. C. A. meeting in the early evening. A number of men there consecrated themselves to the Lord and when we left we felt that we had indeed been in a heavenly place. About 10 o'clock, with a friend, I took a walk through a region that was called the "Black Hole." There saloons were going in full blast. Brazen-faced women, lost to all sense of shame, walked the streets and leered into our faces. All around open doors to the pit were to be seen with brilliant lights and beckoning boards. Finally, sick at heart, we turned homeward. That night as I sat in my room I felt that I had seen a bit of heaven and a corner of hell.

BREAKING UP HOME.

Men, remember that if you are ever again attempted to chase the billiard ball—that ball represents the breaking up of a home. It is true that home may be a black man's home—but it is a home. Stanley, the great American explorer, has said that "each pound of ivory represents a life; each billiard ball the breaking up of a home; each hundred pounds of ivory means the destruction of a village." Livingstone in Africa met many sad sights. He came to villages of slave hunters by trade. He found that the people killed the infants and the aged, as it was too much trouble to care for them. Bands of warriors were out hunting for men and women, whom they yoked together and drove to the coast, where they were sold into slavery. Livingstone and Stanley both said again and again that what they saw was hell on earth. But we need not go outside our own life to find this heaven or this hell.

Not only are heaven and hell present conditions, but angels and demons are everywhere at work. The word "angel" you know means "messenger"—that is, a messenger of God, of light and of good. There are many such in this world and they are workers for heaven. In the pictures the angels wear wings and have seraphic faces. But many of the angels that we meet are plainly dressed and have no halo. Shall I show you some of these angels of God as they go about their work? Enter this home and see the mother as she lives for her children.

The little one is sick, but with sleepless eyes and uncomplaining heart she watches over it. See her as she gathers her little ones about her chair and tells them that old, old story of love and grace. The years pass, and one of the dear ones leaves the home of love to wander forth into sin, and that mother leaves her home and with sorrowing heart goes forth to seek her lost one. By and by she finds her—not the same dear, pure child as of old, but stained now by sin and shame. But the mother loves her own and pleads with her to leave the hell—come back to the heaven—and love prevails and God's good angel leads the wanderer home.

PITFALLS FOR GIRLS.

Shall I show you a picture of the opposite? Shall I show you a demon as he does his evil work? There are many of these demons and some of them are in this city. There are men—the true agents of the devil himself—who are going around from town to town in the country looking for pretty girls. One of these devils comes to a village and finds an attractive young woman. He gets a position in some store or office or saloon, and seeks an acquaintance. He flatters the silly girl and fills her head with silly notions. Perhaps he persuades her to elope with him on a promise of marriage.

She listens to his lies and runs away. But, alas, she awakens when too late, to find herself in an evil house. She is ruined now, he says; she cannot go home; stay here and have a gay and happy time, with fine clothes and plenty of money. And then this ghoul lives on the wage of that girl's sin, and goes forth to seek for other victims.

"What shall we call such a man as that? He is a devil. He is doing the work of the devil himself; and that man is a child of hell and shall dwell in hell! There are such men in this city, and I know what I am talking about. Ah, and there are the victims of such men in this city, too, and I know whereof I speak. Not all angels wear wings, and not all devils have horn and hoofs. Some of these devils are well dressed, and good looking men, but they are devils to the bottom of their lives, and hell is their native country. These men have no conscience and fire and brimstone are the only logical things for such folks. A heaven for such demons is a satire on all goodness and purity. Such men make hell logical and necessary.

And there are many men and women besides these who are doing the Lord's work and the devil's work. There are men and women who love the souls of men and are going out to seek and to bless others. And there are men here who are doing the devil's work in other ways. I have known saloonkeepers to sprinkle their pavements with liquors to tempt all passersby. There are saloonkeepers who are trying to create the appetite in young boys and I could tell of too many instances where they have succeeded.

HEAVEN MEANS CHARACTER.

I ask you to notice this fact: HEAVEN AND HELL ARE PRESENT CONDITIONS. THEY BEGIN HERE, BUT THEY DO NOT END THERE. "HEAVEN MEANS CHARACTER." WE SHALL ENJOY AS MUCH HEAVEN AS WE HAVE FITTED OURSELVES TO ENJOY. AND WE ARE STORING UP IN OUR LIVES FUEL FOR THE EVERLASTING BURNINGS. GOD SENDS NO MAN TO OUTER DARKNESS AND THE BOTTOMLESS PIT. And God compels no man to enter heaven and find life. He made us men with a mind and conscience. He loved us and sent his Son to save us from sin. We believe in his love; we put away our sins; we choose life and heaven as ours because we have chosen heaven and are living in heaven.

What are we doing to make heaven in the earth? Are we making it easier for others to do right? Are we helping by our example? Are we putting away the evil and seeking the good?

SOME INDEPENDENT SLATE-WRITING MESSAGES.

Having had a series of rather unique spiritual seances in our home circle this winter, it may be of interest to the readers of The Progressive Thinker if a few of the strangest experiences were related.

Our seances were composed of only three members: my father, Captain Zenas Vaughan, my husband, J. W. Grant, and myself. My father possesses very strong psychic power. Mr. Grant, although not a professional medium, indeed, rarely sitting, has, from a child, been able to produce independent slate-writing, and other independent phenomena. No amount of money would induce him or his guide to sit to satisfy trivial curiosity. For myself, I am something of a sensitive, and a good deal of a Spiritualist.

The manifestations of our first meetings consisted mostly in independent slate writings, although there was always a great variety of other phenomena accompanying them. For instance, articles were thrown through the air; the table at which we were sitting was often lifted high in the air and dropped; tunes were rapped out on a horn in another part of the room, and also by the table legs.

After an interesting meeting on the evening of November 25, 1903, we discovered on the following morning, much to our surprise, that the slates had disappeared from their frames during the night. It was impossible that human hands had removed them. Not a scar was visible on the frames; not a particle of slate was visible anywhere; they had gone silently, mysteriously, wafted away according to some wonderful law known to higher power.

We began to wonder why they were taken. At the next sitting, Mr. Grant's Indian control wrote through him, and explained that he took the slates, saying that a "bad chief" wrote on the slates while we were sleeping things of which he did not approve, and fearing that we would think it was he who wrote, he removed the slates. He promised to return them "all good some time."

We bought another pair of slates, but always kept the empty frames near, in case that our spirit friends wished to return the purloined slates.

For three months we continued our seances, receiving many delightful and important messages. Our friends came from across the border to talk with us; soldiers, whom father had last seen dying on the battle-field or in the prisonpens of the South, came back to tell him of the battlefield in spirit land, where they were fighting for spiritual truths and glory. Highly developed Indians came to us with their pretty, broken English tales of the Great Spirit, and how they guarded us and watched over us, whom they loved.

Both pairs of slates used by us were the common school slates, with the frames bound in flannel. During our sittings, the slates were placed upon a table in the cabinet in another part of the room from where we sat, and neither slate pencils or crumbs of pencils were placed between them. The writing was always exquisitely done, and finer than the finest of pen work; the lines were as straight as those upon ruled paper, and the style of penmanship was pretty and distinct. Every word revealed the unseen. My angel mother wrote one night a poem of four verses, of rare beauty both in expression and sentiment. At another time an Indian maiden came back to relate to us her experiences on entering the spirit world. For three days, she said, she stood in spirit beside her mother in the earth plane, and in terrible anguish, trying in vain to make her mother recognize her. She said Mr. Grant's mother (who has been many years in the world of spirit) found her, and took her to her spirit home, and helped her. "Me look for a personal God, and me no find him," she said plaintively. "Tell all the world," she adds, "that there is no personal God." She finishes with the words: "The spirit world is just splendid! Me so happy now!" There was a strange occurrence in connection with this message. I copied it carefully with a pencil upon a sheet of paper, and left it on the table at the foot of my bed when I retired. When I arose in the morning, I found the piece of paper, without a word of writing on it; there was not even a spot or dent in the paper to show where the writing had been. There could have been no mistake in the paper, as no other paper was near it.

Still our missing slates had not appeared, and we had almost given up expecting them. On the evening of February 28, at our last seance, Mr. Grant saw clairvoyantly an Indian chief, in full regalia, holding out something toward father. For several moments the object was held in his outstretched hand, and then it was thrown sharply upon the table around which we were gathered. I screamed in surprise, and the next minute looked eagerly to see what was thrown. Imagine our pleasure. Our slates were returned at last! The frames which a half hour ago lay empty upon the table before us, now contained two slates! The other pair of slates lay undisturbed upon the table shelf below. The returned slates were as warm as one's flesh to the touch, while the others were cold and chilly.

Father was to return to his home in Maine March 1st, and the message found upon the returned slates related to his journey. It was as follows:

"We all wish you a successful journey. This is from all members of your band (33). Ever and always the same, Wakagan, Chief."

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 400 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. LIGHT OF EGYPT.

The Second Volume of a Most Valuable Work.

This is the author's posthumous work left in MS. to a few of his private pupils in occultism, and like Volume I. is (a valuable addition and) a library on occult subjects. Spiritual astrology is especially elaborated. Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc., are a few of the subjects treated of in a scholarly and masterly manner, showing the author to be familiar with his subjects. You cannot afford to be without it, as well as all his other books, viz.: The Light of Egypt, Vol. I., bound in cloth, $2; paper, $1. The Light of Egypt, Vol. II., bound in cloth only, $2. Celestial Dynamics, cloth, $1.

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated. A Unique BIBLE PICTURE BOOK.
By WATSON HESTON.
Nothing else can so completely upset the old superstitious Old Testament Stories as these vivid and lifelike portrayals of them. They present the old myths in the proper absurdness of their absurdity, ridicule their ridiculessness and in fact hold them up to the light of reason. It is a book of 400 pages with 200 full page pictures It will make you laugh off every vestige of the old superstitions; a good way indeed to get rid of them. Price, board, $1; cloth, $1.50.

POEMS of the Life Beyond and Within. Voices from many lands and countries, saying, "Man, thou shalt never die." An excellent selection. Edited and compiled by Giles B. Stebbins. Cloth. $1.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A VERY SUGGESTIVE WORK.

It Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The Process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is Unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1. For sale at this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A New Edition, Profusely Illustrated.

"I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find nothing in it trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all, that under the appearances of fable, there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observation of the vulgar."—VOLTAIRE.

CONTENTS: "The White Bull," a Satirical Romance; "Zadig, or Fate," an Oriental History; "The Sage and the Atheist;" "The Princess of Babylon;" "The Man of Forty Crowns;" "The Huron, or Pupil of Nature;" "Micromegas," a Satire on Mankind; "The World as It Goes;" "The Black and the White;" "Memnon, the Philosopher;" "Andro Dos Touches at Siam;" "Habbabec;" "The Study of Nature;" "A Conversation With a Chinese;" "Plato's Dream;" "A Pleasure is Having no Pleasure;" "An Adventure in India;" "Jeannot and Colin;" "Travels of Scarmentado;" "The Good Brahmin;" "The Two Comforters;" "Ancient Faith and Fable."

One volume, post 8vo, 480 pages, with portrait and 83 illustrations. Extra vellum cloth, $1.50; postage, 15 cents.

ESOTERIC LESSONS.

This work includes "Personified Unthinkables," "First Lessons in Reality," and "A Tour Through the Zodiac." This is an interesting production of occult thought and will well repay careful study and meditation by all occultists. Price, Cloth, $1.50. For sale at this office.

KEEP POSTED

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

To the Spiritualists of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri.

We expect to turn our faces westward March 1. We desire to hear from societies and individuals who would like our services.

Please write us at once if you would like our services, or we may have passed you by before we hear from you. Address us until March 10, Rochester, Ind. Home address 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y.

MISSIONARIES' NOTICE.—All mail for E. W. and C. A. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, should be addressed for the present as follows: No. 725 West Jackson street, Bloomington, Ill.

PSYCHOPATHY, OR SPIRIT HEALING.—A class in Psychopathy, or Spirit Healing, under the instruction of the spirit of Dr. Benj. Rush, through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, is about to be formed. For further information inquire of Mr. Wm. Richmond, 3802 Ridge avenue, Rogers Park, Chicago, Illinois.

E. R. Kidd writes: "I have the issues of The Progressive Thinker dating back seven or eight years, that I will donate to some society for distribution or to preserve, if the society will pay the express charges to destination. Address me in care of P. O. Box 305, Canton, Ohio."

The convention of the Indiana Spiritualists at Anderson resulted in what will soon be known as the state organization. This movement is becoming more widespread as time passes and the combined efforts of those who are at work, it is expected, will find the organization a thorough and complete one by the time summer arrives. The chief feature of the first work of the big organization will be to put missionaries in the field and work up the interest. The field of Indiana will be divided into districts, each of which will be covered by the missionaries, whose business it will be to handle the subject in a broad manner and to invite every one and to obtain from every advocate their co-operation in furthering the interests of the organization. It is believed this religion will reach a stage of interest in Indiana this year that has never before been attained.—Herald, Muncie, Ind.

Brought from Philadelphia to his home in South Pottstown, Pa., suffering from severe illness, which developed into diphtheria, Charles Urner lay for sixty hours in a death-like sleep, from which his physician and attendants could not arouse him. Suddenly he recovered consciousness and at once began to improve. Physicians here regard his case as a very remarkable one.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood, whose lectures have been enthusiastically received in the East, would like an engagement in Chicago during the month of April. His scientific Spiritualistic lectures, illustrated by costly apparatus, would prove a drawing card. In his special line of work he is without a peer.

G. H. Brooks writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "I speak in Williamsport, Pa., Sunday, March 13, and Wednesday the 16th. I will remain there one week, then go on to Philadelphia, where I speak for Mr. Locke's society the last two Sundays of March."

That the mind controls the body to a very great degree no one can dispute. The normal state of religious belief may modify a diseased condition and hasten or retard recovery, but there are bodily diseases which the mind cannot control. They are not myths, but are stubborn facts that mar our hopes and destroy our happiness. The hectice flush upon the face of the consumptive is not a delusion.

Emily E. Philp writes about the Englewood society: "We still meet at Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. 63rd street. We have interesting meetings, and running under new management, no charge at the door, but depend on collections. We have a social and test circle at Mr. Speight's, 5636 Union avenue, Saturday, Mar. 12. We anticipate a very pleasant evening."

Harry J. Moore, of Chicago, was greeted with a large and appreciative audience Sunday both morning and evening. Mr. Moore lectured in the evening on the subject: "The Woman (commonly called the witch) of Endor, as a Medium and an Ideal Character." During his discourse he brought out many traits of character of this woman, whom ignorant people have reviled and grossly misrepresented. Chief among the points made was that the Woman of Endor by befriending Soul, had practiced the Golden Rule over one thousand years before Jesus was born. Mr. Moore also strongly inferred that inasmuch as Jesus was a Jew and the fact of the Woman of Endor befriending King Saul was a matter of Hebrew history that it was quite probable that Jesus as a result of reading of this incident in Hebrew literature became inspired to give expression to the Golden Rule the grandest and noblest sentiment that ever emanated from his lips. In Mr. Moore's peroration he declared that there was not an act in all history from the first man down to the last birth that can be favorably compared to that of the Woman of Endor returning good for evil not even that of the Good Samaritan.—Review, Alliance, Ohio.

J. H. Haines writes: "The Spiritual Unity Society held its second grand entertainment and dance Saturday night, March 5, at Heuser's Hall, 576 Larrabee street, North Side. There was a large crowd in attendance. The musical programme could not be excelled, each person being an artist in his or her line. Prof. Ray presided at the piano and the audience realized he was the right man in the right place. Mrs. Jennie DeLong, H. Hill, Baby Hilmers (the child wonder), Master Robert Ray, Miss Katherine Rea, Paul Hilmers, Chas. Hogan and Miss Josephine, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Elmo, the leading south side mediums, gave several tests and spirit messages, all recognized and highly appreciated. Mrs. Jennie De Long, the West Side favorite medium, also gave several spirit messages and test descriptions which were readily recognized. Last but not least on the list came Prof. R. S. Ray, everybody's choice, giving spirit messages and tests. His tests were short but to the point, as they always are. The chairs were then removed from the centre of the hall and the enthusiastic crowd danced until 1.30 a. m., to the music of Meyers Orchestra. The occasion will be remembered as an enjoyable event."

Mrs. A. Sexsmith writes: "The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission will hold its first grand annual prize masquerade ball on Saturday evening, March 19, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue. This will be the event of the season as there will be 50 prizes awarded. A splendid entertainment has also been provided for those who do not dance. A number of talented artists have been engaged, as well as some of the best speakers and mediums of Spiritualist societies. Special services will be held by the Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission, on Sunday, March 20, at 7:30 p. m. Mr. Thos S. Warner, after his inspirational lecture, will be ordained by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association."

Rolla Stubbs writes: "We have all your premium books that go with The Progressive Thinker. They are very interesting."

The twelve-year-old daughter of William Blackburn, the colored barber of Ann Arbor, Mich., was seriously injured while coasting on Broadway Saturday and the family are firmly of the opinion that they had been forewarned of the accident. The household boasts of a lad of ten years and for the past several days he has begged his parents not to let his sister go coasting. "She will be killed, mamma," said the little fellow every time that his sister went out on the hill. At first the parents paid no attention to the lad, but finally they became alarmed, and on Saturday forbade the little girl indulging in any more coasting. The child was very anxious to go and brought several companions with her to plead her cause. "I don't want to let you go," said the mother at last, "but you may if you will promise to stay only one hour." The child promised, but within 45 minutes she had been brought back seriously injured.—The Argus.

S. H. Ewell writes from Michigan: "I was born in 1819, Jan. 3; became a Spiritualist in 1849; have taken a spiritual paper ever since the first one was published; have read lots of spiritual books and attended untold seances. It was uphill business for 15 years. I send you a few of my effusions, just for curiosity. I have a small printing press and type to do my own printing."

Thomas H. Hildon writes from Allegheny, Pa.: "Mrs. Emma Foster is conducting meetings in Grand Army Hall, Allegheny, Pa. It was my good fortune to attend her meeting last Sunday evening. An enthusiastic audience paid the closest attention to her lecture. Mrs. Foster gave several remarkable messages from spirit loved ones. Her presence alone impresses one, and since she has been in Allegheny many of the backsliders have been occupying the front seats, and many new Spiritualists have joined our ranks."

Rev. Harry J. Moore will be with the Englewood Spiritual Union for the months of April, May, June and September.

Cora F. Morse writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "My object in writing is to call attention to an inspired speaker whom all Spiritualists in all lands should know and will know as they learn the full import of his message and recognize the power behind the throne. Many of our people here assembled in my parlors last Wednesday night to listen to this really great man, Mr. J. Stitt Wilson, who dealt with the moral and spiritual aspects of the new industrial freedom. He held his hearers spellbound with his wonderful interpretation of the social, religious and political situation. It needed no psychic to understand that he is in close touch to the realms of the real. Many said as they left his presence that never since the days of Wendell Phillips and Lloyd Garrison had a truer inspirer championed the cause of humanity. The managers of every camp-meeting this coming summer should see to it that Mr. Wilson is booked for several lectures. His address is Berkeley, California. I feel that calling attention to him and his message to the world is equivalent to offering meat, bread and drink to those spiritually ahungered and athirst. Ere long I hope to place some of his literature before my Spiritualistic brethren and sisters."

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

Mrs. J. Lindsey writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I have been working in the home interest most of the winter. Our society at present is employing only home talent. Our workers are all in deep earnest, and work for the good of the hearers. Sunday at 2:30 conference; at five we have a public circle, and it is well attended. I take charge of it. At 7:30 we have a lecture by some one of our bright home talent, much good is being done. I am contemplating going to Chicago in early Spring, and shall be glad to fill engagements with societies or camps. Address me at No. 279 Seventh street, Grand Rapids, Mich."

Lucy Carroll writes from Washington, Pa.: "Our meetngs are creating a great interest among the people here. G. W. Way of Wheeling, W. Va., serves us for Thursday afternoon and evening. By his lectures and tests he has converted a great number to this great truth, that there is no death, only an open doorway to a higher and better condition in life. Mrs. M. E. Gillard serves us for Sunday afternoon and evening. Mrs. Gillard is an earnest worker. We are all so glad to welcome her. The seed that is being sown here now will in time bring about a bountiful harvest. Good phenomenal mediums would do well here; must come well recommended, and they will be well patronized. A good materializing medium is in great demand."

Correspondent writes: "The Rev. Flora Heckman addressed the First Spiritualist Society of Spokane, Sunday evening, March 6, on Mediumship, Is It Dangerous? The intelligences who cooperate with her in her work from the spirit side proved conclusively that mediumship instead of being dangerous, was a blessing to the world, in that it had emancipated humanity from mental slavery, and given proof positive of immortality and the equal personal possibility of advancement of the whole human race. Mrs. Heckman is filling a three months' engagement for this society and will leave April 1. She would be pleased to hear from other societies in need of a lecturer. She can be addressed, Metropole Block, Room K, Spokane, Washington."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The rostrum of the Hyde Park Occult Society will be occupied by Prof. P. C. Marsh on the evening of the 20th of March; hall at 323 East 55th street; services at 7:45 p. m. Come early so as not to disturb the speaker by coming after services have begun. Psychic demonstrations by Mrs. E. Kline. We will also hold a strawberry social on Tuesday evening, March 22, at the same number. A musical and literary programme will fill up the early part of the evening, and the mediums present will give greetings from our loved ones on the other side. Nice refreshments are in order. 25 cents pays for all. We want a good social time for all, independent of the programme. Come early. Mediums welcome."

Prof. Lockwood, the scientist and lecturer, writes from Conneaut, Ohio: "Although we had a rainy day yesterday, we had two good audiences and the friends seem to be enthusiastic over the general character of our work. They have a fine society here, harmonious and fraternal, although representing wide diversity of thought upon the spiritual philosophy and its relation to modern religious thought. I find here also one of the most active lyceums that I have met in many a day. It includes adults as well as children. My lecture in the afternoon was upon 'Visible and Invisible Nature and Its Phenomenal Aspects.' In the evening, 'Why Spiritualism Has Not Been Accepted by the Popular Mind.' In this lecture I demonstrated that all nature is infinitely related by psychic or invisible modes of motion, which fact as the basis of spiritual communication had been entirely overlooked by our opponents."

Wm. Robertson writes from Dallas, Texas.: "The First Spiritualist Church, Truth Seekers of Dallas, Texas, on last Sunday night closed their third month with Mrs. Alice Baker as pastor. She is giving general satisfaction, being an earnest and conscientious worker; a fine speaker and splendid message medium. Our attendance is steadily increasing and new people are associating themseelves with us. Master Milton Baker, the boy psychic, gave an interesting and entertaining lecture on the night of Feb. 28. The young man, though only 14 years of age, ranks with the best speakers and psychic readers now on the Spiritualist rostrum. Both Mrs. Baker and her son are open for engagements in Texas cities, and can be addressed at 213 Bryan street, Dallas, Texas."

Correspondent writes: "The Metropolitan Spiritualist Society holds its regular services every Sunday evening. The last month fine speakers have been presented from its rostrum that have given the people a good deal of food for thought; among them Mr. Axel Gustaveson, Dr. McWilliams, Mrs. Daniel, Mrs. Cochnore. Sunday, March 13, Walter DeVoe will deliver the address, and Sunday the 27th, Mr. Marsh will deliver the anniversary address. Every lecture is followed by spirit messages by the pastor, Mrs. Maggie Waite. The Progressive Thinker is always in demand at the door."

Agnes L. Cressler writes from Sturgis, Mich.: "The members of the Harmonial Society of Sturgis, Mich., had the pleasure of listening to several able and instructive discourses given by Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, last month. While our society has not the privilege of frequent meetings, yet there seems to be a general interest manifested. While we thoroughly enjoyed Mr. Sprague's lecture we greatly missed our worthy president, Mr. Thomas Collar, who we regret to say was taken seriously ill previous to our services, and was unable to attend; but I am happy to state that he is speedily recovering. Through the earnest influences of Mr. and Mrs. Sprague our society decided to take out a state charter, which we sincerely trust will benefit us in the future."

Wisdom out of the mouths of babes enlightened yesterday afternoon, at Odd Fellows' hall, the midwinter massmeeting of the State Spiritual Association. The children's lyceum brought small girls and boys upon the platform to tell of those who have 'passed over.' After Georgie Whitwell had outlined "The Benefits of the Lyceum," Joseph Whitwell, another child, discoursed upon "The Power of Thought." "The Value of the Circle" was made clear by Eddie Hottinger. Ollie Crooks a tiny girl, emphasized "The Benefits of Mediumship;" Carrie Judson sketched the general subject "Spiritualism;" Mamie Peasé talked of "Music in a Spiritual way," and 7-year-old Annie Whitwell delighted the large audience with her explanation of "Spirit Return," to-wit, the manner in which souls revisit the material world.—St. Paul (Minn.) Globe.

C. J. Van Alstine writes from Long Beach, Cal.: "Mrs. E. E. Hammond of Los Angeles, formerly of Topeka, Kansas, has been speaking Sundays for the First Spiritual Society. The result was a crowded hall, standing room only. She is an honest woman, and any society would do well to have her lecture. The society is not quite five months old, and so far not an inharmonious word or action, owing to the earnest work of the officers who have the good of humanity in their hearts."

W. N. Slocum writes: "The Light Among the Hills came to a sudden end, much to my regret. I had become acquainted with, and greatly interested in, the characters when they dematerialized. Can't the author write a sequel? It would make a valuable book. 'From the Spirit Realms' will add a halo to the 'Light Among the Hills.'"

F. E. Gabel writes from Onarga, Ill.: "The Onarga Spiritualist Investigating Society has enjoyed a rich treat the past few days. Mrs. S. E. Pemberton, a fine trumpet medium of Peoria, Ill., has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Skeels, our leading members, and during her visit she has held several test seances which were well attended, and proved a source of delight to some and of wonder and amazement to others. She has been engaged to return again in the near future."

B. F. Sliter, of Alameda, Cal., writes: "On March 4, at about 4 o'clock a. m., being then in bed with my wife, but wide awake, I heard these words: 'Land will advance in price for about forty years, during the railroad period, which will then be superseded by aerial navigation.' Who spoke these words, I am unable to say. Let me say, however, that I was not thinking of landed values or aerial navigation, nor had been for weeks. The words proceeded from the darkness above the bed occupied by my wife and self, and were articulated with unusual distinctness. These words were not heard clairaudiently, but by the normal physical ear. Were they a prophecy or what; who can explain? No one in mortal flesh uttered them."

Harry J. Moore's engagement with the First Spiritualists Church of Alliance, Ohio, has proven so successful during the month of February and the first two Sundays of March, that the society there has decided to continue his services covering the last two Sundays of the month of March. Mr. Moore is engaged to serve the Englewood Spiritual Union (Chicago) for four months beginning with the first Sunday of April and closing with the last Sunday of September. Mr. Moore devotes the months of July and August to camp work and he has the first four Sundays of July (there being five Sundays in the month of July) and the last Sunday of August open for engagements with camp associations. Address him at 322 W. Main street, Alliance, Ohio, until further notice.

Mrs. A. E. Sheets, prominent as a lecturer, writes to Dr. G. B. Warne: "Your letter of invitation reached me this morning. It cheered me somewhat to know I had not entirely passed out of the memory of the friends of our cause, that a desire to have me participate in your mass-meeting, was felt by you and others. I deeply regret the fact that I am not yet able to engage in public work to any extent. I shall doubtless leave the hospital at Battle Creek about May 1. I am hopeful that the start given me here may be followed up by a steady improvement, and that I shall later feel myself justified in re-entering the field of activity. When that time comes it will give me great pleasure to meet with our friends and render assistance to you in some of your conventions in Chicago. Permit me to thank you for the courteous invitation extended and to wish you every success."

Elizabeth Schauss writes from Toledo, Ohio: "The missionary work of the Ohio Spiritualists' Association under leadership of its able president, Mrs. C. F. Curran, is waking up more people to the truth in our state than has heretofore been done. The month of March will be the banner month of the year in our state, the missionary force having been strengthened by our honored and loved national president, H. D. Barrett, who under the auspices of the O. S. A., is conducting mass-meetings in various portions of the state, and will, we know, incite more life into all of us. The Ashtabula Psychic Research Society is looking with great anticipation to the coming of Brother Barrett, and are making preparations for a lasting revival during his sojourn with them, March 29, 30; that public interest is being aroused can be seen in an editorial in the Ashtabula Beacon Record of March 7, as follows: 'The inclement weather did not prevent the attendance of enough people to fill the G. A. R. hall on Sunday evening, for the meeting of the Spiritualistic society, when an address was given by Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss of Toledo. The speaker had the earnestness and enthusiasm which proceed from faith in the message brought, and consequently held the attention of the audience. The speaker referred to the common saying, 'We live to die,' and declared that Spiritualism teaches that we die to live. She argued that too much time is devoted to the material man, the mere husk, and urged as more important the study of the soul that lives forever. She denied that Spiritualists have no interest in the Bible or no belief in God or Jesus Christ, and then paid a tribute to the Bible as the Book of books, spoke at length of God, and described Jesus as the world's greatest medium.' Our cause is gaining, the labor is sometimes accompanied by bitterness, but the fruit thereof is sweet."

Dr. Georjean Miller writes: "In your issue of Feb. 27, is a clipping headed, 'Jesus a Colored Man.' Quite likely the Roman Catholic Jesus was a man with a dark complexion. The name Jesus is an Italian or Spanish name, but there never was a Messiah by the name of Jesus. The story as recorded in the New Testament is a fabrication, a falsehood cut from whole cloth. The New Testament, very much like the Old, is a contemptible piece of perfidy. Such men as Jesus, Solomon and Moses never had an existence except in the brains of an abominable priestcraft. Any folly or fabrication can be proven by the Bible. No Liberal will deny this. There have been five Messiahs, none of whom are now known to the people of the planet, neither are their teachings in vogue; in fact, that which they taught is unknown among the children of women. So far as the Catholic and Protestant priests are concerned, they know not anything about any of the Messiahs. They are simply playing with fire. The lies of the Romish priests are accepted by the priests of Protestantism. Hence the Old and New Testament stories are called sacred by the different creeds. Creeds are but the offal of a stupendous fabrication. Religion, like the devil fish, is a one-headed beast with many creeds, all of which can be likened to the tentacles of that devil fish. Every creed helps to feed and keep alive the monster demon religion; the one headed octopus that has filled the earth with misery, crime and materiality."

A. F. Ross writes from Tacoma, Wash.: "Our very eloquent and highly esteemed pastor, Mrs. Lole F. Prior, who has been with us since last September has been the means of increasing our membership and enlarging our congregation to such an extent that the seating capacity in our spacious hall is nearly always filled to its fullest extent. Many who have never given Spiritualism a thought before are now giving their utmost attention to its beautiful teachings, and now we can boast of the largest and most energetic society in the Northwest. Our lyceum is doing well, and great interest is manifested by the children, for Mrs. Prior has taken entire charge of its management, wherein she stands second to none in the work she is doing in their behalf. The Ladies' Auxiliary is also doing excellent work, another feature of the good done that we have to give due credit to our pastor, Mrs. Prior, and if the time ever comes when we have to part with her to take up other fields, it will be a sad blow for the Spiritualists of our beautiful metropolis. Our state president, Mrs. Sheldon, from Tacoma, made us a visit last Sunday, wherein she presented us with some views of our state encampment grounds, showing up the beautiful grounds with its tents of the last season; also the lovely little spring lake on the shores of which we have the pleasure of calling our own, containing ten acres, and we trust that many who are intending to take an outing the coming season will take advantage of these beautiful camping grounds for they will surely be greatly benefited both physically and spiritually. Now, in behalf of The Progressive Thinker I must say a word for your benefit; you are certainly doing a grand work, and the truths presented from week to week are like manna to the hungry soul; it is bearing fruit and like bread cast upon the waters will return after many days. The masses are reading, and reading sets them thinking and bye and bye will the results be seen as it deserves."

E. E. McCarthy writes: "I came to Houston, Texas, four months ago to fill an engagement of six months with the Houston Spiritual Society. My motive at the time of engagement was not so much to work for the cause, but rather to secure change and active work for health's sake. I have been a speaker and teacher on all progressive lines in Denver, Colo. I find this field productive and ready for good workers. The society was nearly disbanded by inharmonious teachers, yet held intact by a few noble members who paid expenses from their own income. The hall is now filled every Sunday and the society is again on its feet. We wish to make arrangements during the summer. I can give the best reference as speaker and platform test medium. I am clairvoyant, clairaudient, and also psychometric; also give life reading from name, palm or photo. I teach the philosophy and explain the phenomena. Address me at No. 1517 Preston avenue, Houston, Texas."

Report comes that about five miles east of Grandview, Ind., back from the Ohio river on a small mound that overlooks a lonesome valley, stands an old house, once the home of one of the wealthiest families of Spencer county, which, it is believed, is habited by ghosts and spirits. Through death the family dwindled away until only one daughter remained and through adversity they were compelled to give up the old homestead. The only remaining child, an old maid, moved to a small cabin in a lonely dell, where she died recently. During her latter years she said many times that the family who owned the house would never enjoy residing there. Shortly after her death whisperings of ghostly occurrences in and about the homestead began to circulate about the neighborhood. Mysterious voices were heard at the house, it is claimed, forms were seen gliding through the hallways, doors slammed and windows rattled in an unaccountable manner. Travelers along the road declare that they have seen the form of the old daughter before them on the road as she came from her old cabin home. She would disappear generally as soon as she was seen. A strange disease has attacked the stock of the farm and they die without apparent cause. The family living in the old residence at present are unable to sleep at night because of the weird and frightful noises. Investigation has failed to reveal the cause, and the mystery is still unraveled.

Smiley Lewis writes from Dennison, Texas: "During the past week it has been our good fortune to listen to the solos and two fine lectures on the Spiritualistic philosophy, delivered by Mrs. Laura B. Payne, of Topeka, Kansas, who for the past year has served the San Antonio (Tex.) society as pastor, as well as doing outside work in advancement of the cause of Spiritualism. At the first lecture, as was expected, the audience was small; at the second there was a generous increase in number present, notwithstanding the cold wave and sand storm prevailing. On both evenings quite a number of prominent members of orthodox churches, and others were present, who for the first time heard a lecture on our beautiful philosophy, and who listened in breathless silence to the words of wisdom as they fell from the lips of the speaker. On Sunday morning Sister Payne left us to fill an engagement for an afternoon lecture at Dallas. Now, the question is asked, when will she come again? Truly, there is a good field, and a wide expanse for work in Northern Texas, not touched by the N. S. A. missionaries, to whom was allotted the field of Texas to work up. The harvest is ripe, but where are the reapers? We need phenomena to arouse the latent minds to thinking, from thinking to investigation, and the philosophy to diffuse the light, and lead the way to organization for practical work. Who is to have the honor of doing it? Denison has a fine school system, and churches galore; the same may be said of a half-dozen other good towns within a radius of thirty miles, all connected with convenient railroad facilities, in a good agricultural district, populated with average intellectuality, but who still, seemingly, are contented with the husks of past-age theology, or the more modern materialism. 'Let there be light.'"

MARRIED:—In Jackson, Mich., on Feb. 20, Louisa L. Kirby and Albert H. Bevier, of Battle Creek, Mich. The Rev. Julia M. Walton, state missionary of the Michigan Spiritualist Association, performed the marriage service.

H. F. Coates writes: "Sunday evening, March 6th, Dr. J. H. Randall occupied the platform at Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. The Doctor is a very progressive speaker, and his lecture was well received. Mr. T. W. Sherk will lecture for us, March 20, in the evening. His subject will be 'Life in the Spirit World.' I trust that a large audience will be present on this occasion. Food for thought will be given to all. We have services at 3 and 8 p. m. each Sunday. All are welcome."

Mrs. M. E. Coleman writes from California: "Your paper came into our home like a ray of sunshine, and we have found it a present help; a paper filled with truths, dealing with all subjects in a most kindly way, yet strong in the right. May you ever be prospered."

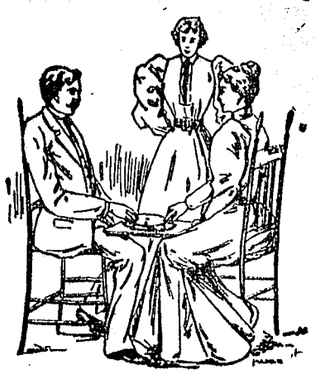
J. A. Toren writes: "The Hon. R. Gilray will lecture at Wilcox Hall, corner of Champlain avenue and 43rd street, for the Society of the Psychic Forces. Mrs. Isabella Cleveland, trance test medium, will follow the lecture with her clear-cut messages from the spirit side of life. We extend a hearty welcome to all."

Dr. H. E. Ballard writes: "Many were denied the pleasure of attending the Church of Higher Forces last Sunday evening through the inclemency of the weather. Those, however, who braved the storm were well repaid by hearing the lecture delivered by Prof. P. C. Marsh on Light of Spiritual Development, a subject handed up by a gentleman from the audience. The appreciation of the masterly manner in which Prof. Marsh pointed out how spiritual development could be unfolded through a knowledge of the law that nature surrounds us with, was demonstrated by a scintillation of spiritual approbation that flitted across the faces of those present. The Church of Higher Forces will exert its influence towards inculcating a desire for a knowledge that will supply the investigator with a key to spiritual progression. Douglas Hall, in which we hold our meeting, corner of 35th street and Indiana avenue, is centrally located, cars pass the corner from all directions. The children's progressive lyceum being the nucleus to the building of a successful spiritual organization, a united effort is most earnestly solicited on the part of all those in our district towards making our lyceum a success. A success means in inducing the parents in sending their children to a Sunday-school where they will be taught to learn something of nature. When they have learned what nature is, we need have no fear for their future. Spiritualism is growing, but not as rapidly as it would if more of an effort was made to gather the young in its folds. As they mature into manhood and womanhood, they develop their influence, and this influence will become lasting because it is part of our inheritance. Children's lyceum meets at 2; conference at 3; evening service at 8. J. W. Caldwell and his charming daughters, Florence, Lizzie and Jennie, supply the vocal and instrumental music for our services."

The veteran worker, Will C. Hodge, writes from San Diego, Cal.: "We send herewith an account of the dedication of our new temple [Will appear next week]. We have now a fine home of our own, worth at least seven thousand dollars, and our total indebtedness is only two thousand, and part of this is already arranged for. Interest on the borrowed money is no more than we have been paying in rent for a dingy old hall which the sunshine never entered, even in this land of sunshine. You may be sure that yesterday was a glorious day for the friends of Spiritualism in San Diego, and everybody was happy."

Arthur F. Milton writes: "Article on the difference between Soul and Mind Mediumship in The Progressive Thinker of March 12, should be carefully considered by those who are sensitive to impressions, and many mistakes will be prevented, both in the matter of information and guidance. But to be receptive to soul impression, it may be noted, that, as mental mediumship is inherited through mental activity (study and observation), soul mediumship is inherited through soul activity (charity, benevolence and sympathy); and then term the first inspiration, and the latter intuition to avoid error in classification."

Mrs. M. Henry writes: "The Ladies' Auxiliary connected with the Universal Occult Society held its second social under their state charter, at the residence of the president, Mrs. Davenport, 3138 Rhodes avenue. The social was opened by a few very appropriate remarks by our pastor, the Hon. R. Gilray. We had some instrumental music by Mrs. Hulser; then from Mrs. Karcher a beautiful poetic improvisation. About seventy-five were present. We were entertained by messages and tests from Mrs. Burland, Mrs. Hansen, Mrs. McMenamin and Cora Dixon, the child wonder, also from Mr. Hillis, Mr. Phillips and others. The prominent co-workers present: Mrs. Bliss Green, Mrs. Maggie Waite, Prof Marsh (of Boston), Mr. Beverly, Mr. Lynn and Mr. Cleveland. Mrs. Hulser, who is a fine singer, favored us with some coon songs. Mrs. Wagstaff and your correspondent dressed in gypsy costumes, gave palm readings, and all seemed to enjoy them very much. Sandwiches, cake and coffee served by the ladies. Everyone seemed to enjoy the evening, and the ladies hope to have the pleasure of welcoming them all at their next social to be held on March 19, at Mrs. Devenport's."



Grace Cortland writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The authorities here are making a raid on clairvoyants, and mediums in general, but the work will go on and live just the same."

Will C. Hodge writes from San Diego, "B. Fay Mills is here again, and is attracting large audiences. Things are coming our way in spite of any kind of a Great Psychological Crime."

Mrs. J. A. Murtha writes: "I am serving the First Spiritualist Church of Buffalo, N. Y., for the month of March. The church is under excellent management, and good work is being done by many earnest workers here for the upbuilding of the cause so dear to us all. I will serve the society at Watertown, N. Y., for the month of April. I have the months of May and June open, also some camp dates. I would be pleased to hear from societies needing my services during this months. Address me, Niagara Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. Home address, 402 Troy street, Toledo, Ohio."

D. E. Lunsford writes: "I certainly enjoy the weekly visit of The Progressive Thinker, and admire the broad guage principle on which it is conducted. I wish I could impress upon my brother Spiritualists the importance of doing missionary work for our papers. It is astonishing how few of the many professed believers who are subscribers to any paper. Lately I have been taking an active interest in looking up those who are interested and am putting out my spare copies after I have read them, and I do not intend to miss an opportunity of speaking a good word for the paper and trying to induce people to subscribe. I have several promised and will take good care that they do not forget."

Moses Hull writes: "Rev. J. F. Carney, of Martinsville, Ind., long an eloquent and able Universalist minister, has long had leanings toward Spiritualism. Now he has got so far along that he calls himself a full-fledged Spiritualist, and, though he still preaches everything good there is in Universalism, he is ready at any time when he can be spared from other duties to go out into the by-ways and hedges, and tell the people why he is a Spiritualist. Bro. Carney does not see fit to leave the Universalist church, for in their differences from other denominations he is still a Universalist, and the Universalists are, with a very few exceptions, liberal enough to accept his services even though they know he knows of Spiritualism. Spiritualists wishing Brother Carney's services for funerals, weddings or lectures on Spiritualism should write him at Martinsville, Ind. Having known Mr. Carney for ten years I have no hesitation in recommending him to Spiritualists within his reach. His charges will always be moderate, and he will do good work. I wish the Spiritualists would try to keep all such men busy."

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

ASPHODEL BLOOMS
AND
Other Offerings.
BY
EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storiettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The Author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest."

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. C. B.: Q. Can you inform me of reliability of a party advertising to cure nervous troubles, obsession and insanity? He makes no charges but lets his patients pay when cured what they think it is worth.

A. We know nothing personal of the person mentioned, but on general principles, will affirm that no one can do what this prospectus promises. The assurance that there will be no charges until cure is effected, is a delusive catch, and you will find that pay enough will be exacted.

If you have a case of "obsession" it is quite sure to be "nervous disorder," and for that there must be a cause which must first be removed. I have met with many cases of so-called "obsession," and although it may not be agreeable to say, the fact remains, that I have yet to meet the first instance which could not be directly referable to perverted or disordered passion, by which the nerve force is depleted and what may be called sexual insanity dominant. It may be a palliative, and a welcome excuse to make a scapegoat of "obsessing spirits," and thus escape responsibility, but the responsibility remains nevertheless, and the cure must be applied by self-control and cannot be furnished ready-made by self-lauded schemes of others.

M. D. Stacy: Q. What is the weight of a million gold dollars?

The United States gold dollar weighs 25.8 troy grains, or a million dollars in avoirdupois weight 3,685.8 pounds. The contrast with silver is great, for a million dollars of the latter would weigh 58,929.9 pounds avoirdupois. A ton of silver has 37,704.84 dollars. A ton of gold 602,799.21 dollars. A cubic foot of gold weighs 1203 pounds, 10 ounces. A cubic foot of silver, 625 pounds, 13 ounces.

E. L. Ray: Q. Should I ask a friend to come death to deliver a message to some friend, after his death, could he deliver the same?

A. Such a message would be faithfully carried, but it is possible that the spirit to whom it was to be delivered might not be easily found. If you should say to a friend starting on a journey to England, take this message to a certain friend you have there, without a direction as to town or city where that friend might be found, you would impose a duty which might be impossible to perform. In the vastness of the spirit world, unless the spirit to whom the message was sent, at times came into your personal sphere, there would be great difficulty in finding a given individual. If the spirit does at times come near you, then you can by earnest thought give the message yourself. The spirit will receive it though you may be unconscious of its so doing.

A. C. Lantz: Q. Will the Socialist movement be in possession of the powers of the government of the United States in the year 1908?

A. The student of the history of political parties becomes aware of the great difficulties attending the inception of a new organization, and will scarcely be ready to grant that it would be possible to bring such a radical change in four years. Not only to organize a party, but on such grounds of public policy that it would be acceptable to the majority of eighty millions of people, is a task for a generation. If a socialistic party were thoroughly organized and in the field, the coming presidential contest, with a socialistic condidate, it is not within the bounds of probability that he would receive a single electoral vote. This is not saying that Socialism as understood by the best informed of its advocates is not true, or the best policy, but it is saying that the people at large do not understand it, and are not educated out of the old ruts in which government lifts run. Is it possible that in four years a radical change can be made in the minds of the people? If this is to be brought about, then socialism must first be relieved of the obloquy brought on it by its ill-advised and ranting exponents, who make it synonymous with nihilism and anarchy. The newspapers now published in its interest must give more space to instructing their readers in what socialism is and is not, than to berating the government with treasonable froth. The unions will have to stand with all citizens on the platform of law and not on force, to which they now so readily resort, and socialism will have to put better men to its front, than have made themselves so conspicuous.

And now as we are in the prophetic business, let us say further that the lawless element of the unions do not understand the temper of the American people, when they resort to force. The existence of government depends on the laws being obeyed, and the consensus of public opinion is that they must and shall be obeyed. You may modify or change the laws, that is the right of every citizen to assist in this by petition and vote, but no organization has a right to defy the law as it exists. Sometime the unions will go too far, and force will call out force, and the socialistic movement will be retarded for many a year. What should be gained by evolution—growth—is attempted by revolution.

All the gains of socialism must be by steady, onward growth. Can socialism offer anything better than the postoffice, which takes a letter to the furtherest limits of Alaska for two cents, and is extending itself by rural delivery and by growth becoming everything the people can ask for?

Can it offer anything better than the public schools, paid for by all the people, and giving the best of education, an education such as was never in the history of the world furnished absolutely free?

Can it offer any better way of keeping up the public highways, bridges, etc., than is now pursued by the united people?

Socialism will be victorious if it seizes the opportunity and cultivates this growth in the right direction.

M. A. J.: Q. I am a Spiritualist, yet a member of the Baptist church, and take an active part in the Ladies' Aid Society. I feel the presence of my lost ones, and cannot give them up, yet of late there is a feeling coming over me when I go to church or Aid, that I am doing what I ought not to do. I want to do the Master's will. Do I weaken the power which enables my spirit friends to approach me by this course?

A. It is a hard struggle to break away from the belief, associations and friendships of early life, and unless a principle is involved, it is not a duty to make the sacrifice. If one grows out of these beliefs, and fully understands how erroneous and misleading they are, he may reach a point where all the attachments and associations of the past will be as nothing to the consciousness of freedom, and the glorious prospect from the heights gained, and the lifted horizon. Perhaps by continuing to work with the sisters of the church, for a time at least, thoughts may be thrown out at appropriate occasions that will lead them to new views of the purposes of life and consequences of death. Such service may not be done in any other manner.

But when one reaches this state of self-questioning, the new ideas quicken the conscience, and demand open expression and to be lived by, it is difficult to go on in the old path and give tacit support to that which is felt to be wrong. We have no doubt that this correspondent will find that the members of her church are more favorable to the teachings of Spiritualism than she now thinks they are. It is the name that in most cases frightens away. Thoughts and ideas need not be labeled. Policy and discussion are good allies in establishing the truth. To lock horns with everyone whom we think in error destroys our influence and power to lead. The gentle suggestion is more powerful to convince than stern command. The "Master" always leads to the truth, by the truth, and for the truth, and his voice is the voice of the innermost conscience. When this speaks the soul can find no rest until it fashions the conduct of life to its dictates.

A Strange Dream.

What are called prophetic dreams occur to me only when I am about to awaken from a long night's sleep. Sometimes they come for instruction, sometimes as a warning against danger and sometimes to convince me of an error and show me the inconsistency of my course, or, perhaps, as an exhortation to amend my conduct or to check unprofitable thought and desires.

For instance, if for some days previously I had allowed myself to desire some selfish advantage, such as wealth, public applause or fame, I would dream that my hands were soiled by contact with ordure, and I would awaken with horror and disgust. Indeed, I know pretty well now what is intended by the symbols; various as they are I recognize the significance of each, and thus am greatly profited by instruction coming through dreams.

Those dreams which are intended to point out emphatically how wrong my judgment or conduct is, are sometimes terribly alarming and shock me by their intense condemnation of my thought or course, and from them I learn how important it is (in view of the soul's truth, duty and responsibility) to walk circumspectly and never violate "conscience."

I have long since learned that the way from error to truth is not an easy one to travel, and that much discipline must be endured before we become fit to mingle with "just men and women made more perfect" in another and better world.

The life of the man of Nazareth is a symbol of the life of man and woman of all time, of every nation and every temperament; the variations of individual cases do not alter the rule. The journeyings of the children of Israel from slavery to Pharaoh, to the passage through the sea and the worship of idols in the wilderness, are all shadows of the life of man. Belief in the letter killeth the spirituality of the churches, but the spirit would give them life. But "great is Diana," and still greater the "golden calf." The advance of truth is blocked by the pride of religion, some people worship self and call it God.

The following is not a very remarkable dream, but it was to me very vivid and left a strong impression. It will be noticed that it does not condemn those who believe in law or nature; it merely illustrates.

October 29, just before awaking I had a strange dream. I thought an angel or spirit stood before me. She wore a long robe the color of which resembled brown, and it was literally covered with geometrical figures. She spoke to me:

"I shall come for you soon," she said, "and I thought I would call on you to let you know."

"How soon will you come for me?" I asked.

"In about ten days," she replied.

"I thank you," said I. "I am ready to go at any time."

As we were about to separate a thought struck me:

"I beg your pardon, madame. Allow me to ask, do you believe in God?"

"Oh, no," she replied. "I believe in natural law, like Mrs. A. and Mr. B.," and she named several persons whom I knew to be good citizens.

"Ah, then, madame," said I, "you need not come for me. We would not be congenial. I believe in God, and therefore could not go with you; but I thank you for the interest you have taken in me."

Then we parted.

SPIRIT MATERIALIZATION

A Notable Instance Occure in Boston, Mass.

Reading the various accounts of spirit manifestations and spirit materializations as reported by others in The Progressive Thinker, leads me to feel as though I desired to say something as to what is occurring in the so-called Hub.

The city of Boston has not been behind in the abundance of evidence of spirit power and presence as portrayed through the chosen instruments of the spirit world, and for many years has been abundantly blessed with the manifestations thereof; and it has been my fortunate privilege for many years past to attend many of the seances that have been held by various mediums to convey to humanity the blessed knowledge of spirit materialization, where the world is made aware not only of "the gates ajar," but that the glorious portals thereof are thrown wide open, and the two stages of existence—mortal and spirit—mingle freely with each other in a blessed reunion.

As in the days of Jesus in the past the world was blest with a wave of pentecostal power of the spirit, so are we even now living amid the times of another Pentecostal Era of Spirit Power; and as the former days of pentecostal power were in connection with the presence of Jesus, so is the present pentecostal power and outpouring of the power of the spirit also in connection with Jesus, and is indicative of the second coming of Jesus in power and with great glory, as the fulfillment of his promise that he would return again; and I would suggest, let not humanity remain blind to the signs and tokens with which the world is pregnant today.

Modern Spiritualism is the second coming of Jesus; moreover, it is the closing period of the cyclic messianic era of which Jesus was the Messiah; and is also the opening period of another cyclic messianic era that will have its representative Messiah on earth, who will become more and more recognized as such as time rolls on. Such, at least, is the testimony of those in spirit life who are wise and far advanced in spiritual truth, and can foresee and foretell events of the future as well as possessing a knowledge of the past.

But, Brother Francis, how a person will sometimes wander far away from what they start in to write about. Now, I will return to my original intention.

During recent years I have attended numerous seances of Mrs. H. S. Stansbury, and also Mrs. A. Spaulding, in Boston; both of whom are true and sincere mediums, and at whose seances it is no unusual occurrence for two, three or even four materialized spirits to be outside of the cabinet at the same time conversing with their mortal friends; they also go through the process of materializing their forms outside of the cabinet in various parts of the seance room; even two at a time side by side, in plain view of all to perceive; also dematerializing in plain view, gradually diminishing in size until completely dissolved from view into the very atmosphere itself, from whence they had originally emerged in the process of materialization.

During the few minutes they remain with their mortal friends, they not only reveal their identity by giving their names, but in their conversation such truths and information are imparted as carries conviction that they are just who they represent themselves to be.

I recently attended a seance at Mrs. A. Spaulding's, 51 Rutland street, Boston, and desire to refer to one incident in particular that occurred there, and will relate it under this heading, viz.:

An Illuminated Ancient Atlantian.

During the seance, a spirit of majestic stature and commanding presence issued from the cabinet, dressed in black, and a loose flowing robe adorning him that had a golden illuminated border all around it, while the entire robe was dotted with illuminated spots, and as he would wave the robe with his hands the spots would change in size, form and brightness until they finally became brilliantly illuminated stars.

Then extending his right arm horizontally from his side, he waved it up and down two or three times, and as he did so an illuminated aura issued from his hand like rays of light and formed an illuminated space of, I should judge, about five feet square, and this square space was perfectly alive, so to speak, with rays of light darting here and there with indescribable rapidity, yet commingling harmoniously with each other. Imagine if you can a hundred shafts of lightning darting with lightning-like rapidity over the entire surface of this five-feet-square space until every inch of it was a mass of living, darting light in motion, and you will see it as near as I can describe it; then, instantaneously, this beautiful space of darting light resolved itself into the form of a materialized lady spirit arrayed in robes from which radiated this supernal light, and remaining standing thus a few moments she advanced to the side of the other spirit; and thus they stood, man and woman, and in a few moments retired to the cabinet.

After the seance, I was informed that they were Atlantian spirits of the long-lost continent of Atlantis, who had but recently came to Mrs. Spaulding's spirit band and announced themselves as Yarma (or Yermah) and Mona, but that they are very reticent as to why they have come or what may be their intended mission. Such revelations are awaited with interest.

Persons who witness the spirit materializations of the present time, can easily realize the truthfulness of the ancient manifestations of a similar nature as related in biblical historical records; and not only spirit materialization, but all of the varied manifestations of the "gifts of the spirit" that are recorded in ancient history, are now being duplicated and reproduced throughout the world in as great if not greater power than in ancient biblical times in the time of Jesus; in fact it is recorded of Jesus that he gave utterance to the statement that "greater things than I do shall ye also do."

FARMER RILEY IN CHICAGO.

Some Excellent Manifestations Through His Mediumship.

Farmer Riley, the materializing medium, is in Chicago again and has been giving a series of seances at the homes of different friends in the city. An interesting one was held at the Rembrandt Studio last Tuesday, a number of the company being witnesses of his phenomena for the first time. The forms that appeared were strong, perfectly developed in figure and feature, differing widely one from the other, in size, build, dress and general appearance. Seven of the forms dematerialized in view of the circle at the curtain.

At intervals, vigorous writing was heard on slates left in the small, dark room used as a cabinet. They were handed out by a spirit to the one in the circle for whom they were intended. The messages, on being compared, showed a variety of hand-writing and gave something of personal interest to the person addressed.

Mr. Riley prefaces his materialization with what he calls a dark-room seance, which is of particular interest to those unfamiliar with this class of phenomena.

The company sat about a table in a darkened room, with hands touching upon the top of the table. Almost instantly touches were felt from spirit hands, sometimes gently and caressingly; again with considerable force, jerking coat collars, plucking the ladies' sleeves and pulling out hair-combs and ornamental bows, sometimes carrying them about touching the hands or faces of the members of the circle before returning them to their original place or depositing them upon the table.

A fur collar worn by one lady was taken from her shoulders, touching the faces of all in the circle, and deposited on the head of one of the gentlemen. A fancy pillow was carried about in the same way, as was also a bunch of violets taken from the dress of a lady and passed rapidly under the noses of all present so they could be felt and smelled.

The writer received a fine magnetic treatment in answer to a request. She plainly felt two hands move up and down the spine several times, then pass in front over the lungs, imparting a strength and glowing warmth that was restful and sustaining, and different from the touch of any mortal hand. The table was lifted to a considerable height from our midst and a chair drawn from under one of the ladies and replaced as deftly as possible.

Meanwhile any number of raps were heard on the table, questions answered by them and lights floated about. A trumpet lying in the centre of the table was lifted, carried around the circle, tapping different ones on the head, hands or breast. Numerous raps were heard upon it and the vibrations in it were so plainly felt that it seemed to be a living creature.

Riley sat as one of the circle, his hands being held by those sitting on either side, but there was no shadow of doubt in the minds of those present that the work could be that of any but the invisible but powerful spirit intelligences of his band. What has been told, and more, occupied no more than from fifteen to twenty minutes, and it would have taken many pairs of hands to accomplish what they did simultaneously.

If Robert Hale could witness such exhibitions of power and intelligence as are given in these circles and the full-form materializations that follow, there should be no shadow of doubt left in his, or any reasonable mind, as to the possibility of producing genuine phenomena.

When asked why he did not try for the $1,000 offered, Mr. Riley said he did not like the principle of betting or making a wager on the gifts of the spirit. He had made it a rule during his fifteen years of successful mediumship never to sit for anyone who had made a wager, however small, upon the results to be obtained. He added, "If Mr. Hale wishes to be convinced there are good mediums in the west who can give him genuine materialization, if he wishes to see mine, he can come where I am at much less cost than the amount offered. Should I go there and succeed in convincing him, there would still be the great world of skeptics outside who would be just as incredulous as ever. They would not take his word for what he saw any more than he is now ready to take the testimony of thousands of just as intelligent people as himself, who are thoroughly convinced that genuine spirit forms can be and are being materialized in many seance rooms over the broad land. THERE IS NOT THE LEAST QUESTION THAT MUCH COUNTERFEITING HAS BEEN AND IS NOW BEING DONE AS A MEANS OF REVENUE, but a counterfeit always suggests a genuine somewhere. He can find it for much less than $1,000 if he will seek it conscientiously and with a mind open for truth." AGNES PERRY.

OVER AND OVER.

"Just the same thing over and over!"
But that is the way of the world, my dear;
Over and over, over and over,
Old things repeated from year to year!

Hear what the sun saith: "Patient still,
The vaulted heavens I climb and climb,
Over and over with tireless will,
Day after day till the end of time!

"Never a pause and never a rest;
Yet every morning the earth is new,
And ever the clouds in the golden west
Have a fresh glory shining through."

Hear what the grass saith: "Up the hills
And through the orchards I creep and creep,
Over the meadows and where the rills
Laugh in the shadows cool and deep.

"Every spring it is just the same!
And because it is, I am sure to see
The oriole's flash of vivid flame
In the pink-white bloom of the apple tree."

Hear what dear Love saith: "Oh, I hear
The same old story over and over;
Mother and maiden year by year
Whisper it still to child and lover!

"But sweeter it grows from age to age,
The song begotten so long ago,
When first man came to his heritage,
And walked with God in the even glow."

LAKE HELEN, FLA.

Notes From Southern Cassadaga Camp.

It is almost impossible to keep up with the arrivals as so many come only for a day or two and are off again. Those who visit Florida for the sake of visiting places of interest are placing our winter camp upon the list, and some declare their intention of spending the season here another year.

Prof. Peck gave his last lecture for the season on Tuesday. Subject, "The casting out of the unclean spirit and the coming of seven others more unclean than the first. The lesson to be learned was the emptiness of life and the necessity of something to take the place in every swept and garnished soul. Do not tear down without rebuilding. Prof Peck stayed over a day to take charge of another entertainment for the benefit of the association, and although there was but little time for practice, the Wednesday evening entertainment was a very enjoyable affair. Prof. Peck has been ably seconded in all his efforts for the betterment of the camp, and some who have never stood before the footlights before deserve praise for courage and helpfulness.

Mrs. Coffman gave the seance on Wednesday afternoon for the Ladies' Auxiliary, and Thursday spoke from the subject, "Give ye what ye have," and spoke especially of sympathy and inspiration. She followed her address with tests; she has several phases, but the blindfolded ballot test seances seem to be the favorite although the writer feels her little Indian guide gets very near the hearts of those who are fortunate enough to secure a message from her.

W. J. Colville was gladly welcomed upon his return from Jacksonville and Saturday afternoon gave a most instructive lecture from the subject: What has Spiritualism to offer in the place of other beliefs? What does it demand of us? and what is its future?" His address fully answered the queries, and was clothed in the most beautiful language and abounded in good common sense.

Sunday morning Mrs. Coffman spoke upon the Spiritual Manifestations of the Past and Present, and declared that present phenomena gave us faith in the history of the past, and because these things do occur now they are only repetition of what has been, for the law is always the same.

Sunday afternoon Mr. Colville sang with great power, "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," and followed the song with an address upon the following subject: What is the essential difference between Spiritualism and Christianity; another, Between Spiritualism and Buddhism; another, Between Spiritualism and Theosophy? He said the different subjects might be blended into one universal religion. He spoke of the inconsistency of any religion that would shut up all its good spirits in some far-away heaven, and leave the doors of hell wide open for devils to swarm at pleasure and psychologize the sensitives of earth, he felt the doctrine pernicious that would give such power to evil and limit the divine in the human. Mrs. Coffman followed his lecture with a seance.

The masquerade ball on Tuesday eve would do credit to a city gathering; although crowded, all was orderly and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The beautiful silk quilt was drawn by Mrs. C. C. Bacon, of Lake Brady, Ohio, and all rejoiced that our honored friend received it; while the writer was very glad to be the possessor of a very beautiful pillow made and donated to the society by Mrs. Haviland, of Marshalltown, Iowa.

Mr. Colville's classes begin Monday morning at 10 o'clock; and continue every week day until the close of the camp.

Two very enjoyable evenings (Saturday and Sunday) have been spent in the dedication of the cottages of President Bond and Vice-president Hilligoss.

Saturday evening, although it had rained all day, found the Bond cottage full, even the porches being occupied. People came from DeLand and Lake Helen and contributions of flowers and fruits were many and most artistically arranged by Mrs. Bond and her daughter, Mrs. Maynard Bond. Dr. Hilligoss was chairman of the evening, and after the song "America," introduced the following friends who voiced words of appreciation for their honored host and hostess and congratulations that in their Southern home they had not only the respect and love of those by whom they were surrounded, but were fortunate enough to have their children near them, as three boys (or men) are here and Eva, their arisen daughter is their watcher and helper. The speakers were Mrs. Coffman, Mrs. Twing, Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. McDonald, Mr. Conant and Dr. Joseph Sherman. Mr. Colville then gave a most beautiful address and ended in poetic language by naming the cottage Rainbow Villa.

Delicious refreshments were served, and then all repaired to the Pavilion where a band from DeLand awaited them, and those who desired spent some time in the merry dance. President Bond and wife and most of the elderly people joining in.

Sunday evening a large number gathered at the cottage of Dr. Hilligoss and wife when a like service was observed, barring out the last part. Their cottage is very beautifully finished and furnished, and roomy, and was packed with friends who wished to do honor to them. President Bond presided and introduced Mrs. Twing, and read regrets from Mrs. Coffman at her inability to be there, and congratulations for the occasion; then Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. Conant, Mr. Hopkins, Mrs. McDonald and as the evening before, Mr. Colville spoke, and named the cottage "Spruce Pine Villa." Vice-president Hilligoss responded most feelingly, as did President Bond upon the previous eve.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Kellogg have the sympathy of all; they have received news of their son Burt passing away suddenly at his Grandfather Kellogg's, in Cleveland, Ohio, March 4. Owing to Mr. Kellogg's poor health they will remain here until it is a little warmer north. CARRIE E. S. TWING.

IMPORTANT REFLECTIONS.

In Reverence to Spirit Life and the Destiny of Man.

For the sake of witnessing to that which to me is realized truth, I will lay aside feelings that would hinder me from making known personal experiences of the most sacred character, and I will express what the spirit world has taught me relative to reincarnation.

Desiring truth for its own sake, I gave up, some ten years ago, the pursuits of earthly pleasures, and by living a life of spiritual devotion I strove to lift myself above the passionate and selfish elements of mortal existence in order to become attuned to the higher realms of spirit life, and in order to live in close communion with mighty souls of wisdom and love who live beyond the confines of falsehood and error. I felt that the spiritual nature must be attuned to universal love and to purity of thought and affection, like that of the more developed souls, if it would seek to know the companionship of beings living on the higher planes. After five years of devotion to my ideal of spiritual development I began to be conscious of the spirit side of life. While my body slept I would function consciously as a spirit in the spirit world. The wonders and glories of the spiritual world began to unfold more and more, as I learned its laws and worked to heal and uplift spirits coming from earth life. I became acquainted with angelic beings of great power and wisdom, called Masters in the spirit world, who I learned had been drawing me toward the higher life and who were helping me to awaken and develop my soul powers.

Then I realized that I as a soul had known and been associated with those beings for ages; that the consciousness of my personality was but a very small part of the consciousness possessed by the soul; that during a period of 2,500 years my soul had entered into birth as a mortal personality six times, for the sake of bringing truth to humanity, and in each one of these incarnations had the aid and co-operation of these Masters; that by so doing the soul, which is a germ of Divinity, has been developing its spiritual muscles and bringing into expression on the lowest plane powers of will and love that will ultimately give it the degree of Mastery as an archangel of God, an executor of the will of the eternal Father. Oh, the glories of this blending of mortal with immortal nature no pen of mortal can describe; my spirit is never clouded by the spirit of earth, because the light of the Father-Mother God fills my soul and mind with ineffable joy.

Now for five years I have been living this double existence of spirit and mortal, healing and teaching on both planes, and during this time I have found the motive of these Masters to be so noble and so pure, and their insight into the mighty workings of the spirit of God so profound, and their advice and guidance so valuable on all planes that I place their teachings in a very exalted position, and when I find another teaching that contradicts what they have taught me and demonstrated to me while I have been in the spirit state, I naturally begin to question in order that I may see if there are any defects in the doctrine as it has been revealed to me, because truth only is valuable. An error, no matter how beautiful it may appear, is useless to humanity.

There are so great a number of ways of development of individual spirits and so many different temperaments and needs on the part of progressing spirits, that we cannot lay down a rule which shall be the way every spirit shall progress. Souls have free will and according to their will and desire will they seek to progress. The spirit of God is liberty to all souls and allows each and every one to seek his own method of expression, thus giving birth to infinite variety. If a soul seeks to incarnate once or a dozen times, that is his privilege, for through what he desires to do will his own natural progression take place. Freedom is a mighty principle in all planes of existence. But because one soul finds growth and power by reincarnating does not prove that all shall be under the necessity of reincarnating. The ancient Hindus saw the truth of reincarnation in a narrow way, and then turned their metaphysical minds to evolving a theory based on isolated cases, and from their mortal concept came the dogma of reincarnation; from their belief in the need of an avenging justice, they evolved the doctrine of Karma.

It has been stated by an opponent of reincarnation that "the life, which is (not) the soul, exists within the germ previous to its entering the egg; that the mother has nothing at all to do with creating the life principle; she merely sustains and cherishes a life or soul while it is developing enough to enter the outer world; that life which is the soul or the germ of a soul lived and existed within the blood of the male parent, and the male parent breathed it in from the ethereal atmosphere." This approximates the truth as it has been shown to me, except that I would use the word personality for soul, and state that the female egg fertilized by the male germ has as much influence in the making of a personality as the male principle; that the male and female mental attributes are blended into the creation of a new personality. And the mother has an incalculable influence over the forming personality during the period of gestation.

Again I quote: "After development and growth, also after birth, the germ can no more go back and become a germ again than a chick can go back into its shell. Nothing goes backward. All things go forward, and thus, reincarnation is an utter impossibility."

It is not stated, so far as I know, that the personalty evolved from the germ goes back into a germ again. The process as it has been shown to me by the Masters is like this: The personality created by the parents is in the image and likeness of the mortal parents, partaking of their mental powers and attributes, and if there were no additional power given to the personality it would never transcend the limitations of its parents' mind. But this personal mind draws to itself an evolved soul from the spiritual world, which becomes attached to the forming personality at the time of quickening, and according to its evolved power, whether strong or weak, musical or mechanical, refined or material, determines in a large measure in what direction the personality shall be different from its parents. It is limited in many respects by the laws of mortal heredity, unless its personality learns of the spiritual potencies within its own being and develops them to the overcoming of the mortal limitations. This evolved entity that reincarnates holds within itself the potencies of the highest state that it has polarized from, within it is the image and likeness of Divinity, and in its upward progression this golden germ of God-power will eventually gain the ascendency over all the attributes accumulated from mortal experience, and subordinate them to its wise purpose.

For the sake of clearness I will use a personal illustration: My personality is not a reincarnation; it came from mortal parents. I as a personality did not exist previous to my physical conception; and the personality and soul that reincarnated in this form did not become limited in consciousness to the limitations of my personal mind. He, my higher self, holds in his consciousness all the knowledge he has gained through a long past of mortal and spiritual experience, and when I am free at night from the limitations of this mortal brain my consciousness is blended with his (my soul) and we are one. And if after years in the spirit world should again desire to take up a physical body as an instrument for physical expression, I would not lose my present consciousness thereby, but I would be bound to remain in connection with that body during its life time, and as far as physical expression goes, I would be limited by the thoughts and feelings of that personality; but my own consciousness could still communicate with the angelic world, and in a large degree retain connection with its light and wisdom, and this accumulated wisdom would be the voice of intuition to my personality.

Those who would ridicule the truth of reincarnation hold before us the idea of an intelligent spirit going back into a Hottentot, an Esquimaux, an African or an animal in order to show the absurdity of the doctrine of reincarnation. Their ridicule is all very well, if directed against the old Hindu theories of reincarnation and karma which have been galvanized into life by the spiritual wave of the present time. It is not taught from the spiritual world at the present time that man re-enters the animal form or even seeks reincarnation in a form below his last incarnation. It would be contrary to reason and spiritual attraction for an intelligent spirit to even associate with the lower races of humanity, much less incarnate among them, unless he felt led to become a savior to them and could find no other way.

My teachers are all Hindus, but they do not teach truth as it is taught among the Hindus on the earth plane; to them the ancient teachings of transmigration, karma and asceticism are but grotesque images of truth evolved from mortal ignorance.

But this subject is too large for one article. I shall contribute more of my experience in a future article if it is acceptable to the editor of this paper.

LETTERS FROM SPIRIT-LIFE.

Lincoln and Washington Send Messages of Good Will.

My good friends, with joy do I greet you once more. I wish to say to you, that my spirit message, which was so well received by my earth friends, the publication of which made many hearts rejoice in both worlds, for the opening wide of this door between the seen and the unseen, allowing the easy passage of the denizens of the spirit world to their friends upon the earth plane, is much appreciated and enjoyed. And when you find a psychic, whose unfoldment is capable of sensing our near presence, and of giving utterance to our thoughts, it is both a blessed joy and privilege to return to earth, and to enter the presence of such a gifted soul.

My few words of address to night are for two reasons: First, to express my gratitude and appreciation of this delightful method to control, and, second, to introduce to you my friend, the noble spirit of my friend and co-worker, George Washington, who accompanied me here to-night. He will try to say a few words to you, and if your time is not too limited, he may succeed in giving a message to the world. I desire greatly to repeat the pleasure of my former attempt, when you can spare me for that purpose, some of your valuable time and vitality. The good old song of "Auld Lang Syne," my dear lady, you played at the request of my friend, George Washington, and you had many spirit listeners to your sweet music. Ah! you live very near the spirit world and have many unseen visitors every day in your quiet home. Now I will withdraw, and give place to my friend.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

A Communication from George Washington.

This is indeed a great pleasure, and a wonderful privilege to return once more to this little planet, called earth, where I once resided in a fleshly form, and lived my allotted time, till my life-work was complete. I repeat, my friends, these words, the privilege is great, and the pleasure is keen, to return once more to earth, and to voice my thoughts through the receptive brain of this psychic, with whose organism I can come in close rapport. Not a ripple mars the perfect harmony which I find in the peaceful atmosphere of this quiet seance room, every thought-wave whose vibrations I sense is full of peace and love for all humanity. Now that I have gained such perfect control, may I be allowed to still further tax the time and vitality of this sensitive, and send a message forth to the children of earth, replete with the ripened experience of my many years of progressive life in the spirit land? With many thanks for the courtesy, I will now address the general public through your organism.

A Message to Earth, from the Arisen Spirit of George Washington.

Though many long years have passed upon the earth plane since I enjoyed a residence among you all, think not for one moment, ye dwellers in the terrestrial world, that I have ceased to regard with interest, your plane of material existence. Deem it not impossible or extraordinary that I have been an active and useful guardian and protector of all the interests of Humanity and helped to guide and direct the many important phases of your spiritual growth and unfoldment. From this side, the realm of causes, the true Home of the Soul, I have given my aid in the formation, development and progression of the laws of the many material forces needed for the enlightenment of humanity. The honor given me by the children of earth since my departure to the higher life, the appellation, "Father of His Country," I truly appreciate and endeavor now to truly deserve that beautiful tribute by my earnest, active work here in the spirit spheres, in the protecting love and watchful care I am constantly sending back to the children of earth. Ah! how clearly from my home above, do I see the need of earth people for the protection of a father's loving care! The Infinite Father of all the Universe doth choose from his loving family of progressive, aspiring souls in these higher spirit spheres, certain fitting, developed spirits, as instruments of His Power, to guide and influence the loving children on the earth plane.

Many inspired teachers, the poets, philosophers, sages, and those who, in their humble walks of life, live the pure Christ life, are the chosen ones of the Infinite Father, as they do their appointed work nobly, and live the true, unselfish life of the Spirit, they unconsciously shed a radiance over the undeveloped portion of humanity, and bless and purify all souls who recognize their true worth and useful lives.

There are those upon earth who truly live the Christ life, and they are the chosen teachers to whom the wonderful medium, Christ himself, from his high place in the heavens above, sends down to them loving waves of thought force, which purify and strengthen them for their chosen work. With what different views I now regard religion upon earth. My broader vision, my enlarged field of labor enables my spirit eyes to pierce the deep mists of superstition and ignorance, which have so long enveloped the world in darkness. Some of the grandest truths are the simplest, and easiest understood. "Except ye be as little children, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." The simplicity of life is one of its greatest charms, when rightly understood. There are many souls upon the earth plane who are living truly the life of the spirit, and who have reached to the heart of things, and found the pearl of great price. Religion, to all such souls, is in daily living a pure, unselfish life, in "doing unto others as you would have others do unto you." Their daily lives are earnest prayers, whose incense ascends to heaven above, and adds constantly to the glorious beauty of the spirit land. In the world of politics, when true religion shall sweeten and purify the lives of those who actively engage in its engrossing pursuits, when treachery will give place to honest dealings with one's fellow-men, when ambition will give place to the highest, noblest aspiration, when honor will be given to the truest and noblest men who are endowed by nature with the best gifts, which make them the right men for the right place, the men best fitted to fill the presidential chair, and the same rigid rule be applied to others who seek high offices, then your country will be ruled aright.

Improvement is needed everywhere, in everything concerning the interests of earth. Better men, better laws, purer motives, nobler zeal, and active, unflagging work in every direction is necessary for the uplifting and betterment of humanity.

But the spirit world both sees and understands the needs of humanity. Our annual spiritual convention forms the laws, guides the affairs, and superintends generally, all the important affairs on the earth plane.

But I hear you say, "Why, then, are they so faulty? Why this discord, this seemingly backward road of retrogression? Why so much warfare, and such a general disturbance over the whole globe?"

Ah! my many earnest inquirers, your earth vision is necessarily limited and narrow, which causes you to ask such a question. It is good and necessary for humanity to pass through these eras of conflict.

Without a struggle, there could be no growth. Without these dissensions and conflictions in human life, there would be nothing gained, no victory won. Otherwise, all would be stagnation, death. In your manly, heroic efforts to gain freedom, liberty, the world is growing stronger, better, more spiritual, and you are fast nearing a new dispensation, when the light of a true and broader religion will so brighten with its radiance the whole world, when warfare will cease, and peace will reign, for spiritualized man will have climbed to the glorious heights of unselfish love and purity, and the "New Kingdom" will be received with acclamations of joy by the children of earth, who will then realize more fully the perfect love and goodness of the Infinite Father of all.

Millions of arisen spirits are eagerly watching with joyful pride, the spiritual unfoldment and purification of humanity. The two worlds are so closely blended that it is as one, and daily, hourly, are they coming nearer and nearer together, so closely entwined that the thoughts from either side will be heard as clear as our audible tones at present. The day will come yet upon the earthplane, when spirits will become visible to the mortal eyes as a daily, common occurrence. Oh! ye denizens of earth, receive and accept my message as a prophetic utterance, from the ripened spirit of the "Father of His Country."

STOMACH TROUBLES CURED

If you suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubarb Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a full two weeks' treatment to any sufferer desiring to give it a trial. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you? It Is Free. THE GOLDEN RULE.

It Expresses a Fallacy in Diction.

"The science of logic reduces sound reasoning to certain rules, and when any of these rules is violated, a logical fallacy is the result."

"The corrupting influences of superstition and theology are powerful to arrest development."

"They mistake the point, who, in dispute, try to prove what the opponent does not deny."

Taking no thought for to-morrow has blighted the minds of millions.

Judge not, lest ye be judged, means judge not at all.

Read by the spirit and not by the letter, applies equally to the learned and the unlearned, the old and the young, the wise and the foolish.

Do unto others as you would have others do unto you, constitutes you the judge of the wants of all the others, compels you to treat the sensible and fanciful, grave and gay, preacher and player alike, because you are free to indulge your wants separately and singly, without regard to age, sex or condition. You not only ignore others' feelings, but it forces you to do so. If your wants are the opposite of the wants of others, no matter.

There are circumstances where the Golden Rule is beautifully applied. In cases of distress, and help is given, it is noble; but the Rule Golden is unqualified, is without limitations or boundaries, is expressed in the broadest sense. Under it, little children have the right to do anything to you that they would have you do to them. The foolish, ditto. How often we hear the expression, "He is his own worst enemy." He is still free to offend and insult others because he is only doing what he wants them to do to him.

"There are natural prejudices or strong emotions and passions of mind, which forcibly pervert the intellectual views."

Brother N. B. Freeland, in No. 738, The Progressive Thinker, says: "If a criminal, being tried before a jury, was shown to be of exceptionally bloody cruelty, and beastly heartlessness, the Golden Rule would compel every juror to acquit him, because every juror would wish the defendant to do the same to him, regardless of the question of guilt or innocence. It would compel the acquittal of every criminal placed on trial." There will still be those that "have eyes to see and see not."

Brother J. Rigdon, in No. 737, The Progressive Thinker, intimates that I lack spiritual mindedness. The Pope is superlatively spiritual minded. The Jesuits fall next into line. Those of least sense use the term most flippantly. The term is vague at the best. If the term is used in the sense of fineness, one may have a fine mind and lack both good sense and sound reason.

Dr. J. H. Randall, in No. 739, The Progressive Thinker, says he "believes sound argument can be adduced showing Mr. Baldwin's position untenable, and that he is in error." Then follows an extended address, without a word taking up my reasoning and trying to prove it erroneous. Forty-nine-fiftieths of the address is what I do not deny. Had he named the address, Progress of Evolution and Developing Socialism, instead of the Golden Rule, it would be masterly and profound. I will extend my reasoning. Formerly the Doctor was a medium and an enthusiastic Spiritualist. Then he urged others to investigate Spiritualism. He is changed now. He has organized a "Church of the Golden Rule," with the motto, "One world at a time." To be consistent and practice the Golden Rule, he will advise all the Spiritualists to wash their hands of it; advise the heathen to give it a wide berth, and advise everybody to shun the Spiritualist papers as they would so much poison.

In the same issue of The Progressive Thinker, Brother Wm. H. Rogers says: I am "wanting in those qualities which are found in the man living the true godly life." As he fails to explain that I may know what he means by a godly life, I cannot deny the charge. I have worked for open Spiritualism. He hides behind a closed door order, with a Christian name. If that is godliness, I yield the holy palm to him. He says 'He organized and helped to carry into practical operation the Order of the Golden Rule at Madison, Wisconsin.' It is a secret one, after the manner of the Masons, only very much milder. A mild initiation is required. Without such initiation not a man of the great outside public can have a ray of its light. On page 4 of the constitution it reads: "We believe Spiritualism is true; that there is no death, and to promulgate the doctrine of Spiritualism do adopt the following constitution." On page 12, the By-Laws say: "Any person shall be eligible to active membership into the order who shall signify his or her belief in the doctrine of the Golden Rule, and who shall evince an earnest desire to carry out the principles for which this order is formed." As has been seen, the order is formed to promulgate Spiritualism. Before a stranger to Spiritualism has the least chance to investigate it, he must swear to promulgate it. It is a psychological crime against nearly all of the mortal world, and the entire spirit world. No one that reads the constitution critically, before joining, and who is not already a Spiritualist, could think for a moment of going in. I think Bro. R. would not now be a Spiritualist had there been no other avenue to Spiritualism than through the mystic portals of his order.

Ostensibly Brother Rogers' "Order of the Golden Rule" is to promote Spiritualism. Really it is an obstacle to its expansion. He is a truly godly man.

A Prominent Spiritualist Passed to Spirit Life.

On the 8th of February, 1904, Gilbert Sherman passed from his cozy home in Coldwater, Mich., to the life beyond. He came to this world April 15, 1814, in Wayne county, New York, and at the time of his death had nearly reached his 90th birthday.

Born in the cabin of the pioneer, his young life environed by wind, wave and stately forest, he grew to early and vigorous manhood. At 20 years of age he emigrated to Michigan, then a territory, and began the battle of life in the wilderness. His untiring industry, frugal habits, large moral and intellectual endowment, brought to him rapid success. He later emigrated to Indiana, and then to Missouri, where he carried forward extensive business operations and held many offices of public trust, which he discharged with the utmost fidelity. His first wife having died in 1869, he married Miss Mary C. Disler, and moved from Missouri back to Coldwater, Mich., where they lived to the date of his death.

Gilbert Sherman was a strong and commanding figure, intelligent, honest, temperate and industrious. His creed in all the daily walks of life was absolute justice to all; his religion, to be good and to do good. Men trusted him and believed in him because he was honest and sincere in his conviction.

He was an ardent Spiritualist. Death to him was simply transition to a higher life. Long and patiently did he wait for the hour of his deliverance. His passing takes from this world a strong character who lived to work and mold the best part of the last century, and witness the birth of the new.

His funeral services were conducted by the Odd Fellows of which order he was a member, and Hon. A. A. Milines delivered an eloquest and touching address.

Your Contribution

To the Mediums' Fund in the N. S. A. Treasury, be it large or small, will do more good than a donation to any other fund upon the books of the Association. Every medium, every speaker, and in fact every man and woman who loves the cause of Spiritualism should swell this fund with their gift. The appeal of Mrs. Longley is just and timely. If our cause is worth sustaining these dear old pioneer workers who have become invalids at their posts are worthy of our sweetest kindness and tenderest care. Let us help our helpless mediums, and prevent their dependence upon the common charity of a cold and prejudiced world. Send your contributions to Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., 600 Pa. Ave. S. E., Washington, D. C., and do not delay.

☞ It ought to be a pleasant duty to care for those whose lives have been sacrificed upon the altar of a truth as palpable as is that of the eternal truth of Spiritualism. It is a shame to have to acknowledge the neglect of this duty by begging for their support when afflicted.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

At Pennville, Ind., on the morning of Feb. 26, 1904, the silent messenger came as a blessed angel of release to Charles H. Rose, aged 55 years. For the past year he had been a sufferer of several paralytic strokes. He leaves a wife and three little girls. He was a kind husband and father, and a firm believer in Spiritualism. Funeral services held at the late residence, conducted by Mrs. Elmira Jones.

A FRIEND.

Beulah Marie, the infant daughter of Mr. George Newcomer and wife, passed to spirit life, Feb. 29, 1904. The services were conducted by Rev. L. M. Oles, of the Psychic Research Society of Allegheny, Pa. L. M. OLES, JR.

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. L. A. Barr, Lyon Sta., Pa., on Sunday, Feb. 28. This estimable woman was greatly afflicted with bodily suffering. Her freedom from pain and entering into the bliss of spirit life, life forever with the waiting dear ones, was an occasion of more joy than sorrow to the ones left on this earth sphere. Mrs. Barr repeatedly said her last years were her happiest. She attributed the cause to her knowledge and acceptance of Spiritualism. Circumstances did not permit her knowledge of the phenomena, but in its philosophy she was very happy. Her friends here and there rejoice with her. MRS. KATE WEAVER.

Mrs. Margaret Vickers Murray entered spirit life, March 1, 1904, from her home near Calamine, Wisconsin. She was was a confirmed Spiritualist of over forty years, being one of the pioneer Spiritualists of Southwestern Wisconsin. She was a lovely type of womanhood, broadly liberal. She was mediumistic and ever willing to teach those desiring a better knowledge of the philosophy she loved so well. Services were conducted at her home, Botany Cottage, and at Union Grove Cemetery, March 3, 1904, by the Rev. T. H. Gilbert, curate of the Episcopal church.

CORA R. MURRAY.

Sunday morning, March 6, Mrs. Jennie Norris Taft, of Ashtabula, passed peacefully to the higher life, at her home in Saybrook, a suburb of Ashtabula. The funeral services were conducted on March 8, by Rev. Elizabeth Schauss, of Toledo, Ohio, and the remains were placed in the family burying plot at Saybrook. Sister Taft previous to her becoming a Spiritualist had for many years been a faithful church-worker, but when the moment of trial came the old belief could not stand the test; it had no consolation to offer that could give enduring comfort, and so it was that she was led into the investigation of Spiritualism, and had for many years enjoyed the unspeakable peace and comfort that comes from the understanding of its beautiful truths.

INTRICATE DESTINY.

The Wonder Puzzle of Existence.

The unanswered puzzle of existence is the culmination of all human thought. The fearless thinker will inquire: from whence? to where? He would question the imperial stars that fleck the dome of heaven and glow silent through the night; then returning to himself, with awe realize how impervious is the shadow that surrounds the question of destiny. Man came because he could not help coming. But that is no argument. The same can be said of a dog or a horse. All are creatures of circumstance. All are here not because of any previous individual desire to be, but in consequence of the propelling drift of correlated events. They are helpless to come as they are to go. Each entity comes out of the depths with conscious surprise at its own presence, and recognizing its helplessness to shape its course or choose its being. It lives in a fortuitous relation to the time and events into which it has been projected—a wondering and dazed personality, unable to fathom the beginning of its course or penetrate the vail that conceals the mystery of future time.

Paine, from the other life, recently said to Mr. Burr, "I know that I am here and that I exist. I am not certain that I shall always do so." Faraday says in one of his communicated pamphlets, "there are here persons who left the earth life thousands of years ago. Nor can we ascertain that any soul has ever become extinct. But this is speaking for a very narrow margin. Thousands of years is not for ever. But from analogy we can believe that if in time the soul should wear out, its extinction will not be by any sudden collapse. The factors that combined to raise it into an independent existence required millions of years of transmutation and active construction to produce that result, and the effect from dead matter is so confirmed and prodigious that the waning to unconscious nothingness will be by slow and very prolonged decline. We need not dread or mourn over it, for if it is to be so it will be as inevitable as that our jet locks turn white with age."

Nowhere does nature halt and make a final rest. The order of the universe is change. Some vaunting soul may aver progression. But we have not seen enough to know if that boast can hold fact. Our knowledge would have to be omniscient to maintain that view. But change is constant and everywhere endures. Slow or swift, broad or deep, it permeates all things, everywhere operates, and reigns supreme. It is illogical to believe that it will not affect the soul after it has thrown off its material covering. We cannot conceive of thought as unassociated with motion and motion involves change. What the nature of the discarnate changes may be ultimately, we cannot conjecture..

If the soul had its origin in fortuitous relations, it is none the less precious on that account. That it has always existed as some theorists recently declare, is to me an unthinkable proposition. They further assert, that if this be not the case, if it had a beginning, it must necessarily have an end, and because of such reasoning they assert it had no beginning but always existed. There is no reasonable basis for such a belief; for no one knows by speculation if this necessarily follows. No one knows by what law a decarnated soul survives one hour. We know by frequent demonstration that a soul does maintain a continued intelligent personality, but the requirements of prolonged existence we are ignorant of. But if such life can be maintained for years, why not for an indefinite period longer? To begin with, we have no evidence whatever that we had an existence through all the past. If it were so we do not in any manner realize it, which is equivalent to not being at all; and that of which we have no knowledge whatever, has no existence for us. Every soul has a birth or starting point; every life in fact from fish to man, or from bug to bird. For every living thing is the culmination of desire and love. The commingling of the electric pulse of sex marks a new era in the universe; for it is the birth of a new individuality; a consummation that nature glories in. C. H. M.

IDEAL AND REAL.

Comparisons Between the Ideal Life, and the Real.

It is a grand thing to have an ideal, a vision of possible attainments; to realize that there is something superior to the present condition of life, and that it is possible to attain unto that advanced state. Without the incentive that comes from catching a glimpse of that idealistic life, existence would hardly be desirable. As we move along life's journey the gradual unfoldment of that superior state is an encouragement to advance; there is not enough revealed to dazzle and bewilder us with its glories, for that would nullify if not actually destroy the inspiration that is needed for advancement.

But after all in our efforts to solve the intricate and perplexing problems of life we have to come back to the solid ground of reality and deal with them as they actually exist. The parent or teacher, however anxious they may be to have their child or pupil receive instruction and become a proficient scholar in the higher branches, knows that while its mental development is only adapted to kindergarten instruction, it would be folly to undertake it on more advanced lines.

Life has not developed up to its present state by a few convulsive efforts, but through the slow and many times painful process of evolutionary growth. The hardened crust of old conditions was not easily burst asunder, giving the soul a greater freedom than it formerly enjoyed, but energy was needed, and of that kind which intelligently understood what was needed, and realized the strength of the forces that were arrayed in opposition to the ideal which was to be attained.

In the political, social and religious struggles that were needed to lift humanity out of its lower levels, on to a higher plane of life, this fact had to be kept in mind, that while the vision was idealistic, to be successful in attaining unto that state, human society must be ready to deal with the actual, according to its present state of development.

When our Revolutionary forefathers, inspired by the high ideal that was presented to them in their announcing the truth that all are created equal as far as the right to life, liberty and happiness, knowing that that announcement was in antagonism to the established systems, and in the face of the arrogance and assumption of special privileges by the British government, would it have been doing justice to the cause of human liberty and right, according to the highest conception of the moral law, if they in their anxiety for peace had submitted to the aggressive tyranny of the British government? That it would not have been right will be apparent to every one who intelligently studies the law of cause and effect. However high their ideal, there was the actual, and the problem had to be solved; and sentimental ideas of what mankind should be in their dealings with each other could not bring the needed solution. It had to be solved according to the present development of life.

The ideal in time becomes the reality, and moving on before as a pillar of light it is leading life upward to higher planes of existence. It must always be something superior to the real or it ceases to become idealistic. It is not the idealists that are the dreamers; they are the most practical and potent forces in the advancement of life. The dreamer is lacking the inspiration of idealism, and contented with the antiquated systems, has no desire to change, supposing that perfection has been attained; but not so, when one height has been scaled there appears others in advance. This is eternal progression, to realize the fact that we never will arive at that spot where life will cease to unfold to us greater beauty and glory.

Human history is replete with instances where individuals have felt the inspiration of a great ideal, and under the leadership of those souls who were dominated by those advanced thoughts, human life in its political, social and religious phases was lifted up to a higher level. They were the explorers whose mission it was to open up what to the vast majority of human life was a misty shadowland, and was not to be explored. The possible is steadily encroaching on the impossible, a broadening of the boundary lines of human understanding and power, and placing human life where it rightfully belongs, where it can have more perfect dominion over the forces of nature to which it is now subject.

THE PILGRIM.

Dr. J. M. Peebles Scintillates at San Diego, California.

DR PEEBLES' DEDICATION ADDRESS AT THE OPENING OF THE SPIRITUALIST TEMPLE.

"How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of Hosts!" exclaimed the inspired psalmist. And how beautiful is this new temple, conceived in the higher life, materialized by human hands and now being dedicated to the worship of God—dedicated to the mental, moral and religious unfoldment of the soul—dedicated to the dissemination of that spiritual truth which demonstrates a future existence, describes the encircling spheres of the after life, comforts and brushes away the mourners' tears, seeks to hasten the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven and breathes the spirit of peace on earth and good will towards men.

Spiritualism is the direct antithesis of materialism. The materialist strives to account for this magnificent universe through the interaction of matter and force—nothing more. The Spiritualist accounts for this living throbbing universe of life, love, and order, with its thronging intelligences through spirit, essential, immutable, infinite—in a word, God, who is the embodiment of consciousness, life, love, purpose and will.

"PNEUMA HO THEOS"—"Spirit is God," said Jesus, and they that worship him in spirit and in truth, God being spirit, and man being made evolved in the image of God (which image is consciousness, life and intelligence) he is necessarily a spiritual being.

And it is just as natural for spiritual beings in all worlds, visible and invisible, to sympathize and consciously respond soul to soul, as it is for music to respond to music, or love to the divine principle of love. This is the basic foundation of Spiritualism, centering, you see, in God, and by reflection the moral constitution of man. Its phenomena are the scaffoldings useful in the building of the temple, useful to convince such materialists as Prof. Haso, Judge Edmonds, Robert Dale Owen and others to a knowledge of future existence; useful to bring messages from the loved ones whose white feet press the evergreen shores of immortality.

God has never left the world without Bibles, angel ministries, and spiritual marvels as witnesses to a future existence. Our Old and New Testaments abound in prophecies, visions, trances, and using Paul's words, "the discerning of spirits." If neither God nor his love have changed, why should not these manifestations occur now? Did not Jesus say, "These signs shall follow them that believe," and "greater works than these shall ye do."

The chain of spirit ministries is complete from Isaiah to Socrates, from Socrates to Jesus, from Jesus to Joan of Arc, from Joan of Arc to the Wesleys, from the Wesleys to the Fox family (a family of Methodists in Hydesville, N. Y.). These ministries called "Modern Spiritualism," are not new. Dr. Adam Clarke, the great Methodist Commentator, in commenting upon Saul and Samuel, said: "I believe there is a supernatural and a spiritual world in which human spirits both good and bad live in a state of consciousness. I believe that any of these spirits may, according to the order of God, in the laws of their place of residence have intercourse with this world and become visible to mortals."

The most distinguished souls of the past and the brainiest men of the present believe in an intercommunion between the world's visible and invisible. Personally I have sat in the seance room with Judge Edmonds of New York, Sir Wm. Crookes of London, Leon Favre, the Consul General of France, Victor Hugo and others illustrious in science and literature.

THERE IS A COUNTERFEIT—A VULGAR AUTHENTIC SPIRITISM—AKIN TO OLD TESTAMENT NECROMANCY THAT DIVINES FOR GUINEAS, HUNTS FOR COAL MINES AND SCHEMES FOR PELF AND OCCULT POWER TO COMPASS SELFISH ENDS. WITH THIS I HAVE NO SYMPATHY. IT IS THE OPEN GATE TO OBSESSIONS AND DEMONIAC INFLUENCES.

True Spiritualism rightly and religiously interpreted—I speak for myself only—is in perfect consonance with the Christianity of Christ. It is in spirit catholic rather than iconoclastic—constructive rather than destructive. It seeks to build up no new and narrow sect. It would padlock no conscientious lips. It would establish no iron-clad creed, Roman or Calvinistic; it would ruthlessly demolish no cathedral, nor would it do violence to any man's deep religious connections. These are now, as in apostolic times, "diversities of gifts." Each should be fully persuaded in his own mind; feeling that we are brothers all, and that love, love to God and love to man, are greater, according to Paul, than faith or hope.

This twentieth century is one of mighty opportunities. Research, evolution, growth is everywhere manifest. Franklin's kitestring was seemingly a small matter, and Newton's falling apple was a smaller one. Joseph's dream of the coming Jesus did not create a ripple upon the Jewish mind, but in less than 300 years it shook imperial Rome to its foundations. Modern Spiritualism, a child of the skies and pronounced over fifty years, a "nine days' wonder," is steadily, rapidly merging into energetic and substantial manhood. It is in this and in foreign lands putting on a rational, religious and regal maturity. It is acknowledged to have become a power. It is a long way on the road from the platform militant to the truth triumphant. No truth ever perished. No true Spiritualist ever recanted. Men outgrow their childhood creeds. Old theologies die; Calvinism is encoffined, awaiting burial, and yet around those shattered vases mosses hang and odors of some lilies cling.

Spiritualism enwraps and encourages all reforms. It teaches that man is a morally responsible being, and having power of choice, he is punishable in the line of cause and effect for his vices, and rewardable for his virtues. Divine punishment is disciplinary. Men as moral agents are the architects of their own fortunes. We make our own heavens and our own hells. The good man ever carries the kingdom of Heaven within him. Christ, the illuminating principle of Jesus, the spirit descending dove, is still preaching to imprisoned spirits. God is infinitely and unchangeably good. The door of mercy is never shut to your guilt. "To your tents then, O Israel." Seance-rooms, O Spiritualists, make the weekly home circle an altar of religious devotion. Let the voice of prayer be there heard. Angels and archangels pray; demons in hades ridicule prayer. Prayer is aspiration, an uplifting of the soul to the good, the true and the Infinite Oversoul, whom the inspired John said is Love.

We are living in exciting, trying times. Wars are raging in the East. Great crises are approaching us, Are we ready? The tares must be burned. The times demand consecrated temples like this we are now dedicating, demand consecrated men and women, consecrated hearts, consecrated wealth, consecrated energies, more and better educated speakers, larger society libraries, more missionary enthusiasm, and more beautiful temples like this over whose doors I would see inscribed in letters of love, "COME IN" Come all ye that labor and are heavy laden! Come ye who are sad and broken-hearted! Come, mourners, and hear messages from the loved that have left the fireside home! Come all ye disheartened and disconsolate and here lay your burdens down! Come, O ye young, while the red is upon the lip, and come, O ye aged, whose white hairs are already silvery with the celestial light of immortality! Come all ye that seek sweet rest and the baptism of the new life! Come! for these temple doors swing outward and swing inward free to all.

Standing half entranced this moment upon the Mount of Vision, adown the ages I see doubt giving place to faith, and faith giving place to knowledge. I see tyranny dying upon the plains of freedom. I see error giving place to truth; vice to virtues; bigotry to tolerance, and grating discords to divinest harmonies. I see rising before me a new heaven and a new earth. I see waxing harvests and the gathering in of golden sheaves. I see consecrated temples like this, in all lands, crowned with the luminous words, UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD AND ETERNAL PROGRESSION, and what is a thousand times more glorious, I see walking in this renewed Eden of peace the living Christ, the Christ of the ages, and I hear the words, "SEEING THE TRAVAIL OF MY SOUL, I AM SATISFIED."

"The golden age lies onward, not behind,
The pathway through the past has led us up.
The pathway through the future will lead on
And higher. We are rising from the beast
Unto the Christ, and human brotherhood."

EVERY DAY.

Every day hath its dawn,
Its soft and silent eve,
Its noontide hours of bliss or bale;
Why should we grieve?

Why do we heap huge mounds of years
Before us and behind,
And scorn the little days that pass
Like angels on the wind?

Each turning round a small sweet face
As beautiful as near;
Because it is so small a face
We will not see it clear.

We will not clasp it as it flies,
And kiss its lips and brow;
We will not bathe our wearied souls
In its delicious Now.

And so it turns from us and goes
Away in sad disdain;
Though we would give our lives for it,
It never comes again.

Yet, every day has its dawn,
Its noontide and its eve;
Live while we live, giving God thanks;
He will not let us grieve.

The only effective criticism of a poor religion is the creation of a better one. I cannot accept the idea of the Bible that is taught by the Catholic church, I cannot accept the idea of the Bible that is taught by the orthodox Protestant church, because I cannot find any adequate reason for accepting the beliefs about it of either.—M. J. Savage.

A NEW GOD.

Errors of Theism—Superiority of Egyptian Deity—Woman Coming to the Front.

Theism in all its ramifications is the greatest impediment to human progression. Its adherents are blinded by creedal errors of idolatrous faith, paralyzed by old-time customs and prejudices, so ingrained in their nature. The religious bigot's idea of religious liberty for religious people, but not for Infidels and Atheists, whose solid facts and sound arguments the myrmidons of error cannot meet and refute.

What can theological teachers know or teach on a subject they admit is unknown and incomprehensible? The wisest god-believers confess this, yet they descant on the subject with vast assumption of knowledge, and make claims that rest upon their own assertions. Their arguments amount to nothing more than wild speculations and conjectures, of imaginary fabrication and the chewing of old theological husks, all in defiance of reason. They talk and write on God's laws, God's will, love, wrath, mercy, omnipresence, omnipotence, etc.—all of which are assumptions and unproven assertions. The human mind is lost in bewilderment and confusion in contemplation of this mass of incomprehensibility, and so it is not surprising that Theism produces insanity.

Theists are divided and sub-divided into hundreds of distinct orders and sects—some believe in one god, some in two and some in three gods, making a unity or duality or trinity, according to their several conceptions of a deity. Others believe in many gods, each possessing distinctive attributes, while another order of Theists teach that god is all things.

The Pantheistic god is the biggest one ever invented—so big that he includes and absorbs all other gods and all things, animate and inanimate, on the face of the earth. This is the highest attainable degree of folly and absurdity in theistic beliefs; yet people believe anything in the name of religion if you tell them they will be damned if they don't.

The Egyptian god, Osiris, Isis and Horus, representing father, mother and child, symbolized by the triangle, is a trinity that approaches some degree of consistency—natural, practical and within the limit of comprehensibility. The Christians in constructing their theology pretended to imitate this trinity with three male persons, "Father, Son and Holy Ghost," which made of it a pitiful farce. The intent was to rule out the woman, for that did not agree with their ideas of a deity. It is true they believe in and recognize "The Mother of God," but she does not belong to "The Holy Trinity." That would spoil it. We are truly glad that the modern woman is getting her eyes opened to see how the christian religion has degraded and enslaved her.

Now, it would be a new idea and enterprising project if a new sect of Theists should spring up to outrival and surpass the three-headed god theory of the trinitarians, by dividing God into four equal parts for a quadruple deity; and call it a quartet, or a quadruped, or a quadruplicate. They they would be prepared to do things on the square; and this would be no more out of order than other things, even more absurd, done in the name of religion.

The question as to whether the new God be male or female or a mixture of the two, could be settled by a Grand Council. They might compete successfully with all the old religious dogmas by putting a woman in it.

Woman is coming to the front admirably in these modern times, and when she gets to the front completely the old vagaries of religion will finally disappear. And this will be a fairer and far better world to live in when she shall freely exercise her natural moral powers for the redemption and salvation of humanity from error, ignorance, superstition.

We have observed that some modern god-believers recognize a wonderful god—noncommittal as to which god it is, yet it is either male or female, or both, or neither to suit the occasion. They show devotion to their ideal deity by retaining all its good qualities, while they reject all its bad attributes, thus making a new god out of the old one. We do not know by what authority or arbitrary rule they thus change the face of Theism, nevertheless, this is a hopeful, encouraging sign of progression.

Theists have no proof of a god, but seek to carry their point by assumption and vehement assertion, working upon the awe, fear, credulity of humanity by threats of dire disaster, punishments and curses for disbelief; and have charged opponents with infidelity, blasphemy, sacrilege.

The rudest fetishism has its fables, and no nearer the truth is the more pretentious. The Christian God is an enlargement of the savage's ideas, the ideal of man from a subjective thought made a personal being. Labored explanations are incomprehensible to man. These views originated when man was a savage—being conclusions from erroneous understanding of nature, matured into dogmas which fetter and pervert the reason.

The god question, in the mystery of its insolvability, has sharpened the sword of antagonism, and what the reason failed to maintain has been contested on the field of battle. The modern mind has, to some extent, broken the shackles of its theology and is free.

I recognize the importance of the revolt from the awful dogma of predestined happiness for the few and damnation for the many. Slowly but surely the dreadful barrier of this old belief is being lifted from the heart of humanity. —Whittier.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MODERN THOUGHT.

"The cuckoo of philosophy has successfully laid her egg in the nest of theology." This statement by a modern writer is suggestive. It presupposes the presence of the principle of life and where a seed is deposited there is the possibility of an unlimited expansion. If I might first be allowed to bow to the clergy so as to bring in the conditions of toleration I would add to the statement by saying, when the young cuckoo grows up there will be no room in the nest for the other broods.

Pointed prophecies with pricks that pierce do more to hinder than hasten promising events. The wise man therefore watches with a keen eye the turn in the wheel of evolution and whatever of prediction is found in his declarations, if rightly understood, will mean help rather than hinderance to those even who are the most conservative and faithful in their worship of the antiquated.

A complete or entire egg means a seed-principle. A seed is enveloped in shade; where there is a shadow there is a substance. Substance is but the phenomena of an inner working principle or power; that power is everywhere. IT HAS BEEN STATED THAT IF A TREE SHOULD FALL IN THE FOREST AND THERE WAS NO EAR TO HEAR, THE FALLING OF THE TREE WOULD MAKE NO NOISE OR SOUND.

In the abstract the statement is true, must be true, because noise or sound is the vibration of air on the drum of the ear.

Then again it might be stated that the tree in the forest did not exist, if there was no eye to see it. If it were possible to remove the eye, the tree would still exist as the phenomena of life principle, but as that life is everywhere and cannot be annihilated and is the origin of all eyes and ears as well as trees, there is no power in the universe to destroy either the one or the other.

There is no existing power to destroy life or to remove it from a given point. The principle of life fills all space. A certain form of phenomena which manifests life may be removed, but only to give place to another form. The lower is subject to the higher. The higher cannot be displaced but by the still higher. This must be so. Thought can not conceive of a thing which has no existence expelling the everywhere present principle of life. The strong man armed who keepeth his palace is not only expelled by a stronger than he.

I have said that substance is but the phenomena of an inner-working power, and that power is everywhere present. Nature abhors a vacuum, and therefore never makes one—more correctly speaking never permits one.

To help the ordinary reader to a clear conception of important fundamental principles, let us turn to the word vacuum in Webster. There may be found the noun pointing to the word supra. Turn then to the word supra, the Latin preposition signifying above, over or beyond, continue to follow the line of the adjective until you come to the word Superlapsarian, from the Latin supre, above, lapsus, fall. Then read the full definition—"One of that class of Calvanists who believe that God's decree of election determined that man should fall, in order that the opportunity might be furnished of securing the redemption of a part of the race. The decree of salvation being conceived of as former, before or beyond, and not after or following the lapse or fall."

Opinions such as that expressed in said quotation could only be formed in the absence of knowledge of natural law, which governs the universal principle of life and is an eternal principle behind all phenomena.

The idea of an arbitrary and vindictive power creating an individual out of a grain of sand or a particle of matter and breathing into the same the breath of life that the individuals thus created without any choice of their own might be destroyed or subjected to eternal suffering, is too gross and crude to bear thoughtful investigation for a moment without the idea tumbling to atoms.

There can be nothing more contrary to natural law than the thought of the infinite principle of life destroying or planing for the suffering of part of itself.

It is a well established fact in science that all life is one, and that the infinite principle of life fills all space.

It takes infinite space to hold infinite spirit.

If a portion of life could be destroyed the remaining could no longer be the Infinite. This is conclusive evidence that nature not only abhors a vacuum, but cannot permit one.

There are certain things that God the Infinite spirit cannot do. God cannot lie, and as an old farmer very thoughtfully said, God cannot make a two-year-old colt in a minute.

Neither can God destroy life. God is life, God is law, God is love. These are principles eternal and indestructible. These principles can never suffer. They can never die. The spirit of life in the mortal body is in the first stage of individual existence. The child in the first grade at school is not sufficiently advanced in knowledge to understand the why and wherefore of problems being grasped in higher grades nor the far-reaching purpose of the discipline of the school. Those who witnessed the late fire in the Chicago theater where six hundred, or over, human beings were subjected to conditions resulting in the change called death, were horrified at what they believed to be a dreadful destruction of life. There was no destruction of life. Life is indestructible. There has never been a single individual life lost since the world was first inhabited.

For the development of the race it was necessary that a shroud of darkness should be wrapped around each individual with just enough light for development. It is thus with every form of life with,

"Here and there a glint or gleam
To moderate the gloom."

All life is thus developed.

The negative conditions are absolutely necessary for the development of the life principle.

The knowledge of natural law now being attained to by the race is lifting the gloom by unwrapping the shroud. The continuity and indestructibility of life are now understood as fixed facts.

There are no accidents in life. Accident presupposes something unforeseen and unprovided for; such cannot be under a perfect law behind which stands Infinite wisdom, power and love.

The unforeseen and unprovided for can be found only in the budgets of finite governments.

If there are no accidents the reader may raise the question, where does the human responsibility point cease and the divine law begin? The divine law is expressed without beginning or end, it is infinite and therefore includes all things. But what about the neglect, oversight or wilful act of the individual? What of the man who plans for the destruction of the steamboat or passenger train?

Infinite provision covers everything. It cannot be that Infinite Intelligence was unaware of the coming event of the Chicago theater fire. Now, if it was a disaster in our acceptation of the term and Infinite Intelligence knew of its approach and failed to give warning so as to obviate the same, then God or goodness is to blame for the disaster.

This cannot be so.

Infinite goodness cannot be to blame for anything.

If through a deliberate act on the part of some individual the fire occurred, that individual must suffer according to the measure of his violation of law. Where there is no law broken there can be no suffering. When we say the innocent suffer with the guilty we make a statement which has no basis in sound philosophy. Such a statement may appear true, but can only so appear to the mind that has not yet discovered the even poise of divine government.

When such a discovery is made men will not be punished as our human laws now punish, but will be educated so as to assist them to a higher plane and will be left to learn obedience through the chastisement of divine law in the remorse of their own spirits. This is the only natural retribution and is according to the divine plan.

The logical mind apprehending sound philosophy must ever discriminate between the suffering which results in deformity of spirit through personal disobedience to divine law and the trials which come through the disobedience of another. The former suffers as the evil-doer, the latter is the Christ suffering. They are distinct, yet both tend to ultimate good.

Knowing all things and making provision for all so that all things work together for the good of all is the principle of the divine law behind which stands Infinite wisdom, power and love.

THE LAW OF NATURE.

The sweet birds sing their songs of love
To the birdlings in their nest;
They sing to them the love of God,
Within their feathered breast.

The birdlings hear and soon repeat
Their melodies of glee;
They love the God of nature
In that dear old sheltering tree.

They build their nest a model home
From nature's bounteous store,
Possessing now, material
They never owned before.

All nature to their needs responds,
They gather with delight;
They know no God or peasantry
Their happiness to blight.

Now step across the border-line
And view the creature man;
Made in God's own image,
Christened ruler of his plan.

Instead of love's sweet melodies,
You hear the wail for rest;
The famished mother's darling babe
Lies starving at her breast.

Oh, Nature! Sweet abiding grace,
Why have we from thee strayed;
And brought about this sad unrest,
When all thy laws are staid?

We see thy bounties everywhere,
In every land and clime,
Extended to thy creatures free,
For all thy wants sublime.

The laws of nature never change,
In any time or age;
Her offer to the last born babe,
She offered to the sage.

So learn the lesson she doth teach;
Her rules are strict but true;
You must conform to nature's laws,
She cannot come to you.

IF WE KNEW.

There are gems of wondrous brightness
Ofttimes lying at our feet,
And we pass them, walking thoughtless
Down the busy crowded street;
If we knew, our pace would slacken—
We would step more oft with care,
Lest our careless feet be treading
To the earth some jewel rare.

If we knew what hearts are aching
For the comfort we might bring;
If we knew what souls are yearning
For the sunshine we could fling;
If we knew what feet are weary
Walking pathways roughly laid,
We would quickly hasten forward,
Stretching forth our hands to aid.

If we knew what friends around us
Feel a want they never tell—
That some word we've lightly spoken
Pained and wounded where it fell,
We would speak in accents tender
To each friend we chanced to meet;
We would give to each one freely
Smiles of sympathy so sweet.

MISSIONARY.

Monthly Report of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague.

During the month of February we visited four local societies, served the Michigan State Association at its mid-winter meeting held at Jackson, Mich., did the preliminary work of the Indiana State Convention, and helped to complete the organization.

The Michigan mid-winter meeting was a very successful one in point of numbers in attendance and in the presentation of the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. The work of the mediums and speakers present was of the highest order and of the most convincing character. Much good for our cause and the cause of organization was accomplished.

We visited Sturgis where we held four meetings. We succeeded in chartering this society with the Michigan State Association. This society owns the oldest Spiritualist church in the world. Hitherto this society has held aloof from the state and national organization; but now that they come to see the great good that is being done by these organizations they have gladly swung into line and taken a charter with the Michigan State Association. One by one societies as well as individuals who have not favored organization are coming to see the mighty importance of organized co-operative work for Spiritualism.

At Flint, Ind., we found the little society that we organized three years ago, still active; it has only a dozen members, yet it has held regular meetings once in two weeks ever since it was organized, besides holding an occasional meeting in a public hall whenever they have been able to secure a public worker.

This little society has paid its dues and taken up a collection once each year for the benefit of the N. S. A. It has never deemed it a hardship, but a privilege to thus help the good cause along. It has lost one or two of its most active members by their passing to the higher life but they have never become discouraged in the good work. The members will see to it that no one of their society is buried by an orthodox minister, but when one shall pass to the higher life a Spiritualist funeral with a competent Spiritualist minister will be in attendance to comfort the friends and carry out the wishes of the arisen one. Some other societies might profit by emulating its methods.

The Lafayette (Ind.) society that we organized recently, is doing nicely. It has leased the Universalist church of that place for one year, and when we were there they were having it re-papered and refitted. The members are working hard to place Spiritualism on its proper plane and to lift it out of the disrepute into which the "fortune-teller" fakirs have dragged it. The cause is safe in the hands of this society and will be vindicated and defended, while its teachings will be properly presented to the public through the efforts of its members.

We stopped at Elwood, Ind., and held a seance on our way to Anderson, Ind., meeting with some of the good friends there, and then went on to the State Convention.

The Indiana State Convention which was held at Anderson, Ind., Feb 26 to 28, inclusive, was a grand gathering of the representative Spiritualists of the state. It was a very harmonious convention and most excellent work was done. Among other things the following by-law was adopted:

Art. 11 of the By-Laws of the Indiana State Spiritualist Association—Sec. 1. The president shall appoint one superintendent for each congressional district in the state. Said appointment to be approved by the board of trustees.

Each superintendent shall have the supervision of his own district under the authority and direction of the said board of trustees and shall co-operate with the president in missionary work, and, together shall devise ways and means by which missionaries may be employed in his territory.

Sec. 2. The superintendents are authorized to visit and encourage societies, assist in organizing new ones and arrange dates for missionaries.

Sec. 4. Superintendents shall make quarterly reports to the secretary of the state board of trustees of the financial and spiritual condition of the societies under their respective charges.

Sec. 5. The superintendents shall report to the president the presence of any person or persons in their respective districts known to them to be unworthy of confidence, or impostors doing or attempting to do business as physical or mental mediums or both, or teaching or attempting to teach the religion of Spiritualism.

Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of the president upon the receipt of such information to forward to all of the superintendents a copy of the same, together with instructions to the superintendents to make copies of the same and to forward them to the secretaries of the societies under their charge, to the end that the public as well as the Spiritualists and our genuine mediums may be protected.

With this provision of the by-laws properly carried out, societies may be kept alive and made stronger, new ones will spring into existence.

Quarterly meetings in which the societies of a district may participate will be inaugurated, mass-meetings and conventions held, circuits arranged with good speakers and mediums placed upon them, and many other good things may be done to carry the work into every part of the state.

The appointing of superintendents, as this by-law provides, will be a great help in driving out unscrupulous persons who disgrace our beloved cause, as provisions are made by which they may be published to every society in the state. This may be carried to every part of the United States and our cause freed from them and the innocent people protected.

We are receiving letters from different parts of the country telling of the awful havoc these fakirs are creating in our ranks. Some of them have the "gall" to announce themselves as N. S. A. missionaries, which according to law, makes them candidates for the penitentiary.

Here is an extract from one of these letters. "This city has been overrun with frauds and self-styled mediums. Last fall Dr. ——— (giving his name) came; sent, so he said, to organize. He had a fine hall three nights. He was 'full' each night and then had 'jimjams'; called it 'obsession'; then left the city. There is a Dr. ——— now on trial, brought on requisition (from another state) for swindling, who was here posing as a clairvoyant and trance medium. He got sums ranging from $100 to $500 from several parties here whom he made believe he could tell them where large sums of money were buried. And so of some of the phenomenal mediums who have been here; they have been detected at fraud, or drunk. This has given Spiritualism a bad odor, and made the more intelligent people very skeptical."

The above is a fair sample of these letters, though some of them tell the story in detail, causing tears to fill one's eyes while reading them. Societies are ruined, people robbed, cheated and deceived by these land pirates and all in the name of our beautiful Spiritualism.

Let the Spiritualists of every state association appoint superintendents to look after their interests in their allotted districts, and thus help to free ourselves from this condition which threatens the ruin of the good work of Spiritualism in many localities.

A Great Astronomer.

He Illuminates Our Columns With Scintillating Thought.

MIND RAISED UP FROM MATTER.

By Professor Edgar L. Larkin.

And now comes good Brother Geo. W. Lewis, A. M., hailing from San Francisco, with a two-column article in The Progressive Thinker, for Feb. 27, in an endeavor to shake up the solid Echo Mountain, and the Lowe Observatory. And Brother Francis, up at 40 Loomis street, Chicago, goes on dreadfully, saying that it is a trenchant, well-reasoned criticism." The trouble came because, just an astronomer committed the unpardonable "Great Psychological Crime" of writing in the "psychic way." And this is a mystery—why psychologists do not like astronomers to write about mind. One would think that explorers of the siderial universe would be the very ones able to "cut mind out of space," and bring it to the earth all ready for use. Mr. Lewis opens up by writing, "Had the article been written by a layman, it would have received the ridicule of the general public." This never struck me, for the one universal testimony of the history of man is that every discovery, without a noted exception, has not only met ridicule from the "general public" but intense ridicule, invective and scorn, from those who displayed A. M., LL. D., B. S., etc., in several prominent cases. Thus Benjamin Franklin's original paper on lightning rods was excluded from the Philosophical Transactions, and fierce denunciation was hurled at his devoted head.

Young's proofs of the undulatory theory of light was abused by the Edinburg Review as follows: "It contains more fancies, more blunders, more unfounded hypotheses, more gratuitous fictions, all upon the same field, and from the fertile, yet fruitless brain of the same eternal Dr. Young."

Thomas Gray, by the same scientific journal, was declared insane because he said railroads could be built and operated, and suggested that he be thrust into an insane asylum. Scientific men testified that no locomotive could exceed twelve miles per hour; and ocean steamers were declared impossible. Even the Academy of France hurled ridicule at the great astronomer, Arago, for saying there could be an electric telegraph. Fossils of animals in solid stone, millions of years old, were declared to be special creations, all at once. Chloroform, hypnotism, all reforms in medicine, met with withering calumny; and the list may be extended. The theory advanced that mind is a phase of matter is not new, it is as old as Hindu philosophy.

Mr. Lewis writes: "For while the assertions in support of his propositions are numerous, his evidence is most conspicuous by its total absence." True, for none living among men know what mind is, and therefore all proof is impossible. By far the ablest psychologists that ever lived on earth were the mighty philosophers of India; they reveled for thousands of years in the most critical analysis of mind, and failed utterly to find what it is. One theory put forth by them was that mind is unutterably refined tenuous matter. No trace of proof was offered. The atom of hydrogen is so minute, that if the minds of men should become perhaps one thousand times more acute, they, then, would be unable to begin to think of its smallness. But J. J. Thomson has indicated that there are bodies of only the one-thousandth of the mass of the hydrogen atom. He gave the name—corpuscle—to these bodies, and the entire world of science adopted it. The most refined speculations of the Hindu sages, did not ascend to this division of matter. They are beyond the infinitesimals of any mathematical order. They are now known to be electricity itself, pure and simple, or to be filled with it to saturation.

Again, Mr. Lewis says: "But he fails to intimate, even, how matter, though divided into infinitesimal particles, can be transmuted —'raised up'—into mind." The reason for this omission is, I do not know what mind or matter is. Yet, I now believe and have believed from my boyhood, that mind is inconceivably refined matter.

He asks, "Is there any evidence in support of his proposition?" Not that I am aware of; still my belief that mind is matter is now stronger than it was fifteen minutes ago, when I began writing this note. No shadow even, of proof has ever been given to me that I have a soul, still, I persistently and obstinately believe that I possess one. With ever-increasing obduracy, I now believe that this soul is made of matter. Back of this belief, I have forty centuries of the most profound, occult, esoteric, arcane, and refined literature and philosophy of the Golden Age of India, in its antiquity.

Countless millions of human beings have lived and died in the belief that mind, soul, spirit, thought, ego, all are composed of matter. Literature teems with the term, "spiritual body," the word "body" meaning an object made of matter. Else the words "body" and "object" could not be used. However this belief of vanished millions does not make the doctrine true. No combination of microscopes mentioned by Mr. Lewis, will ever be able to see a corpuscle, but, they are known to exist. If the metal in a one-grain pharmacist's weight be expanded so that its particles should fill an ordinary room, the rarity would be far beyond human comprehension, but let it be divided so that its corpuscles will fill sixty-six cubic miles of space, then all concepts formed in the brain of man concerning the tenuity are utterly useless. Yet, this was the state of matter now in the sun and planets when expanded to distance, half-way to our nearest neighbor.

Mr. Lewis is in a worse condition than I am, for he comes right out and quotes Oliver Lodge thus: "Again, speaking of the ether, he says: 'Substance it may be, matter it is not.'" Here is an assertion wilder than any that has appeared in history before. The words read "substance is not matter." No trace of proof is offered, no distinction is given between the words, and no hint is given that proof exists. The literature of the occult world in all ages, presents repeated accounts of mind moving gross matter. Statements have been made under oath that weights, furniture, and human bodies, have been lifted into the air by mind. Whole books are now appearing here and in Europe on "thought power." Electricity is defined as "power," "force," energy," "mode of motion," "activity," and the like, but it is also known to be matter, for its ultimate Thomsonian corpuscles, are matter for they have inertia, the inherent property of matter.

Entire millions of human beings for centuries, believed that mind existed before matter; and at this point I could go on writing ten hours per day for a year, searching the labyrinths and mazes of Vedanta, Samkhya, Yogi, Nyaya, Mimamsa, Vaisesshika and other primeval Aryan philosophies in their explorations of thought, human mentality and soul, and then be no nearer the origin of mind than in the beginning. Nor matter. Which began first, or whether both came to a beginning simultaneously, or whether either ever had a beginning; or whether mind was made out of matter, or matter out of mind, are questions unknowable in the present state of the human mind.

Here are a few archaic Hindu speculations: "The covered germ burst forth from mental heat. The ray shot across them." "The existent sprang from that which existed not." Grand Hymn of Creation Rig Veda X. 72.

Here in the infancy of man, it was thought that made the germ of the universe burst forth. How the "covered germ" came to be is not mentioned, and no allusion is made to proof.

Here is the venerable Aryan Hindu law-giver Manu's account of the beginning. Nothing is done in universe building until Deity makes himself visible to mind. Thus, "He, whom the mind alone can conceive, whose essence eludes the external organs, who has no visible parts, who exists from eternity, even He, the Soul of all Beings, shone forth in person." "From the Supreme Soul, He drew forth mind, existing substantially, though unperceived by sense; immaterial, and before mind or the reasoning power, He produced consciousness, the internal monitor." From Aryan, Hindu, the Laws of Manu.

Literature does not present anything to compare with this. It was committed to writing at least 1,500 B. C., and Max Muller shows that the text was memorized for centuries before the invention of writing, and after being considered too sacred to be written. Thus Deity produced consciousness before reason. And this: "Before them both, he produced Soul, or the first expansion of the Divine Idea." Laws of Manu Book I. Not a verse in the fifty-four Bibles of mankind ever mention the word proof, and no religion ancient or modern contains an intimation of proof. And strange to relate, since Mr. Lewis replied to me, I have looked over great books on psychology, making intricate research into every known ramification of mind, and in no book, was the slightest notice given of proof. Therefore, when my critic asks for any hint of proof that "Mind is raised up from matter," I at once collapse. Were he to ask me for proofs of any religious belief whatever, I would swoon again. Thus no proof has ever been found for any historic religion; yet the millinos keep on believing, and always will. I believe many things without a shadow of proof. The vast works of Kant, Spinoza, Hegel, Dugald Stewart, Sir William Hamilton, Herbert Spencer, McCosh and all other psychologists, and logicians rear their colossal fabrics, not on proof, at all, but on "Intuitions of the Mind."

In my ignorance of the nature of mind or its cause, I always when taking up a book on psychology, fall to theorizing, striving to invent hypotheses that will account for the facts noted. In these imaginings, I found it easier to think that mind was made of matter, than that matter was manufactured from mind. Many wise Aryan psychologists thought for centuries that the latter is the simplest. Mathematicians do not think they have proof unless they can get the clutch of mathematics on the case. A lodge, stock company, society or club, has laws and by-laws, little minor rules. Now mathematicians revel in the fact that the law of gravity of Newton and the three laws of Kepler, are rock-hewn mathematical laws of Nature. But some stupendous discovery may be made, besides which these majestic laws will dwindle to mere by-laws. The entire universe of what may be termed finer forces, or finer matter, awaits exploration. Some deny its existence, while others of finer minds, already see its ineffable majesty approaching, like a ship out of mist. Beware of calling for proof, it is immense, for all that has happened on this planet under the heads of metaphysics, religion, psychology, theosophy, philosophy, logic, and hypotheses in general, have no trace even, of proof.

We live in a universe so inconceivably large, and whose works require such vast periods of time for their consummation, that the entire existence of man affords a mere glimpse. He gazes a moment on the stupendous scene and dies. How would a microbe that lives but one hour, be able to write a history of the world? All that we know or think we know may be so insignificant, that it should not be brought forward in any case as proof. Proof in this world is scarcer than radium and hard to get. When secured it is seen to be immense. I will be glad to fall in with anybody in person or by mail who has knowledge based on absolute proof.

I wrote: "Alcoholic and other poisons acting on brain cells can disturb, distort and finally destroy the mind." Mr. Lewis quotes this and adds one of the most remarkable sentences ever printed: "This assertion is simply gratuitous." Now I hereby assert that I have seen human minds destroyed by alcohol.

Mr. Lewis refers to the experiments of Professor Bose in the University of Calcutta where he poisoned a human nerve and an iron wire with alcohol, cocaine, oxalic acid, etc., and the nerve refused to convey sensation, and so did the iron—that is, it refused to carry electricity when poisoned.

Mr. Lewis says: "These experiments amount to this and nothing more. Streams of electricity course along the nerves of the human body, and in like manner electricity flows over the bars of iron, so also, cocaine, chloroform and poisons have the same effect upon the electric current, whether its circuit be over a human nerve or a bar of iron." In reply, I will say, I know it.

The article, "Mind Raised Up From Matter," was published in the hope that somebody would be induced to begin the study of that wonder of all ages, the occult philosophy of the ancient Hindus. Its study is now spreading throughout the earth with great rapidity. I only wished to hurry it along. But how ridiculous to call for proof of anything under the heads of mind, religion, philosophy or metaphysics of any kind.

TEMPLE DEDICATION.

A Gala Day for the Spiritualists of San Diego, Cal.

Sunday, March 6, was truly a gala day for the Spiritualists of San Diego, as it was the occasion of the dedication of our new Spiritual Temple. The day was beautiful and the audience not only taxed the capacity of the auditorium, but it was estimated that fully two hundred were turned away.

That it was a joyous occasion was plainly evidenced by the smiling faces of the officers and members of the society, for it was the materialization of long-cherished hopes and plans.

The exercises opened with a violin solo by Master Bernhard Lydick, accompanied by Miss Clark, our regular organist, after which, invocation was offered by Mrs. Morrill.

Mrs. Mattie A. Fay, president of the Busy Bees, in a felicitous manner and in behalf of that auxiliary, presented the furnishings of the auditorium to the society, which was responded to by C. A. Buss, our worthy president.

A beautiful symbol in shape of a floral key, composed of white carnations, was presented to the guiding spirit intelligences having charge of the First Society, which was responded to through the organism of Mrs. Lilly M. Thiebaud. In addition to the music of the regular choir, which was really excellent, several solos were rendered by Miss Russell, one of San Diego's sweet singers, and a fine mandolin duet by the Misses Beck, who are expert performers on these instruments, their lovely music adding greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion.

The opening address, catholic and conciliatory in tone and spirit, was delivered by Dr. J. M. Peebles, who always finds something to admire and commend in all forms of faith and religion, and following the usual custom, he dedicated the new temple to all holy uses and to God.

He was followed by Will C. Hodge, who was more inclined on his part to dedicate the temple solely to the uses and needs of humanity instead of the Gods, as in his estimation God had already buildings enough.

Col. J. L. Dryden, who made one of the best speeches of the day, emphasized the fact that Spiritualism and Spiritualists were unalterably opposed to the shedding of blood, and hence were enemies to all war, and it was his earnest conviction that above all things else we should dedicate our temple to Peace.

Mrs. Jane Mullen, a faithful medium and old-time worker of National City, expressed her satisfaction with the culmination of our plans, and rejoiced that she had so far recovered from a late severe illness as to be able to join in the thanksgiving and festivities of the day.

The closing speech was made by the well-known medium and all-around worker, Mrs. Mary P. Morrill, of Chula Vista, who briefly outlined the teachings of Spiritualism.

During the exercises President Buss very feelingly referred to Capt. Fellows, who has passed to the spiritual expression of life, and whose generous donations, including the ground on which the temple stands, founded the nucleus of a house or temple of our own. To this, response was made by the Captain, through the organism of Mrs. Thiebaud. On more than one occasion has he expressed his satisfaction that while in the physical form he was led to do something for the cause which was dear to him, and he assured the friends on this occasion that he had lost none of his interest in the upbuilding of the cause in this sunny land, and declared that all his hopes and promises would yet be fulfilled.

As an auxiliary society, too much praise can not be bestowed upon the "Busy Bees." True to their name, they have labored faithfully and incessantly to secure the furnishings of the new temple auditorium as well as temple hall.

The building is 40 by 60 feet in size, is centrally located and has a seating capacity for 350, has large sunny windows and is lighted throughout by electricity. The auditorium is seated with very comfortable opera chairs, the floor gradually rising from the rostrum to the rear, the floor containing the last row of seats being the same height of the rostrum, affording unobstructed view of the speaker. The lower room which is designated as temple hall, has dressing-rooms on either side of the rostrum, while in the rear are closets, kitchen and a library of more than four hundred volumes, while a stairway from one of the dressing-rooms connects with the auditorium above.

A lyceum is constantly maintained which is now under the supervision of Herbert R. Fay, as conductor, and a Young People's Society, promising good results has lately been formed under the leadership of William Thurber. This is auxiliary to the regular society and meets in temple hall one hour previous to the regular lecture.

A pleasing episode of the dedication was the receipt of a telegram of congratulation from J. Shaw Gillespie, president of the state association.

The present officers and board of directors are as follows: C. A. Buss, president; Mrs. C. A. Dodge, vice-president; T. J. McFeron, secretary; M. D. Thiebaud, treasurer; Mrs. Clara A. Beck and P. F. Olds completing the list. Every member of the board is a worker and all are harmonious in devising ways and means to increase the usefulness of the society and in extending the glorious principles of the only philosophy which ever pretends to demonstrate the continuity of life.

Many sacrifices have been made and much hard work performed by the friends in their determination to own a home of their own, and while all have willingly performed their part according to their ability, and while it is true that no general can succeed in winning battles without the co-operation of the rank and file, it is but just that great credit be given to President C. A. Buss, for his faithfulness and untiring energy in bringing our plans to a successful consummation.

Notwithstanding the dedicatory services which were an addition to the regular program, a good-sized audience assembled in the evening to listen to Mrs. Thiebaud, who will occupy the rostrum for the month of March, while your scribe will attempt to hold the fort with the National Avenue Society.

Verily, Spiritualism is in the ascendancy in San Diego.

LAKE HELEN, FLA.

Notes From Southern Cassadaga Camp.

The days and the week at Lake Helen, Florida, have been all too short to compass the work we wished to accomplish. The services upon Thursday and Saturday were well attended and the work divided between Mrs. Coffman and Mr. Colville. Mr. Colville's wonderful power of inspiration is bringing out many to hear him from the surrounding country, as well as the excursionists who make this one of their stopping places, and his gift of song is also a great addition to the meetings, and our own singers, Miss Whitney and Miss Salinas, whether they are needed in concerts or to assist in plays, they are always ready and most willingly accede to all requests. We were very fortunate to have their assistance in the absence of the one engaged.

Mrs. Coffman is making many friends, and in both public and private work is giving help to those who need it. She is very versatile, being used by her guides for different manifestations, and has entertained and instructed many by her mediumship, both on the platform and among those who surround her. Mr. Colville received a letter from abroad not long since and handed it to her to psychometrize before he opened it, and she at once brought out the main ideas contained in the letter without hesitation. Upon opening the letter the statements were verified by its contents.

On Tuesday the service took the form of a funeral service at the same time that Burt Kellogg's funeral service was being held in Cleveland, Ohio. We gave notice last week of his passing out and it comforted his father and mother to listen to consoling words here when their heart's desire was to have been where they could once more see the "garment of flesh" that had become so dear to them, although we felt sure his spirit was with us. They were very brave, and all were thankful that they knew the veil was very thin between their boy and them.

Among the amusements of the week has been the old folks gathering. They were the honored guests of the Ladies' Auxiliary. Mr. Wheeler, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Cole, of Michigan, dressed in the style of "ye olden time," declaring themselves over a hundred years old, shaking hands with Washington's only remaining "body servant" and declaring he was "most a boy side of them." The very old people, like children of to-day, kept things lively. They wanted to dance "money musk" and "French four," and put some ginger into it and aided by the other costumed friends they put in plenty of steps, just as folks used to when they were young, and what was the surprise of the officers of the Ladies' organization after "the woman in white" had discoursed upon "Ghost Land" from whence she came to have the old people who were sitting beside the improvised fire place with a stand near them, upon which a lighted tallow candle gave out its dim light, call out in no feeble tones, asking, "if they were not going to have something to eat." The ladies were fortunate enough to have anticipated the request, and at once served old-fashioned twisted fried cakes, cheese and coffee. It was no easy matter, for the crowd was large, but all entered into the spirit of the occasion with a zest that would have put to shame the dainty appetites and desire for sweets and salads of the present day. Our mediums, Mrs. Coffman, Mr. Colville, Mrs. Witter, Mrs. Stephens and Mrs. Bartholomew, gave readings and earned quite a nice sum for the society.

The president of the Ladies' Auxiliary made a plea for funds and over $40 was raised in money and enough subscribed for our new dancing pavilion, to swell the sum to over a hundred dollars.

It was the first public plea made for money at Southern Cassadaga this year. Whatever has come into our hands has come for amusements and benefits received, and an equivalent has been received every time.

Another pleasant affair of recent date was the celebration of the birthday of the three Marys, at Hotel Cassadaga—Mrs. Stephens, of Washington, Mrs. Brown, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Baker, of Kansas City. The writer was made chairwoman of the affair, and calls for speeches were responded to in a most pleasing manner. Prof. Peck, Dr. Hilligoss, Mrs. Coffman, Mrs. McDougal, Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. Buchanan, Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Birkhauser, Mr. Hopkins and others responded in a very happy way, and then the three Marys made their speeches. Mary of Washington, spoke of her desire for increased usefulness and a willingness to use her gift for the betterment of humanity. Mary of Philadelphia, one whose life is devoted to the best there is in Spiritualism and expressed thanks that in a place so far from home that day of days should be remembered, and we who knew thought she was longing for the sound of a child's voice from Philadelphia, who would say, "Let me kiss you, grandma." And the queenly Mary of Kansas City, with head snow-crowned, spoke but little, only words of thanks, but we knew the author of Ruby Dane and other books and poems blessed the friends, who thought and spoke so kindly of her, while her husband who came here looking for a healing power, has found it in the resinous air and balmy breezes of our beautiful South land. Ice cream, lemonade and cake were served, and willing hands assisted Mrs. Sage to make all delightful and joyous for the "Three Marys."

On Wednesday, under the management of H. A. Budington, one of the most enjoyable occasions of the season occurred. It was an old folks' concert. The costumes did credit to the ingenuity of the performers, and every part was a credit to the participators. It netted the association a nice sum of money.

Mr. Colville spoke on Sunday morning and the the writer in the afternoon, and was followed by Mrs. Coffman with tests.

CARRIE E. S. TWING.

And when one sees that all religions and all ethics, even the oldest known, have, like all language and all science and all philosophy and all existing species of animals and plants, been slowly evolved from lower and ruder forms; and when one learns that there have been many Christs, and that the evidence of the life of Jesus is very slight, and that all the acts and words of Jesus had been anticipated by other teachers long before the Christian era, then it is borne in upon one's mind that the historic basis of Christianity is very frail. And when one realizes that the Christian theology, besides being borrowed from older religions, is manifestly opposed to reason and to facts, then one reaches a state of mind which entitles the orthodox Christian to call one an infidel, and to make it unpleasant for one, to the glory of God. That is the position in which I stand at present.—Robert Blatchford.

PERSONAL MAGNETISM

How Prominent Men Develop This Power and Use It to Influence Others—Women, Too, Adepts in This Mysterious Art.

A Reporter Makes Astounding Discoveries—Secret Methods Which Charm and Fascinate the Human Mind.

High Priests of the Occult Reveal Jealously Guarded Secrets of Years—A Wonderful New Book by Prominent New York Men.

A wonderful new book entitled "Success and How to Win It and The Secret of Power," has just been issued at an expense of over $5,000 by one of the leading colleges of the City of New York. This book is from the pens of the ablest specialists of modern times. The author gave away the copyright on condition that 10,000 copies should be distributed to the public free of charge. The Columbia Scientific Academy is now complying with this contract, and until the edition of 10,000 copies is exhausted you can get a copy of this book absolutely free. This book is profusely illustrated with the most expensive half-tone engravings. It is full of wonderful secrets and startling surprises, and it thoroughly explains the real source of the power of personal influence. It fully and completely reveals the fundamental principles of success and influence in every walk of life. The hidden mysteries of personal magnetism, will-power and scientific character-reading are explained in an intensely interesting manner. Two secret methods of personal influence are described, which positively enables any intelligent person to exercise a marvelous influence and control over anyone whom he may wish. These methods are entirely new and have never before been made public. A reporter has tried them personally and can vouch for their wonderful power.

This book also describes absolutely certain methods by which you can read the character, secrets and lives of every one you meet. No one can deceive you. You can tell what vocation is best for you to follow. You can know the secret power by which minds of human beings are charmed and fascinated. The newest, latest and best system of physical and mental culture and magnetic healing is fully explained and illustrated by beautiful half-tone engravings. No such book has ever before been published. No such wonderful information has ever before been placed in the hands of the public. On account of the mighty power and influence placed in one's hands by this book the legislature of the State of New York debated whether or not the state ought to permit its promiscuous circulation; but it was finally decided the good it would accomplish would greatly overbalance the ill and its distribution was not interfered with.

Not long ago John D. Rockefeller, the richest man in America, said in talking to a Sunday-school class that he attributed his success in life largely to his ability to influence others. Lincoln, Lee, Napoleon and Alexander the Great all won fame and renown by their wonderful power of personal influence. Jay Gould piled up millions by the same power. J. P. Morgan organized the Billion-Dollar Steel Trust and enriched himself by millions simply by his marvelous ability to influence others. There are to-day thousands of men with twice the brains and education of Mr. Morgan who are practically paupers. They had the ability to organize a trust, but they had not sufficient power of personal influence. Personal influence, will power, stamina—call it what you will—has from the creation of man been the subtle force that has brought wealth, fame and renown to those who were fortunate enough to possess it.

This strange mysterious influence is inherent to every human being. By the late methods explained by the New York specialist in human culture any intelligent person can develop a wonderfully magnetic personality and learn how to read the character, secrets and the lives of others in a few days' study at his own home. You can use this marvelous power without the knowledge of your most intimate friends and associates. You can use it to obtain lucrative employment, to secure an advance in salary, to win the friendship and influence of others, to obtain a greater share of happiness from life. You can be respected, honored and become a leader in your community.

If you are not satisfied with your present condition and circumstances; if you long for greater success and more money; if you are not able to influence others to the extent you desire, the reporter would advise you to write at once for a free copy of the great work now being given away by the Columbia Scientific Academy.

Mrs. R. C. Young, of 31 Indiana St., Lawrence, Kan., recently sent for a copy of the book. After carefully examining it and testing the methods of personal influence on her friends and associates she makes the following statement in a letter to her friend: "The instructions given by the Columbia Scientific Academy have been worth to me more than all the previous reading of my life. I wish every woman in this country could read their grand book."

Fred Perkins, of South Haven, Mich. says: "I have been in great demand since I have read the work of the Columbia Scientific Academy. People are amazed and mystified at the things I do. I believe I could make $25 a day reading character alone if I was to charge for my services. If any one would have told me I would receive so much information I would have thought him crazy."

Mrs. M. Effie Watson of Martinsville, Ind. says: "Could I have had access to such information in past years I could have avoided many misfortunes. The work of the Columbia Scientific Academy shall be my guiding star the remaining days of my life."

If you will send your name and address to the Columbia Scientific Academy, Dept. 242D, 1941 Broadway, N. Y. the above book will be sent to you absolutely free, postage prepaid. On account of the great expense involved in preparing this book the Columbia Scientific Academy requests that only people who are especially interested write for a free copy—only those who really desire to achieve greater success and better their condition in life.

POPESS JOAN.

A Very Instructive and Scholarly Presentation of an Important and Remarkable Matter Pertaining to Catholic Church History.

To the Editor: The existence of this female pope has been denied by some and doubted by others; but it is a remarkable fact that of the scores of writers who admit that she was duly elected and performed all the functions of a pope for two and a half years, not one is an enemy of Rome, and quite a few of them are numbered among her most faithful adherents. Moreover, there is positive evidence to sustain Dr. Hofer that a belief in her existence "prevailed in the Christian world from the 9th century to the Renaissance."

Joan was a learned English woman, and fell in love with a monk of the Monastery of Fuld. To be near him, she assumed male attire and joined the Order. The lovers finally fled to France, returned to Germany and at last opened a school in Athens. Here the monk died, and Joan went to Rome, still attired as a man, and opened a school, which was patronized by the nobility. When Leo IV. died, in 852, so great was her reputation for learning that she was elected to succeed him.

It must be remembered that in those days, and for 200 years thereafter, popes were elected by the combined clergy and people, as we now elect our public officers; and also, the fact of a person not being a priest did not debar him from the position, as many popes and bishops were simply deacons or even laymen, when elected, and were consecrated priests after their election.

There is a peculiar circumstance about this election of Joan. In all the early records Leo IV. is stated to have reigned from 847 to 852; then there is a hiatus of two and a half years, when Benedict III. is elected in 855. This hiatus never has been explained, and in the 17th century, for the first time, the reign of Leo IV. is extended to 855. It was during this hiatus that Joan reigned.

There is still another peculiar and unplained circumstance. Up to the 13th century there had been 20 popes (including Joan) bearing the name of John, and only 19, provided she never reigned. When Pedro Juliani was elected in 1276, he assumed the name of John XXI., and all the early records so style him. He reigned only one year, and three years after his death, it was changed to John XX. Then it was changed back to the old number, and the other Johns, from number 9 to 20, were put back one number. This left number 20 without a pope, so they entered an anti-pope to fill the hiatus. There must have been some reason for all this, and I intend to find it out.

The story goes on to say that Joan fell in love with one of her cardinals, with the usual result, and one day while on her way to say mass in the Church of St. Clement, she was seized with labor pains and delivered of a male child in the street. The populace stoned mother and child to death, and a chapel was built on the spot with the following inscription: "Papa Peter Patrum Peperit Papissa Papellum." Thereafter, though this street was the most direct leading to the church, all religious processions avoided it and took a roundabout way, through a narrow, uncleanly street to reach the church of St. Clement, at that time the principal church in Rome, named after one of the first popes. A statue of a woman holding a child, was also erected there; it bore the inscription "John VIII., an Englishwoman," and there is abundant testimony to prove that it remained till Sixtus V. (1585-90), owing to the scandal having reached foreign lands through the pilgrims, had the street closed and the statue removed to the church, where it now poses as the Virgin and child.

This is the story handed down by papal writers. If it be true, and from the accumulated testimony of these writers there seems to be no room for reasonable doubt, then Rome's claim to Apostolic Succession is broken and the missing link is Joan. Carinal Von Dollinger practically admits this, for he quotes from Hase & Kist that in 855 an edict was issued from Rome as follows: "Let no one presume to say a word about the fact of a female pope." But, about 1280 the restriction was removed, and this is the time when the number of John XXI. was changed just as I have pointed out.

The corroborative testimony is voluminous, but space limits will confine me to a few. Anastasius, librarian of Adrian II (867), whose work is said to be "the most ancient collection known of biographies of the popes," places Joan in the list as successor of Leo IV. Surely, this historian should know, as he was living in Rome at the time, Joan was pope. As he compiled the list for the use of Adrian, is it fair to presume that he would give Joan such a position unless she had occupied it? And what object could Adrian have in allowing such a fraud, if it be a fraud? Many popes were scoundrels; not one of them was a fool.

Marianus Scotus, about 1060, gives her history and says: "To Leo IV. succeeded Joan, a woman, who held the See 2 years, 5 months and 4 days." Rather explicit. Bishop Otto of Freysingen (1158) mentions her in his list of popes as "John VIII., a woman," and in the edition of 1513, the name is still retained. The Dominican monk, Stephen, Chaplain to Alexander IV. (1254), says he wrote his book, "Seven Gifts of the Holy Ghost," at the express command of the pope. It is "A history of the popes and emperors in the form of a dry, mechanical, and utterly uncritical collection of biographical notes." He mentions her as "John VIII. an Englishwoman."

Martinus Polonus, Archbishop of Cosenza (1278), who is called "The Exclusive Historical Instructor of the Catholic World," recognizes Joan as "true pope." As he was papal chaplain and penitentiary, his work is official. In their quarrel with Boniface VIII. (1294), the Dominicans boldly quoted Joan to the pope, and he not only did not deny the fact, but bowed to the Order, fearing an investigation which might deprive him of his powers. Moreover, many writers of that day speak of her, and in one instance, at least, she is represented as hanging, with her cardinal lover, at the entrance of hell, in punishment for having desecrated St. Peter's chair.

At the Council of Constance (1415) that deposed John XXIII., Huss in defending himself, claimed, that as the church had been ruled by a woman it "had no real pope;" that the chain was broken, and no pope was needed. At the same Council, the Franciscan, De Rocha read a treatise on the same subject, and Gerson, Chancellor of the University of Paris, the dominant figure at the Council, quoted the papacy of Joan to prove that the church could err in matters of fact.

Martin le Franc, secretary to Nicholas V. (1447), mentions Joan as pope; as does Platina in his history, about 1460; and also Ricobaldo in his "History of the Popes," dedicated to Sixtus IV. (1474). So does Father Stella in his history (1507), and as late as 1550 the story was recited in the Mirabilia Urbis Romae, a guide to the City of Rome for Pilgrims; and the very spot where the tragedy took place was pointed out. Adrian VI. (1522, interwove the story in a theological treatise, in which, while admitting Joan to be "true pope," he argues that it was a trial, sent by God, to test the church. As late as 1575, the Franciscan, Rioche, speaks of Joan, and if I had space, I could quote about 30 other papal writers to the same effect.

It is an historical fact that the bust of Joan was in the Cathedral of Siena with the busts of other popes, and it was placed alongside of the bust of Leo IV., as his immediate successor. Theodoric of Neim, papal secretary, testifies that he saw it there in 1413, with the inscription, "John VIII., an Englishwoman." Pius II., 1458, who was a native of Siena, gives the same testimony. In one of his amorous letters written while he was secretary of the Council of Basle, that elected Felix V., he comments on the escapade of Joan with the Cardinal in language that is unfit for publication.

Though Siena gave three popes to the church in the 15th and 16th centuries, the bust was still exhibited till the time of Clement VIII., (1592), when, owing to the sneers of the Reformers, the inscription was removed and the name of Zachary, who was suposed to have been pope in 741, was substituted. This change caused comment, for it was the only bust of a pope, on exhibition, prior to the 11th century, so Alexander VII. (1655), who, also, was a native of Siena, had it removed and broken.

The papal historian, Father Pagi, says he went to Siena in 1677 to inquire about this transaction. None of his Order, the Minorites, would give him any information, for fear of threatened excommunication. Finally, an old Sacristan of the Cathedral, pointed out where the bust used to stand, and told him of its change to Zachary and final destruction.

The explanation and excuses offered by papal writers, are as important links as the above direct testimony. St. Antoninus (about 1460) says that "during this woman's pontificate, Christ was the head of the Church. Cardinals Baronius and Torrecremata agree that it proves the "divine institution" of the papacy, else it would not have survived the disgrace. Jesuit Cardinal Bellarmine argues that as the church survived a woman pope, it would survive an heretical pope. Cardinal Domenico Jacobazzi consoles himself by claiming that because Joan acted as pope for over two years, had ordained bishops, administered sacraments and performed all the duties of the papal office, and everything she did was valid, it was a visible manifestation of the care God had for his church, because, says he, "She (Joan) was, most certainly an emissary of the Evil One."

Some papal writers attempt to explain matters by making damaging admissions. They say the story originated in the election of John IX. by the courtezan Theodora; or of John XII., by another prostitute. They are willing to admit that Joan was the mistress of Leo, or that she was his wife and at his death, acted as pope for two and a half years, pending the election of his successor. Or that during his absence from Rome, she had acted for him the same as Lucretia Borgia did for her father, Alexander VI., but none of them deny that she was enrolled among the popes, as the immediate successor of Leo IV., just as I have quoted from the early writers.

Well, notwithstanding the great care Go dtakes of the church, it was resolved that the thing should not happen again if human ingenuity could prevent it, and the ordeal of the "pierced seat" wa sintroduced. Two large stones were prepared, one hollow and the other solid. On his coronation day the pope —to be—was first seated on the hollow one, and two priests, especially selected, advanced, and having examined him, gave a preconcerted signal. Then the pope moved to the solid stone, where he was presented with his regalia. This is absolutely historically correct.

The Dominican, Robert D'Usez, assures us, as an eye-witness, that this ceremony was performed at the consecration of Nicholas IV. (1288). Jacobo D'Angolo describes it at the consecration of Gregory XII. (1406). He says that the two priests, after the examination, cried out, "Testiculos habet," and the clergy and people answered, "Deo Gratias." William Brevin says the same about Sixtus IV. (1471); Bernadino Corio tells us the same about Alexander VI. (1492). So, the examination must have been imperative, otherwise in this last case, it would seem a work of supererogation.

Archbishop Giampetro Valeriano Bolzani, member of the court of Leo X. (1513), at express command of the pope, published a work in which he gives the most minute details of the ceremony. He says it took place openly in the gallery of the Lateran Church, before the assembled people. The result was declared aloud by the examiners and then entered in a register. This work was published in Rome, with papal privileges and was dedicated to Cardinal de Medici. Consequently, it is official. The latest trace of this ceremony, that I have met, is the testimony of Lawrence Bauck, who affirms that it was performed at the consecration of Innocent X. (1644).

So it is evident that such a ceremony was performed, and as all my quoted authorities are papists, I cannot conceive of any reason why they should falsely testify to the degradation of their church. I submit that they form a chain of evidence that will require more than a simple negation to break, and also, that whether Jesus be a myth or not, has nothing to do with the subject. We are confronting a condition that no mere theory can upset, not even that of the numismatist quoted by Mr. Burr.

Even the theory of Jesuit Hardouin, that the monks of the Middle Ages forged much church literature, and the works of the Pagan poets and philosophers, does not and cannot disprove the existence of this female pope. To put it in a nutshell, the papal church claims primacy and jurisdiction, based on Apostolic succession, and I have attempted to prove by her own testimony that her claims are fictitious.

Letter Number Two—Interview With Franz Liszt.

My eyes soon fastened on the man I had come to see. There he stood on a raised dais, directing, guiding, and beating out the time and rhythm of the music; and I recognized much of it as being of his own composing, the very music of his own soul.

"Grand old man" my soul exclaimed. "I will soon join you at that business. Once more we will be united, my dear old Liszt." My father's eyes met his. A look of recognition passed between them. He glanced at me. My soul leaped up, and his eyes flashed, and, shortly thereafter, he called another to take his place, and came down toward us. He grasped my hand.

Ah, ha!" he exclaimed. "At length you have come. How glad I am to see you, my dear old boy! When did you leave the earth? What brought you here? Why, really, you should not have come so soon," he went on. "Why did you not live out your days there, as I did? I did not expect to see you here for years to come. But you shall play—you shall play to your heart's content. That's what you want, I know; and you shall play right here in this, my own grand orchestra; that's what you would like, would not you?"

I was so overwhelmed by my emotions that I had not been able to speak, but had stood wringing and shaking his hand.

"That is just what I should like, my dear old friend," I replied; "but I am a little weak, just now. Cannot we go to your own private home and play and talk as we used to do?"

"We surely can, and will," he answered. "Come! There stands my little home," and he pointed it out to me. It looked like a quiet restful place indeed, and we were soon inside its doors.

It must be borne in mind by the reader, that all my conversation with Franz Liszt was in the German language, and that in writing this, I translate it into English, as I am not writing particularly for the German nor Hungarian nations, but for the American public. My father said that he would leave us now, for awhile, as he was needed elsewhere, but would return for me as soon as I should again require his services.

I found Liszt's spiritual home a quiet bower of beauty, and here but one musical instrument, and that one a grand piano, finer than any I had ever yet seen on earth, but I will not now describe it.

"Your fingers are itching for that keyboard, I know," said Liszt, with a smile. "Come, let us hear you play."

I hesitated. Could I play? I had not been able to play for two or three months before leaving my material body, and an awful horror and despair had seized me when I found that I could not. I looked at my hands and then at the piano, and lastly, at Liszt.

"Do you think I can play?" I asked.

"Try it," he said laconically.

"What shall I play?"

"What was the last piece you ever played on earth?" he asked.

"Chopin's Impromptu, No. Two," I replied. "My wife would not let me play, fearing it would hurt me in my weak and half paralyzed condition, but I stole away into the parlor, when she was not looking, like a bad boy, and played the Impromptu. It was short and I finished it before my wife had time to come in and stop me. That was the last time my earthly fingers ever touched the keyboard, and that Impromptu the last I ever played. This was late in the afternoon, I remember, and I was in this life before morning."

"Well, let us hear that Impromptu. If you ended your earthly career with it, you might as well commence your spiritual musical career with it."

And so I seated myself and played it.

"All right," said Liszt. "You find that you can play here as well as there?"

I turned and said: "How well I remember when I came out from the parlor, feeling a little guilty, like a disobedient boy, asking my wife if I had played it well? and how her reply now rings through my soul: 'Why, Carlyle,' she said, 'I think it sounded as well as I ever heard you play.' This pleased me and I forgot my disobedience in her commendatory smiles. Poor darling! It was the last she ever heard me play on earth. Oh, that her spiritual ears were opened, that she might hear me play, here in this bright world."

"Well, never mind your wife," said Liszt. "Play more—play more! It takes me back in memory, to your early days on earth—to those days when you played for me when my earthly life was fast ebbing away. Play! play!" he commanded, and I played; commencing with his rhapsodies and, at last, playing Lucia De Lammermoor.

"Bravo! Bravo!" he exclaimed. "Why, you do better now than half I have in my spiritual orchestra."

"Will you not play for me?" I asked.

"I will improvise," he answered. "I play very little cut and dried music. I leave that to my pupils, now."

He played, and I sat enraptured. I will not attempt to describe it. Earthly language fails.

"There," he said, as he finished; "that may be called Earthly Memories. You recognized it as such, did you not?"

"I did, and you worked the theme out and up, pathetically, brilliantly and grand. You are Franz Liszt still, I perceive, for your former works run through your playing, as the works of a boy can still be perceived running through those of the man."

"Individualize! Individualize!" he exclaimed. "Never lose your own individuality."

"No, that would be impossible," I replied.

"And copy as little as possible after another," he ejaculated.

"I have always said that to my own pupils," I told him.

"Now," said he, " I want you to join my orchestra, and play in the cathedral."

A lady now brought in cake and wine. Franz would not have milk nor water, as my father had done, but wine. The lady retired and we were again left alone.

"Now," said Liszt, "I want to have a long talk with you, just as we used to in the olden days on earth. You were a queer chap then, to be sure. You would insist that you did not believe the church to be right. How is it with you now?"

"I do not believe the church is right, and it puzzles me to think that you are still an abbe, as I see you are by your dress. How can you still believe in the old way, after being in the spheres so long?"

"And why not?" he asked.

"Because you have not found things at all as the church represents them to be," I answered. "You have seen no God, no heaven, no hell, no devil, no purgatory, but, instead, this beautiful life within eternity."

"Because I have not seen God, is no proof that he does not exist. Because I have not sounded the depths of hell, is no evidence that others may not have done so; and, as for the devil, he dare not approach one who wears the cross of Christ—one who is a servant of the Most High, as I am."

"And you still believe the church to be right?" I asked.

"Yes, most emphatically!" he replied.

"Strange," I murmured. "We run together in music, but diverge widely in our religious opinions."

"You have not yet told me what your opinions are," he said.

"On earth, they called me a Spiritualist."

"And what do the Spiritualists believe?" he asked.

"They believe in communing with spirits, in eternal progression, in spiritual spheres, and that as a man dies on earth he wakes the same in the spirit world, neither good nor bad, neither in heaven nor hell."

"What about purgatory, and the different states and conditions within it, from out of which he must rise through his own endeavors and contrite penitence, and the masses and prayers of his friends and relatives on earth; also, what about the communion of saints? Saints are spirits, are they not?"

"Certainly," I replied. "Still, there is a wide difference between the belief of the Spiritualists and that of the church. I used to think that all who died and went to the spirit world, would at once see that they had been wrong, and immediately think as the Spiritualists do. But I find that I was mistaken. Yes, even before I left the body, Professor Denton wrote, that the Catholic religion held sway in the spirit life to a great extent; and I now find his words to be true."

"I doubt not," said Liszt, "that your Spiritualism worked you much harm in the earth life?"

"Yes, it injured my reputation somewhat," I replied. "The world seemed to think that a musician, of any prominence, had no right to be a Spiritualist; and when I went to California, my prospects were nearly blighted; but I would have met starvation rather than have given up that which I knew to be true. O, my old friend! Come out with me into the light of the new dispensation."

"If I were to do so," said Liszt, "I should be obliged to give up the cathedral, and my choir and orchestra there. This would be a great sacrifice," and his face worked convulsively. "But Petersilea, I have long cherished secret doubts of the infallibility of the church, with its pomp and pride, its pope, bishops and priests. Your father and myself have held long confabs together, and, really, I have sometimes been more than half convinced that he was right; and, now, here you come, fresh from earth, bringing the same news, the same ideas."

"If you give up the cathedral, cannot we go forth and form a very large and grand orchestra of our own, entirely on a new basis?"

"We might," he said reflectively; "but musicians, as a rule, are non-progressive in their religious opinions, they have so little time to think, their minds being given to music almost exclusively."

"That is also true of the earth life," I said. "My sympathies are not with the church of Rome; consequently I do not care to join your orchestra at the cathedral. I long ago determined to consecrate my life, and all my powers, toward the promulgation of that which I know to be true; and nothing shall cause me to swerve from my purpose. I promised my wife, years ago, that I would use my musical talent as a means of propelling the truth; and I will not now use it toward helping on the continuation of old errors."

"If I were to give up my choir and orchestra at the cathedral, I fear that particular organization would go to smash. It is the music—and my music at that—which holds that particular church together. I am the Abbot there, and the monks and priests all do my bidding; but, to tell you the truth, I am but half-hearted about it. I try to throw my whole soul into it, yet I am conscious that it really is but the shadow of my former self, from which I have unconsciously slipped, and you are waking me up, as from a dream. But, Carlyle —son of my heart—tell me more."

"Well, then, I shall have to commence at the beginning; and you, Franz Liszt, great composer and musician that you are, must condescend to become my pupil."

"And, why not?" he said. "I am not ashamed to become a pupil, if thereby I gain the knowledge of that which you suppose to be true—that which you say you know to be true. But, I am very curious to know how you know it to be true."

"Well, then," said I, " I will relate to you my story. My father has just left us, has he not?" Liszt bowed assent. "He is a spirit as you are, and as I, too, now am, but in his earth life, he did not believe that there was a life after the death of the mortal body. I did not share in my father's belief after I reached manhood, but joined the Episcopal church —Church of England—not so very different from the one you are now immersed in. Well, my father at length died, as it is called on earth, and not many months after that event, he seized every available opportunity to let me know the truth. He wrote hundreds of messages and a number of books, and identified himself so completely that it was impossible for me to doubt. I will not now go into the details of all that he wrote, but you now know, as I also know, that he did write; and my father never wrote anything that was false or misleading. He, as you know, is the soul of honor and truth. He wrote out all that would ever happen to me in my earthly life; and as time went on, all was verified. Nothing failed. Then he wrote philosophical treatises; and I have thus far found what he wrote to be true. Now what I wish to convey is this: If I, on entering this life, find all my father said of this spiritual life to be true, and you, on the contrary, find that what the church taught on earth is false, how can you still cling to that which you must know cannot be true?"

"I have not, thus far, thought that it might not be true."

"But you have not found anything true, according to the teachings of the church. How do you reconcile this within your own mind?"

"By thinking that I am in an intermediate state: You may call it purgatory, if you like."

"But as you are now, is not at all as purgatory is represented by the church."

"Very true," he replied; "but I have thought that the church may have been mistaken in some things."

"The church claims infallibility. If it has made such great mistakes, as you certainly find that it has, may it not be entirely mistaken?"

"I cannot think that," answered Liszt.

"If I find, on coming here, that my father has written me nothing but the truth, and you find that the teachings of the so-called Infallible Church are, in the main, utterly false, why not come out from it and join my father and myself in this which has proven strictly true?"

I could see that Liszt was wavering between truth and error.

"It is hard,very hard," he said, "to give up all my former habits and beliefs. The style and grandeur of my life, and position in the church and at the cathedral, suit me to a charm. Oh! I cannot, cannot give them up; and, yet, I very much doubt if the church is altogether right."

"You know it is not right!" I exclaimed, a little hotly I fear, for much of earth was still upon me.

"I do not know it," he said, rather resentfully; "and I have been in this life much longer than you have, and was a much older man when I came here. Then, how do you presume to teach me?"

I saw my mistake.

"I beg your pardon, my old friend. I should have spoken more respectfully. But my father, he came here before you, moreover, he was very nearly your own age, and you were once fast friends and co-workers in the earth life. He introduced much of your grand music to the world, and you recommended his Piano System to your pupils, and to the music teachers in Germany at large; surely, what he has to say must bear some weight with you"

"Your father is one grand man, but he runs to philosophy, more even than to music, while I run to music and let the philosophy take care of itself. I thought, at one time, that you were all music, but you seem, like your father, to be running after philosophy."

"No, dear old friend," I said. "You are surely mistaken. I am all music, and I do not philosophise or reason much, but my soul emphatically tells me that thus and so is the truth. I listen to my own soul and not to the teachings of the church; and thus it was and is with my father. The spirit of man ever points toward its guiding star, the soul. But you have allowed the pomp, pride, and grandeur of the church to dim the light of your own soul. Oh ! my dear old friend. Let your own soul shine forth in its native brilliancy, undimmed by the error of false teaching," and I wrung his hand, while tears welled to my eyes, for I loved Franz Liszt.

"May be you are right," he said, much moved. I will think it over, and, perhaps, we can start something grand on our own account. Your father shall moralize while we make the music, eh?"

"If he so desires. We can find thousands to join us, cannot we?" I asked.

"In music, yes; but musicians are not philosophers, you know."

"Still, we are not obliged to be tied to old error," I said. "I believe if you leave this cathedral, that you will carry the most of your musicians with you and find a much larger, grander scope and position among the brighter and more advanced spirits. I feel as though you were in chains here—chained to this church—chained to this cathedral—and when your chains are broken you will soar to immeasurable heights."

"Do you, really?" he asked, much pleased. "Well, I will think it over; and, perhaps, by the time you visit me again, I may be ready to join you. Bring your father along, also. So you will not join my orchestra?"

"No," I answered. "I cannot. It would be taking a step backward, and how could I ever look my dear wife in the face again. I have promised her that I will go onward and discover truth as fast as possible and, returning, transmit it to her."

"Then, after all, you are being led by a woman? I thought it was your father who led you."

"My father leads the way, but my hand clasps that of my wife, and I will never let go that dear hand—no, not throughout eternity."

Liszt threw himself back in his chair with a long-drawn sigh.

"And I," he said, "renounced woman, have looked upon her as a step below me in the scale of being. I suppose you and your father, will call that an error?"

"Decidedly," I asserted. "One of the worst possible errors."

"But the church urged and countenanced it."

"Yes, to its eternal shame," I replied. "Its priests are obliged to renounce women. Its hierarchy is built on a false foundation and will surely totter and fall. Yea, even when it considers itself the strongest. It will vaunt itself and grow large, but the hand of woman, whom it has eternally wronged, shall be the one to undermine its base, and the whole structure will topple and collapse. Man and woman must walk hand in hand, for all that man builds without her must fall—and now I must return to that dear wife, who is still within the mortal form. My father said he would call for me, but tell him that I could not wait longer, and can go and come now without his aid—that is, I do not particularly need him when visiting my wife. Adieu! Adieu!"

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

Mrs. L. A. Barr passed to the higher life from her late residence in Lyon Station, Pa., Sunday, Feb. 28, aged 61 years.

She had been a zealous orthodox church worker, being at the head of all literary work. About eight years ago she learned the beautiful truths of Spiritualism, and thereafter spent the happiest days of her life. She was no phenomena hunter, although she enjoyed the little manifestations she witnessed, but never tired studying the grand philosophy, and seldom lost an opportunity to expound it to unbelievers, and many a hungry soul was comforted by her opening their eyes to the truth.

She was a regular subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, and contributed many beautiful poems thereto. She said The Progressive Thinker was her Bible, and all through her great suffering she derived much solace from its pages.

She leaves a husband and five children, and while we mourn the loss of a good, faithful, self-sacrificing wife and mother, we rejoice that she is free from her suffering, and is happy with her many loved ones in the spirit realm, and we have the blessed assurance that she is near us, and will be our guardian angel.

After lingering many months with the dreaded disease, consumption, she had a beautiful passing over.

The following is her own production, which she requested to be sung at her funeral:

A Midnight Reverie.

I sat at the open window
When the night was calm and still,
As I wrapped my cloak about me;
The air was slightly chill.
'Twas near the hour of midnight,
My eyes were void of sleep;
For the current of pain which I suffered
Had caused these eyes to weep.

I gazed at the peaceful moonbeams,
And, oh, they mocked my plight;
I wished my free spirit were floating
Into the realms of light.
Again I tried to slumber,
When my pain was at its best,
But my downy bed could not hold me,
No rest, no rest, no rest.

Just then a sad reflection
Stole o'er my mind and heart,
As the past loomed up before me,
But I bade the thought depart.
I thought of all the thousands
Of suffering human kind;
How they shrouded with clouds and shadows,
So long they grieved and pined.

My heart went out in pity
For the millions in distress,
When I tried to lift my burden
Its grievous weight seemed less.
And now I see in the distance
A mellow, shimmering light,
And round it the loved ones gather,
All robed in glittering white.

They are beckoning me to hasten,
To step across the tide
Away from all pain and sorrow,
Into my home of light.
Farewell my own dear loved ones,
Oh, do not weep for me;
My spirit is often near you
Although you cannot see.
I'll watch for your home-coming,
On yonder verdant plain;
Rejoice that I'm free from suffering,
Rejoice, we'll meet again.

The Depravity of Man.

This seems to be the one absorbing thought of to-day. Some talk about the "fall of man"—that Adam and Eve sinned. That kind of chaff will not catch many progressive minds of this day and age. Man in his original state was pure and innocent. Although he has all the attributes of nature in him, yet from birth on this material plane is a creature of circumstances, and is controlled altogether by the conditions surrounding him, both seen and unseen.

We will first lay our premises and then we will have a foundation to work upon, and to accomplish anything we must strike at the root of all evil. Then let us make haste and strike at the root of this evil called Depravity.

If man would build up a clear intellect, he must be careful how he poisons his intellect, and take care of his own personality by cultivating a sense of honor to himself, and also by living upon the proper foods, to be in a healthy state, and not polluted with all kinds of diseases. This is a study well worth attention.

If we live upon the animal we will naturally attract such a force (or condition) around as we are in ourselves.

There must be some safeguard throw naround man to protect him. In throwing that safeguard around we must be careful in the material we use. One should not expect protection from a lot of brothels. Surely one would not expect protection from a pack of hungry wolves. That being the case, we must not tempt the wolves. No one can be in a good condition to develop his finer senses if he revels on the animal plane.

Man is the noblest work of creation, and not an automaton, but an intelligent being, and his day of grace is in his own hands, or in other words, "he must work out his own salvation" and realize that life is not an empty dream, but a great reality. When he is fully cognizant of all these facts, and has learned the lessons of attraction and detraction, the more rapid will be his development out of this depraved condition into a higher plane of life, where he will be a bright and shining light.

A VERY IMPORTANT CALL IS MADE.

A GENEROUS OFFER, AND A CALL TO SPIRITUALISTS.

To the Spiritualists at Large:—A generous offer has been made by a prominent Spiritualist in this city to give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., for the benefit of aged and needy mediums, provided the Spiritualists at large will contribute another Thousand Dollars to the same relief fund by the first of June next. The N. S. A. is now paying out a large monthly sum in pensions to worthy mediums; the calls for aid increase and the fund is constantly being depleted. Let every generous soul who has not already done all possible for this worthy object, kindly send contributions, large or small, to the following address, each will be acknowledged with thanks. The generous man who makes the offer desires to be unnamed to the public.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
OR
Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

A Dearth of Good Hymns.

A committee of the Methodist church has been attempting a revision of the hymn-book, with the design of incorporating some new material. After a long and exhaustive search, it has concluded that for the past twenty-five years not a single hymn has been written worthy of a place! The old and solemn hymns have become out of date, and nothing has come to take their place. Fancy singing by the choir has taken the place of congregational singing which united the congregation at the throne of grace. It has been suggested that songs set to rag-time music would be most attractive.

A high authority accounts for the decadence by the doubts and spirit of inquiry, which has unsettled that trusting faith which is necessary for the enthusiasm which must be the fountain source of sacred song. When the tide of thought is questioning the creeds, it is not promotive of hymns expressing or in praise of these creeds.

Whatever explanations may be offered, the fact remains that no new hymns are written, and the old ones that thrilled the souls of the past generation, are failing to please. There is no longer use for "Hark! from the Tombs," and such horror-thrilling verse. The esthetic taste rebels against the childish rhymes of Watts, and Sankey melodies and Moodey eloquence are at a discount. Altogether instead of being cause for lament, it should be for rejoicing. The church is moving ahead. Unconsciously the creeds are being outgrown. Those who expect new hymns to take the place of the old, will be disappointed for these once popular hymns were expressions of ideas and faiths, which once questioned never will return. And the new ideas which are derived from knowledge are destructive to abject worship and praise.

By searching the old learn the new.—Japanese.

Church Theatricals.

Grace Church, Denver, has an up-to-date pastor, the Rev. Chris B. Reisner. "Chris" wanted to start a revival, and he had his own ideas about methods. Some clergymen, most clergymen when they see their church hanging fire, and the pews thinning out, send for an "evangelist," one engaged in the business of saving souls, and hold protracted meetings. They call in neighboring pastors of all denominations, unite in prayer, and get up a "storm center" of hypnotic influence, which takes away the senses, overrides resistance, and brings the stiff-necked unbelievers and scoffing heretics to the anxious seat. When the cyclone passes, before the recovery they divide the spoils, the central church gaining the lion's share.

The Rev. Chris wants to bag all the game. He sees how theaters and wine rooms prosper, and hits on their way of doing business.

One day a few weeks ago, the good people were startled by a new use of the city bill boards. They saw a flaming "eight-sheets" announcing a protracted meeting at Grace Church. At the top was this pertinent question in letters big enough to be read blocks away:

HOW'S YOUR HABITS?
Revival Meeting at Grace Church
NOW!
Stirring Singing. Short speaking. A Home-like Church!
Chris B. Reisner, Pastor.

It is needless to say the church was filled to overflowing, and where there is a crowd, revival work flourishes. A crowd draws a crowd. There is magnetism in a crowd which only wants a tactful leader to direct. The scheme was successful, and next year Chris will have a call from "God" to a larger church, or Grace will raise his salary! No empty pews with such advertising.

Cannot Spiritualists who complain of the meager attendance at their meetings learn a lesson? Not long ago we were informed by a noted lecturer that he traveled something over one hundred miles to an appointment in a large city, when engaged by a society of long standing. It was Saturday and as he approached the city, a newsboy came through the car with the leading paper published in the city to which he was going. He bought a copy, to see the hour he was expected to appear, not for a moment doubting that the meeting was advertised. In vain he looked down the long column of church announcements and miscellaneous meetings. Not a line was there to indicate his coming. He thought there must be some mistake, or that the engagement had been canceled, and of course was troubled thereat. But he was reassured when he found the president of the society awaiting him at the depot. Such attention always stirs the heart of the itinerant, and he ventured to inquire about the "notice" conspicuous by its absence. "Oh, we don't advertise our meetings in the papers any more," said the amiable president. "There are four papers and it costs a dollar each, and we think that it is all-sufficient to announce in our meetings those to follow."

It is needless to say that the attendance was light, and this same president complained of the want of interest of the people, and the difficulty the society had in maintaining the meetings! A very little expense in properly advertising would have filled the hall, for hundreds of people would have been glad to hear the speaker, had they known of his coming. It is not the cause that languishes. There is no want of interest. It is the way it is presented.

Idolatry and Dementia.

Rev. George S. Cable, a Baptist clergyman of Cincinnati, has become demented through too close application to the study of the Bible. For years he has never been seen without the book.—Ex.

Is it any wonder that a person who receives that book, with all its errors and crudities as the inspired word of God, has lost his mind That person who believes this little earth is the center of the material universe; that stars and sun were made expressly to illuminate it; that the whole was constructed out of nothing in six days; that the order of creation was as told in Genesis; that man and woman, and all the animal tribes, in fact, were created and named as there stated; that a universal flood covered the whole earth and the highest mountains; and so on to the end of the book with impossibilities, is certainly on the highway to dementia or insanity.

To teach such narrow conceptions of Deity, and such falsehoods so inconsistant with modern knowledge to youth, instead of being meritorious is highly censurable. To say, "It repented God that he had made man, and it grieved him to his heart," is to lower that character to a level with the age in which it was written, and beneath the cultured thought of a ten-year-old child of to-day.

And then to hug that book to the breast, as we have seen it done in the pulpit, with the declaration that everything between the lids of the sacred volume was inspired by God, is sickening, may we not say disgusting.

Here is a news paragraph, only a few days from Alaska. Read it, ye credulous vulgar, who believe this earth and all the vast universe was called into being less than 6,000 years ago:

Dawson, Alaska, March 8, 1904.—The complete form of a mastodon has been discovered at Hillside, on Quartz creek, near here. It was imbedded thirty-eight feet in the earth, and a steam thawing plant was necessary to unearth it. The hair and the skin are in a perfect state of preservation, although the flesh is somewhat decomposed, and the big tusks, which remain fastened to the skull, are in good condition. It is estimated that the skeleton's value is about $50,000, as there are only one or two of them in existence in as good a condition as this. The body was buried in an old channel, in the zone of almost perpetual frost, which accounts for its preservation.

That mastodon inhabited that frigid zone, back in that ancient time when it was within the tropics. The preservation of its flesh shows that the change from a torrid to a frozen zone was almost immediate. That change may have occurred, for aught we know to the contrary, a million years ago, or even a hundred times that number. So long as it remained frozen, if a thousand millions years, it would be preserved without decay, just as the fossil in the rock is preserved, and which tells the same story as the mastodon, of an almost eternity of years since its change from a mollusk to a fossil.

They who have brains to think will see why intelligent clergymen can no longer present the Bible as the Word of God to cultured audiences. And they will understand why the acceptance of its teachings produces dementia.

An Honest God.

I congratulate Brother Jamieson on his admirable letter in The Progressive Thinker, No. 747, March 19. Although no further proof is necessary, I want to "add my testimony" as Christians say. Christians have developed many things that we learn from and profit by, without endorsing their errors, or aping their follies. It is true that Spiritualism, so far as my knowledge of it can testify, taught naturalism almost without exception; from the very first. Some supernatural mysticism has tainted it since Theosophy, Christian Science, and various occult systems have cast their shadows within its domain. But to-day, as ever, the intellectual concept of unmixed Spiritualism is unqualifiedly opposed to supernaturalism. I distinctly remember reading that expression of Andrew Jackson Davis, "an honest God is the noblest work of man," at least ten years before I ever heard of Robert G. Ingersoll. And for years before his first lectures appeared in print, I quoted the expression from Davis in public and private. I have many times informed admirers of Ingersoll who quoted the expression as an evidence of his superior genius that A. J. Davis uttered those words many years before the great agnostic was known to the general public. There are many things, often quoted by Agnostics, and supposed to belong to their school, which have been borrowed from writers and speakers in Spiritualism. So, too, the "New Thought" people fancy they are leading the world. But there is hardly a thought they put forward, with so much self-satisfaction, that was not familiar to intellectual Spiritualists forty and fifty years ago. In all the mystic teachings, and occult classes, including Theosophic lectures, that have had a part in the intellectual diet at Lily Dale, I have never heard anything that was new to advanced Spiritualists. But each speaker and teacher presents the truth in his or her own way, and the stamp of the individuality may make it seem new to those not familiar with the personal shadings of the speaker. Bro. Jamieson is growing; and he'll get the whole benefit of Spiritualism some time. His criticisms are helpful. LYMAN C. HOWE.

Many items of interest to speakers, mediums and the public are crowded out this week. The large circulation of The Progressive Thinker is well known to those who travel over the country, hence they send their notices to this paper alone, desiring to reach the largest number of readers possible.

Temporal laws rather punish men when they have transgressed than form them to be such as transgress seldomest.—Milton.

HUMANITARIANISM.

Redeeming a Human Soul from the Dark Slums of Vice.

It Is Kindness, Charity, Deeds of Benevolence and Kindly Assistance to the Young that Count in the Spirit Realms.—To Do Good Should Be the Aim of All Spiritualists.

Two months ago a dirty, slangy, rag-tag; to-day a clean-faced, neatly clad, polite boy. Two months ago a quiet, careless, moody youngster; to-day an enthusiastic, studious, ambitious lad.

Two months ago the victim of conditions which he heeded too little to think of delivering himself; to-day surrounded by all the luxuries and comforts that a large fortune can buy.

Two months—the last two months—have seen this transformation of Julius Wiltrax, whose father is locked up in the county jail, sentenced to the penitentiary for a quarter of a century for the murder of little Paul Paszkowski, and whose mother has returned to the dirty neighborhood which held out some sort of a welcome to her when she came to America eleven years ago, and which is her refuge now.

But fate in the form of Peter Van Vlissengen, a wealthy bachelor clubman, has snatched the boy from the dark little world he knew and placed him in a bigger and brighter world, to which his eyes are opening wide. The Julius Wiltrax of to-day is as little like the Julius Wiltrax of two months ago as the blossom is like the bud. The bud of life his bursted and the bloom has quickly opened.

The Transformation.

Julius Wiltrax who was but a dozen years of age last Christmas, is the central figure in one of the most unique sociological experiments ever made. Within him new influences have been set to war with lifelong training, books have been given him with which he may rout his childish ignorance and teach him to forget his gutter slang. His rags have given way to fine clothes. His truthfulness and his honor have been put to test and the boy has not been a disappointment.

Mingled curiosity and indignation caused Peter Van Vlissengen to begin this remarkable experiment. About eight months ago John Wiltrax, the father of Julius, was convicted of the murder of 6-year-old Paul Paszkowski. The confession of Julius, Mr. Van Vlissengen believes, caused the conviction. Before the boy made his confession he had been in the hands of the police for two weeks; he had been separated from his father and mother and from all who knew him. Van Vlissingen, who became greatly interested in the murder trial because of the fact that an 11-year-old boy's confession, secured after so long a time, had been used as evidence, believed that method of securing evidence dangerous to justice and dangerous to the child confessor.

How the Task Was Begun.

When John Wiltrax was sentenced to the penitentiary Mr. Van Vlissingen resolved to take the boy, to develop his mind, his sense of honor, his respect for the truth and his love for justice and then to learn from him, if possible, whether his confession had been a lie or the truth. The boy has all along contended it was a lie, told to secure his mother's release and to unite him with her.

Mr. Van Vlissingen is a bachelor, about 38 years old. He had lived for a long time at the Chicago Athletic club. He knew he must change his place of living to carry on his experiment. He was not in a hurry. He went at the task deliberately. He saw the boy sent to the John Worthy school, but he kept close track to him. When eight months had elapsed he went to the school and asked to take the boy away. The boy, hesitatingly, and with a good many misgivings, went with him.

Then began the experiment which has resulted, in two months' time, in the transformation.

His Former Environment.

Julius Wiltrax was not a waif of the streets, although he may be said to have once been a child of the slums. For several years he lived on Canal street. He has never known any other home than the rooms back of a saloon, the kind of a saloon where Polish workingmen gather at night, the kind of a saloon to which children of the neighborhood are sent to buy beer. When John Wiltrax sold his saloon on Canal street and moved to Hanson Park he became a little more prosperous, but he never was well-to-do. His family lived in the three small rooms at the rear of the bar-room, and Julius, who had never slept in a bed until he was taken to jail, lay each night on a blanket thrown in a corner of the "parlor." The boy was sent to school intermittently. He could spell his way through the stories in the second reader when he went to live with Mr. Van Vlissingen.

At home Julius was a good boy among his kind. He was slangy, dirty, devoid of neatness, and shunned rather than sought study. He played around the bar-room and grew calloused to what he saw there, to the drunkenness, the fighting, the profanity. On the surface it appeared to affect him little. He was not bright, nor yet inordinately dull.

Such was the nature of the boy two months ago.

When Mr. Van Vlissingen took Julius he went to live with his mother, at 2735 Indiana avenue. The home has all the luxuries that money can buy—books, pictures, comforts of every kind. At first the new surroundings awed Julius. He handled the books as if they were sacred; he stood at a distance to look at the pictures on the walls; he shrank from tumbling into the big, downy bed placed in Mr. Van Vlissingen's room especially for him; he sat away in the corner to avoid talking—he was still the Julius Wiltrax of Canal street and of Hanson Park.

Then the barber got hold of the lad. He was introduced to the bathtub. The clothier fitted him with several new suits. The hatter displaced the little torn cap and the "dago" hat with a natty fedora. His grimy sweaters were thrown away, and he was given an overcoat to keep him warm.

These things alone worked a miracle in transforming the appearance of the boy, and it at once worked a wonderful change in his habits and manners. He became more polite and deferential. He grew fond of the mirrors. Within a week he began to give much time and attention to his personal appearance.

No mention of the murder of Paul Paszkowski was made to Julius. Instead of talking much to the boy Mr. Van Vlissengen gave him several books to read. The only stories he had read were those in the first and second readers in the public schools, and when, he fell upon a simple story of adventure he eagerly read through the book. He took an interest in other children, the children of the story books. His little bit of selfishness soon disappeared. He became talkative, told of the boys he knew who knew no world further than the public school or the woods beyond the suburb. He grew sympathetic, and then he began to grow ambitious.

Julius was taken each day to Mr. Van Vlissingen's down town office. He saw other boys at work, and for the first time in his life he asked if he, too, could not "get a job." He said he believed he could earn $3 a week. One day Mr. Van Vlissingen spoke to the boy:

"Julius," he said, "what would you buy if I should give you some money?"

"I wouldn't buy anything," Julius answered. "I would save it until I got a lot of money like you've got."

During the short two months since the rescue of this boy he has shown a wonderful mental growth. At first he was somewhat dull. To make him understand it was necessary to speak to him the simple language, using in a large measure the speech he best understood, which was the rough speech of the barroom. But it is not that way now. He has augmented his vocabulary wonderfully, and he uses words that are new to him and uses them rightly. Of course, some of the slang words still cling to the boy. He says "t'ing" for thing, and when talking rapidly says "dat" for that, but taken all in all the transformation of this boy's speech is as complete as the change in his appearance.

Gained the Boy's Confidence.

Mr. Van Vlissingen's first object in experimenting with Julius was to gain his confidence, to make him feel that he was among friends, to show him that it was for his own and his parents' welfare that he had been lifted out of his old life and dropped into the new. When he did come to appreciate this and had proved by his actions that he is the mental equal of boys born of a much higher station, after he had more than two-thirds of a year to reflect upon what his confession had probably done toward convicting his father, Mr. Van Vlissingen began adroitly questioning him concerning the events preceding and following the murder of Paul Paszkowski. The boy declared his confession was a lie. His memory was perfect. He described every event in minutest detail. And that he was, even in his old environment, sensitive to every impression has been shown by his clear remembrance of the little as well as the important incidents.

Despite the great change that has come over the lad and the fact that he realizes that he owes his transformation to the wealthy man with whom he now lives, Julius wants to return to his old home in the rooms back of the saloon in Hanson Park. He wants his father and mother with him, and though too young to appreciate fully what he means in saying it, he says he would work hard all the rest of his life to prevent any harm befalling his father and mother. When he looks straight into the eyes of the person to whom he is talking and says he would go to live in the worst part of the city if his parents must go there, it is evident that he means it, for this changed child is apparently far more sincere and earnest than the majority of the boys of his age. But if his father does not escape his sentence he will remain with Mr. Van Vlissingen, who says he is willing to help him.

As a sociological experiment, Mr. Van Vlissingen regards his work as a success. The boy has been able, he says, in two months' time to break the bonds that held him to a narrow life, and has taken to thinking and talking of something to do. His views of things have changed as greatly as his lifelong training will allow them to change in so short a time. That his new environment has had an unusual affect upon him there can be not the slightest doubt. The boy had the goodness in him from the first; it has taken this new mode of living in new surroundings and under new influences to bring it out.

The above from the Chicago Inter Ocean contains a most beautiful Divine lesson, which all Spiritualists can read with profit. DIVINE WRIGHT.

OUTSPOKEN WORDS.

PERTINENT REFLECTIONS IN REFERENCE TO THE STATUS OF OUR CAUSE.

The trail of the Trickster Gang in Illinois.

A gentleman who is a close reader of The Progressive Thinker, asks "who conferred all the degrees and titles of Doctor, Professor, Honorable, or Reverend, which I see paraded in your columns? Are not you Spiritualists overfond of claiming honors not legitimately won, but self-assumed by the wearer? Again, is it not distressingly poor taste for the one who is really entitled to use any one of them to sign himself "Doctor" John Smith, "Professor" Thomas Brown, or to advertise himself in printed matter he himself puts out as "Honorable" Timothy Titcomb? A magnetic healer should not write himself down a Doctor of Medicine; a police court lawyer has not the same right to "Honorable" as a governor or member of congress, or judge on the bench. I lately heard of one in your ranks who wears the title of "Professor" because he was formerly a dancing master. One of your "Reverends" is a Prince of Profanity and Obscenity and credited with being a past master of falsehood; one of your "Doctors," I hear, holds a sheepskin from a defunct West Side diploma mill. Respect will be accorded your cause when your people have more of the real thing and less of pretension. Genuine merit does not have to blow its own horn to secure its deserts. Amen!"

We are glad to note the organization of a new society at Bloomington, Ill., self-named the Spiritualists' Association of Bloomington, auxiliary to the State Association. Deaths, differences and indifference long since sounded the requiem of the older local organization in that city, whose few remaining members became weary of, or faint-hearted in, efforts to spread Spiritualism in their own community. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague secured forty-one charter-members of the new body, whose officers are: President, G. J. Erdman; vice-president, Lawson Bradley; secretary, Mrs. Mary B. Bradley, 725 W. Jackson street; treasurer, Wm. Bumgart. Trustees: W. H. Clarke, Mrs. Francis Davidson, Mrs. B. D. Freed. Many of the members are recent converts to Spiritualism and bring to the work the freshness of enthusiasm and the fervor of devotion to the truth. Possibilities of great usefulness await them. Keep active, maintain harmony, shun all fakirs, and the society's mission will be enduring.

The trail of the trickster gangs runs over all Illinois and their methods have done more to dishearten local workers and kill organized efforts than all other reasons combined. They leave disgrace in their wake, while honest investigators are disgusted and drop their interest. But you must not say anything about it? Just keep still and allow the wolves to fatten while they throttle the last vestige of respectability that attaches to the cause of Spiritualism.

Shall spirit messages be taken from our public platforms? This is one of the questions forging to the front for consideration in the near future. Divisions are already noticeable among our earnest and thoughtful workers in relation to its. If done two classes of mediums will be responsible for it—those who use tips, advance agents, obituary notices and blue books to supply them, and those who wink at such things and work side by side with known deceivers without protest. We commend to all message mediums Aesop's little story: "A certain man had a goose which laid him a golden egg every day. Being of a covetous turn he thought if he killed his goose he should come at once at the source of his treasure. So he killed her and cut her open and great was his dismay to find her inside was in no way different to that of another goose."

"MIND FROM MATTER."

Geo. W. Lewis, A. M., Thinks It Unproven.

Prof. Larkin, of Lowe Observatory, states that substantially matter is transmuted into mind. Mr. Lewis, in The Progressive Thinker, No. 744, doubts, on the ground that Prof. L. furnishes insufficient proof. Is it not possible after all that Prof. L. is substantially right?

In some of Charles Dawbarn's recent articles in The Progressive Thinker I think he demonstrates a big lot of the proof. He shows that all action of matter is mind, but is not so called till after reaching a certain stage. At least I so interpret him. Others may read him differently. I think Mr. D. and the Prof. are substantially in agreement. I would take issue with the Prof. in his expression. I think mind is nothing but motion, as all phases of chemistry are nothing but motion. If this is right, then matter could not be transmuted into mind, since transmutation means changing one substance into another substance. I think thought is only motion. The latest text books on Modern Psychology make this view of thought and mind very clear. In this view, thoughts are not things.

As the name of thing is sometimes applied to motion, it would thus be right to call thoughts things. So, defining transmutation as changing the nature of things, and allowing things to be other than substance, then my issue with the Prof. would no longer be an issue.

It was long since scientifically demonstrated that matter is not inert. This means that matter has life, as, in the broadest sense, there would be no motion without life. There would be no so-called natural law without life being involved. When it was first pronounced that sound and heat were motion it was as astounding as it is now to state that mind is motion. It was first thought that electricity was a transference of an unthinkably fine substance. It is now taught that it is the motion of ether, as mind is the motion of air, and wave the motion of water.

Modern Psychology makes it very clear, by elaborate experiment and reasoning, that, with no brain, there would be nothing of the kind of motion denominated mind.

Hudson Tuttle, in the "Arcana of Spiritualism," says, "the Spirit life is an infinite prolongation and evolution of this." It is not thus at all strained to think the spirit brain an evolution of the physical brain.

The five senses were long ago resolved into feeling. There is good authority to the effect that feeling is motion, of myriad types, each type having a special name. Change the position of sitting, or lying, and it will change the thought wave.

Another high authority says, "volition is the essence of mind." Almost any person can feel within himself that volition is motion.

The attraction and repulsion of the atoms is no more specific and definite than is the same law in individuals.

HELP FOR THE SICK AND INFIRM MEDIUMS

FROM THE N. S. A. HEADQUARTERS WASHINGTON, D. C.

List of Contributors—Sympathetic and Tender Hearts Touched—Concerning Law Against Mediums.

To the Editor:—I am now ready to make my first report of progress, in the matter of collecting from the Spiritualists at large the sum of one thousand dollars by the first of June, that we may secure the other thousand dollars that has been generously promised to the N. S. A. for the Mediums' Relief Fund. As has been before stated, the National Association is paying seven mediums the sum of twelve dollars a month, each, towards their support; we would be glad to extend the list to take in many more who are in need of aid, but not till the fund increases can this be done. During the present week, we added another aged medium, a resident of this city, to the list. This beneficiary is eighty-two years of age and has no one to look to for aid but the N. S. A. This would have made the eighth on our list in addition to the complete support of Dr. Slade; but we have just learned of the transition of one of our pensioners, Mrs. Kendall, of Massachusetts, and we have to-day forwarded the sum needed for the burial of her remains. Thus the good work is going on. Our beneficiaries are grateful and appreciative, and we feel that we are not only blessing them, but that everyone who contributes to this work is also blessed by it.

Some of the letters we receive with the contributions to this fund are beautiful. One elderly lady, who is herself an inmate of an "Old Ladies' Home," wrote, that in sending ten dollars to the fund, she felt it a privilege; that she would send more, but all she has left is a sum to bear the expense of cremating her body when the spirit takes its flight.

Another aged friend, now ninety-four years old, who has a home with her relatives, sent us the only three dollars she had, saying she could put it to no better use than to have some poor medium benefited by it. A gentleman in a Home in Pennsylvania, sent his dollar with a good word for the work. Sweet little Alice sent fifty cents for herself and "Precious," and wrote, "I sold my chicken for 23 cents, and put that in with the money." Surely these souls must be blessed with good thoughts and happy dreams, who have unselfishly done what they could; to one and all, we send our hearty thanks. Our contributing list stands as follows:

Friend in Old Ladies' Home, $10; Chas. Bolton, $10; Helen A. Haddox, $10; Thomas C. Smith, $15; J. R. Francis, $5; T. B. Wait, $5; Harmony Circle, South Buffalo, $5; Wm. Schroeder, $5; A Friend, Hamburgh, Iowa, $5; E. W. Brooks, $5; Geo. Seifert, $5; Mrs. P. D. M. Dunn, $5; S. A. George, $5; Samuel J. Day or Way, $5; Mrs. A. J. Mintun, $5; Mrs. M. B. Sprague, $3; Mrs. E. J. Woodward, $2; S. A. Tallmadge, $2; John H. Kramer, $2; Lucy W. Houghton, $1.50; Mrs. Nettie Johnson, $1.50; A Friend, $1; Julia Bunker, $1; August Kleine, $1; Chas. Holkirk, $1; Mrs. A. C. Headley, $1; Arthur Peiffer, $1; T. C. Millard, $1; Mrs. S. S. Rockhill, $1; E. Hughes, $1; A. J. Brooks, $1; Mrs. T. F. Schneitzer, $1; Mrs. C. H. J. Bowen, $1; Geo. L. Ralston, $1; David Frolick, $1; C. H. Phelps, $1; A Friend, Providence, R. I., $1; Abner Sisson, $1; John Lynch, $1; Alice and Precious, 50 cents; A Friend, 50 cents; Mrs. Speck, 25 cents; E. Bsorcious, 25 cents; Two Friends, 15 cents.

Mrs. Zoller and Mrs. Williams, two of our good mediums of Washington, with other talent, gave a public benefit for the Mediums' Fund, at Wonn's Hall, March 10, from which we realized the sum of $12.13; this sum added to the amount of foregoing contributions makes a total of $138.78.

We are greatly encouraged, and we feel that if all who can, will send according to their means, and if other mediums in different cities and towns, will also hold a benefit seance or meeting for this fund, that the required sum of one thousand dollars will be in our treasury by the last of May. Please, friends, do not delay, but send your contributions on as soon as possible. Mr. Ralston, whose donation appears in our list, sends a dollar each month for the mediums' Fund; the one noted is the first from him since the thousand-dollar collection was started.

Now concerning the recent statement of a law to drive mediums from Washington, our legitimate mediums are not molested, nor do they fear; they are pursuing their work as formerly, nor will they be troubled. The new law is to reach the sharpers whose doings are nefarious, and who are no part of Spiritualism and its works; one or two have been run out of town, and all decent people are glad that they have gone.

A Correction In Regard to the Fox Family.

To the Editor:—In your issue of Jan. 9, is an article by Mr. Titus Merritt, purporting to give a short history of the Fox family, which is endorsed by Mr. Hudson Tuttle, and which we think somewhat misleading in conclusion.

Mr. Merritt says Ann Leah Fox was thirty-four years old when the spirit rappings were first heard at Hydesville, on March 31, 1848. The ages of the other girls we admit as correct.

In Mrs. Ann Leah Underhill's book called The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism she says, "at this time, 1848, I was little more than a child." Farther on she says, "when I was married I could count fourteen years and five months."

Her husband's name was Fish. She says, "I was twice a widow before I was twenty-four." On page 230 she says she was married to Calvin Brown, September 10, 1851. Calvin Brown died May 4, 1853, his age nearly 29. See page 252. On page 292 she says, "Mr. Underhill and I were married on the 2nd day of November, 1858." Now if Mrs. Underhill knew what she was talking about she was in her 28th or 29th year when she married Mr. Underhill.

But if Mr. Merritt was right, she must have been in her 45th year. I have always been a great admirer of the Fox family from the start to finish. Ann Leah speaks in glowing terms of her father and never a word of drunken or gambling habits. He was an exemplary man, being class-leader in the M. E. Church.

There is a small band of Spiritualists here, but we are not organized. We have no medium near here, so we have to be contented to read The Progressive Thinker. We think it a great intellectual feast. We hope sometime in the near future to see a medium and a lecturer here. I am 73 years old.

WAKE UP! ILLINOIS.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, the widely known missionaries of the N. S. A., are now ready to work for the promulgation of Spiritualism by organizing local societies of Spiritualists in Illinois. Let general advantage of their availability be taken at once. Do not delay in communicating with them at Rochester, Indiana, until further notice.

The time will soon be gone and your opportunity lost if you daily with indecision. Get out of the graveyard of indifference. GEO. B. WARNE,

A Dearth of Good Hymns.

A committee of the Methodist church has been attempting a revision of the hymn-book, with the design of incorporating some new material. After a long and exhaustive search, it has concluded that for the past twenty-five years not a single hymn has been written worthy of a place! The old and solemn hymns have become out of date, and nothing has come to take their place. Fancy singing by the choir has taken the place of congregational singing which united the congregation at the throne of grace. It has been suggested that songs set to rag-time music would be most attractive.

A high authority accounts for the decadence by the doubts and spirit of inquiry, which has unsettled that trusting faith which is necessary for the enthusiasm which must be the fountain source of sacred song. When the tide of thought is questioning the creeds, it is not promotive of hymns expressing or in praise of these creeds.

Whatever explanations may be offered, the fact remains that no new hymns are written, and the old ones that thrilled the souls of the past generation, are failing to please. There is no longer use for "Hark! from the Tombs," and such horror-thrilling verse. The esthetic taste rebels against the childish rhymes of Watts, and Sankey melodies and Moodey eloquence are at a discount. Altogether instead of being cause for lament, it should be for rejoicing. The church is moving ahead. Unconsciously the creeds are being outgrown. Those who expect new hymns to take the place of the old, will be disappointed for these once popular hymns were expressions of ideas and faiths, which once questioned never will return. And the new ideas which are derived from knowledge are destructive to abject worship and praise.

By searching the old learn the new.—Japanese.

Church Theatricals.

Grace Church, Denver, has an up-to-date pastor, the Rev. Chris B. Reisner. "Chris" wanted to start a revival, and he had his own ideas about methods. Some clergymen, most clergymen when they see their church hanging fire, and the pews thinning out, send for an "evangelist," one engaged in the business of saving souls, and hold protracted meetings. They call in neighboring pastors of all denominations, unite in prayer, and get up a "storm center" of hypnotic influence, which takes away the senses, overrides resistance, and brings the stiff-necked unbelievers and scoffing heretics to the anxious seat. When the cyclone passes, before the recovery they divide the spoils, the central church gaining the lion's share.

The Rev. Chris wants to bag all the game. He sees how theaters and wine rooms prosper, and hits on their way of doing business.

One day a few weeks ago, the good people were startled by a new use of the city bill boards. They saw a flaming "eight-sheets" announcing a protracted meeting at Grace Church. At the top was this pertinent question in letters big enough to be read blocks away:

HOW'S YOUR HABITS?
Revival Meeting at Grace Church
NOW!
Stirring Singing. Short speaking. A Home-like Church!
Chris B. Reisner, Pastor.

It is needless to say the church was filled to overflowing, and where there is a crowd, revival work flourishes. A crowd draws a crowd. There is magnetism in a crowd which only wants a tactful leader to direct. The scheme was successful, and next year Chris will have a call from "God" to a larger church, or Grace will raise his salary! No empty pews with such advertising.

Cannot Spiritualists who complain of the meager attendance at their meetings learn a lesson? Not long ago we were informed by a noted lecturer that he traveled something over one hundred miles to an appointment in a large city, when engaged by a society of long standing. It was Saturday and as he approached the city, a newsboy came through the car with the leading paper published in the city to which he was going. He bought a copy, to see the hour he was expected to appear, not for a moment doubting that the meeting was advertised. In vain he looked down the long column of church announcements and miscellaneous meetings. Not a line was there to indicate his coming. He thought there must be some mistake, or that the engagement had been canceled, and of course was troubled thereat. But he was reassured when he found the president of the society awaiting him at the depot. Such attention always stirs the heart of the itinerant, and he ventured to inquire about the "notice" conspicuous by its absence. "Oh, we don't advertise our meetings in the papers any more," said the amiable president. "There are four papers and it costs a dollar each, and we think that it is all-sufficient to announce in our meetings those to follow."

It is needless to say that the attendance was light, and this same president complained of the want of interest of the people, and the difficulty the society had in maintaining the meetings! A very little expense in properly advertising would have filled the hall, for hundreds of people would have been glad to hear the speaker, had they known of his coming. It is not the cause that languishes. There is no want of interest. It is the way it is presented.

Idolatry and Dementia.

Rev. George S. Cable, a Baptist clergyman of Cincinnati, has become demented through too close application to the study of the Bible. For years he has never been seen without the book. —Ex.

Is it any wonder that a person who receives that book, with all its errors and crudities as the inspired word of God, has lost his mind That person who believes this little earth is the center of the material universe; that stars and sun were made expressly to illuminate it; that the whole was constructed out of nothing in six days; that the order of creation was as told in Genesis; that man and woman, and all the animal tribes, in fact, were created and named as there stated; that a universal flood covered the whole earth and the highest mountains; and so on to the end of the book with impossibilities, is certainly on the highway to dementia or insanity.

To teach such narrow conceptions of Deity, and such falsehoods so inconsistant with modern knowledge to youth, instead of being meritorious is highly censurable. To say, "It repented God that he had made man, and it grieved him to his heart," is to lower that character to a level with the age in which it was written, and beneath the cultured thought of a ten-year-old child of to-day.

And then to hug that book to the breast, as we have seen it done in the pulpit, with the declaration that everything between the lids of the sacred volume was inspired by God, is sickening, may we not say disgusting.

Here is a news paragraph, only a few days from Alaska. Read it, ye credulous vulgar, who believe this earth and all the vast universe was called into being less than 6,000 years ago:

Dawson, Alaska, March 8, 1904.—The complete form of a mastodon has been discovered at Hillside, on Quartz creek, near here. It was imbedded thirty-eight feet in the earth, and a steam thawing plant was necessary to unearth it. The hair and the skin are in a perfect state of preservation, although the flesh is somewhat decomposed, and the big tusks, which remain fastened to the skull, are in good condition. It is estimated that the skeleton's value is about $50,000, as there are only one or two of them in existence in as good a condition as this. The body was buried in an old channel, in the zone of almost perpetual frost, which accounts for its preservation.

That mastodon inhabited that frigid zone, back in that ancient time when it was within the tropics. The preservation of its flesh shows that the change from a torrid to a frozen zone was almost immediate. That change may have occurred, for aught we know to the contrary, a million years ago, or even a hundred times that number. So long as it remained frozen, if a thousand millions years, it would be preserved without decay, just as the fossil in the rock is preserved, and which tells the same story as the mastodon, of an almost eternity of years since its change from a mollusk to a fossil.

They who have brains to think will see why intelligent clergymen can no longer present the Bible as the Word of God to cultured audiences. And they will understand why the acceptance of its teachings produces dementia.

An Honest God.

I congratulate Brother Jamieson on his admirable letter in The Progressive Thinker, No. 747, March 19. Although no further proof is necessary, I want to "add my testimony" as Christians say. Christians have developed many things that we learn from and profit by, without endorsing their errors, or aping their follies. It is true that Spiritualism, so far as my knowledge of it can testify, taught naturalism almost without exception, from the very first. Some supernatural mysticism has tainted it since Theosophy, Christian Science, and various occult systems have cast their shadows within its domain. But to-day, as ever, the intellectual concept of unmixed Spiritualism is unqualifiedly opposed to supernaturalism. I distinctly remember reading that expression of Andrew Jackson Davis, "an honest God is the noblest work of man," at least ten years before I ever heard of Robert G. Ingersoll. And for years before his first lectures appeared in print, I quoted the expression from Davis in public and private. I have many times informed admirers of Ingersoll who quoted the expression as an evidence of his superior genius that A. J. Davis uttered those words many years before the great agnostic was known to the general public. There are many things, often quoted by Agnostics, and supposed to belong to their school, which have been borrowed from writers and speakers in Spiritualism. So, too, the "New Thought" people fancy they are leading the world. But there is hardly a thought they put forward, with so much self-satisfaction, that was not familiar to intellectual Spiritualists forty and fifty years ago. In all the mystic teachings, and occult classes, including Theosophic lectures, that have had a part in the intellectual diet at Lily Dale, I have never heard anything that was now to advanced Spiritualists. But each speaker and teacher presents the truth in his or her own way, and the stamp of the individuality may make it seem new to those not familiar with the personal shadings of the speaker. Bro. Jamieson is growing; and he'll get the whole benefit of Spiritualism some time. His criticisms are helpful. LYMAN C. HOWE.

Many items of interest to speakers, mediums and the public are crowded out this week. The large circulation of The Progressive Thinker is well known to those who travel over the country, hence they send their notices to this paper alone, desiring to reach the largest number of readers possible.

Temporal laws rather punish men when they have transgressed than form them to be such as transgress seldom-est.—Milton.

HUMANITARIANISM.

Redeeming a Human Soul from the Dark Slums of Vice.

It Is Kindness, Charity, Deeds of Benevolence and Kindly Assistance to the Young that Count in the Spirit Realms.—To Do Good Should Be the Aim of All Spiritualists.

Two months ago a dirty, slangy, rag-tag; to-day a clean-faced, neatly clad, polite boy. Two months ago a quiet, careless, moody youngster; to-day an enthusiastic, studious, ambitious lad.

Two months ago the victim of conditions which he heeded too little to think of delivering himself; to-day surrounded by all the luxuries and comforts that a large fortune can buy.

Two months—the last two months—have seen this transformation of Julius Wiltrax, whose father is locked up in the county jail, sentenced to the penitentiary for a quarter of a century for the murder of little Paul Paszkowski, and whose mother has returned to the dirty neighborhood which held out some sort of a welcome to her when she came to America eleven years ago, and which is her refuge now.

But fate in the form of Peter Van Vlissengen, a wealthy bachelor clubman, has snatched the boy from the dark little world he knew and placed him in a bigger and brighter world, to which his eyes are opening wide. The Julius Wiltrax of to-day is as little like the Julius Wiltrax of two months ago as the blossom is like the bud. The bud of life his bursted and the bloom has quickly opened.

The Transformation.

Julius Wiltrax who was but a dozen years of age last Christmas, is the central figure in one of the most unique sociological experiments ever made. Within him new influences have been set to war with lifelong training, books have been given him with which he may rout his childish ignorance and teach him to forget his gutter slang. His rags have given way to fine clothes. His truthfulness and his honor have been put to test and the boy has not been a disappointment.

Mingled curiosity and indignation caused Peter Van Vlissengen to begin this remarkable experiment. About eight months ago John Wiltrax, the father of Julius, was convicted of the murder of 6-year-old Paul Paszkowski. The confession of Julius, Mr. Van Vlissengen believes, caused the conviction. Before the boy made his confession he had been in the hands of the police for two weeks; he had been separated from his father and mother and from all who knew him. Van Vlissingen, who became greatly interested in the murder trial because of the fact that an 11-year-old boy's confession, secured after so long a time, had been used as evidence, believed that method of securing evidence dangerous to justice and dangerous to the child confessor.

How the Task Was Begun.

When John Wiltrax was sentenced to the penitentiary Mr. Van Vlissingen resolved to take the boy, to develop his mind, his sense of honor, his respect for the truth and his love for justice and then to learn from him, if possible, whether his confession had been a lie or the truth. The boy has all along contended it was a lie, told to secure his mother's release and to unite him with her.

Mr. Van Vlissingen is a bachelor, about 38 years old. He had lived for a long time at the Chicago Athletic club. He knew he must change his place of living to carry on his experiment. He was not in a hurry. He went at the task deliberately. He saw the boy sent to the John Worthy school, but he kept close track to him. When eight months had elapsed he went to the school and asked to take the boy away. The boy, hesitatingly, and with a good many misgivings, went with him.

Then began the experiment which has resulted, in two months' time, in the transformation.

His Former Environment.

Julius Wiltrax was not a waif of the streets, although he may be said to have once been a child of the slums. For several years he lived on Canal street. He has never known any other home than the rooms back of a saloon, the kind of a saloon where Polish workingmen gather at night, the kind of a saloon to which children of the neighborhood are sent to buy beer. When John Wiltrax sold his saloon on Canal street and moved to Hanson Park he became a little more prosperous, but he never was well-to-do. His family lived in the three small rooms at the rear of the bar-room, and Julius, who had never slept in a bed until he was taken to jail, lay each night on a blanket thrown in a corner of the "parlor." The boy was sent to school intermittently. He could spell his way through the stories in the second reader when he went to live with Mr. Van Vlissingen.

At home Julius was a good boy among his kind. He was slangy, dirty, devoid of neatness, and shunned rather than sought study. He played around the bar-room and grew calloused to what he saw there, to the drunkenness, the fighting, the profanity. On the surface it appeared to affect him little. He was not bright, nor yet inordinately dull.

Such was the nature of the boy two months ago.

When Mr. Van Vlissingen took Julius he went to live with his mother, at 2735 Indiana avenue. The home has all the luxuries that money can buy—books, pictures, comforts of every kind. At first the new surroundings awed Julius. He handled the books as if they were sacred; he stood at a distance to look at the pictures on the walls; he shrank from tumbling into the big, downy bed placed in Mr. Van Vlissingen's room especially for him; he sat away in the corner to avoid talking—he was still the Julius Wiltrax of Canal street and of Hanson Park.

Then the barber got hold of the lad. He was introduced to the bathtub. The clothier fitted him with several new suits. The hatter displaced the little torn cap and the "dago" hat with a natty fedora. His grimy sweaters were thrown away, and he was given an overcoat to keep him warm.

These things alone worked a miracle in transforming the appearance of the boy, and it at once worked a wonderful change in his habits and manners. He became more polite and deferential. He grew fond of the mirrors. Within a week he began to give much time and attention to his personal appearance.

No mention of the murder of Paul Paszkowski was made to Julius. Instead of talking much to the boy Mr. Van Vlissengen gave him several books to read. The only stories he had read were those in the first and second readers in the public schools, and when, he fell upon a simple story of adventure he eagerly read through the book. He took an interest in other children, the children of the story books. His little bit of selfishness soon disappeared. He became talkative, told of the boys he knew who knew no world further than the public school or the woods beyond the suburb. He grew sympathetic, and then he began to grow ambitious.

Julius was taken each day to Mr. Van Vlissingen's down town office. He saw other boys at work, and for the first time in his life he asked if he, too, could not "get a job." He said he believed he could earn $3 a week. One day Mr. Van Vlissingen spoke to the boy:

"Julius," he said, "what would you buy if I should give you some money?"

"I wouldn't buy anything," Julius answered. "I would save it until I got a lot of money like you've got."

During the short two months since the rescue of this boy he has shown a wonderful mental growth. At first he was somewhat dull. To make him understand it was necessary to speak to him the simple language, using in a large measure the speech he best understood, which was the rough speech of the barroom. But it is not that way now. He has augmented his vocabulary wonderfully, and he uses words that are new to him and uses them rightly. Of course, some of the slang words still cling to the boy. He says "t'ing" for thing, and when talking rapidly says "dat" for that, but taken all in all the transformation of this boy's speech is as complete as the change in his appearance.

Gained the Boy's Confidence.

Mr. Van Vlissingen's first object in experimenting with Julius was to gain his confidence, to make him feel that he was among friends, to show him that it was for his own and his parents' welfare that he had been lifted out of his old life and dropped into the new. When he did come to appreciate this and had proved by his actions that he is the mental equal of boys born of a much higher station, after he had more than two-thirds of a year to reflect upon what his confession had probably done toward convicting his father, Mr. Van Vlissingen began adroitly questioning him concerning the events preceding and following the murder of Paul Paszkowski. The boy declared his confession was a lie. His memory was perfect. He described every event in minutest detail. And that he was, even in his old environment, sensitive to every impression has been shown by his clear remembrance of the little as well as the important incidents.

Despite the great change that has come over the lad and the fact that he realizes that he owes his transformation to the wealthy man with whom he now lives, Julius wants to return to his old home in the rooms back of the saloon in Hanson Park. He wants his father and mother with him, and though too young to appreciate fully what he means in saying it, he says he would work hard all the rest of his life to prevent any harm befalling his father and mother. When he looks straight into the eyes of the person to whom he is talking and says he would go to live in the worst part of the city if his parents must go there, it is evident that he means it, for this changed child is apparently far more sincere and earnest than the majority of the boys of his age. But if his father does not escape his sentence he will remain with Mr. Van Vlissingen, who says he is willing to help him.

As a sociological experiment, Mr. Van Vlissingen regards his work as a success. The boy has been able, he says, in two months' time to break the bonds that held him to a narrow life, and has taken to thinking and talking of something to do. His views of things have changed as greatly as his lifelong training will allow them to change in so short a time. That his new environment has had an unusual affect upon him there can be not the slightest doubt. The boy had the goodness in him from the first; it has taken this new mode of living in new surroundings and under new influences to bring it out.

The above from the Chicago Inter Ocean contains a most beautiful Divine lesson, which all Spiritualists can read with profit. DIVINE WRIGHT.

OUTSPOKEN WORDS.

PERTINENT REFLECTIONS IN REFERENCE TO THE STATUS OF OUR CAUSE.

The trail of the Trickster Gang in Illinois.

A gentleman who is a close reader of The Progressive Thinker, asks "who conferred all the degrees and titles of Doctor, Professor, Honorable, or Reverend, which I see paraded in your columns? Are not you Spiritualists overfond of claiming honors not legitimately won, but self-assumed by the wearer? Again, is it not distressingly poor taste for the one who is really entitled to use any one of them to sign himself "Doctor" John Smith, "Professor" Thomas Brown, or to advertise himself in printed matter he himself puts out as "Honorable" Timothy Titcomb? A magnetic healer should not write himself down a Doctor of Medicine; a police court lawyer has not the same right to "Honorable" as a governor or member of congress, or judge on the bench. I lately heard of one in your ranks who wears the title of "Professor" because he was formerly a dancing master. One of your "Reverends" is a Prince of Profanity and Obscenity and credited with being a past master of falsehood; one of your "Doctors," I hear, holds a sheepskin from a defunct West Side diploma mill. Respect will be accorded your cause when your people have more of the real thing and less of pretension. Genuine merit does not have to blow its own horn to secure its deserts. Amen!"

We are glad to note the organization of a new society at Bloomington, Ill., self-named the Spiritualists' Association of Bloomington, auxiliary to the State Association. Deaths, differences and indifference long since sounded the requiem of the older local organization in that city, whose few remaining members became weary of, or faint-hearted in, efforts to spread Spiritualism in their own community. Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague secured forty-one charter-members of the new body, whose officers are: President, G. J. Erdman; vice-president, Lawson Bradley; secretary, Mrs. Mary B. Bradley, 725 W. Jackson street; treasurer, Wm. Bumgart. Trustees: W. H. Clarke, Mrs. Francis Davidson, Mrs. B. D. Freed. Many of the members are recent converts to Spiritualism and bring to the work the freshness of enthusiasm and the fervor of devotion to the truth. Possibilities of great usefulness await them. Keep active, maintain harmony, shun all fakirs, and the society's mission will be enduring.

The trail of the trickster gangs runs over all Illinois and their methods have done more to dishearten local workers and kill organized efforts than all other reasons combined. They leave disgrace in their wake, while honest investigators are disgusted and drop their interest. But you must not say anything about it? Just keep still and allow the wolves to fatten while they throttle the last vestige of respectability that attaches to the cause of Spiritualism.

Shall spirit messages be taken from our public platforms? This is one of the questions forging to the front for consideration in the near future. Divisions are already noticeable among our earnest and thoughtful workers in relation to its. If done two classes of mediums will be responsible for it—those who use tips, advance agents, obituary notices and blue books to supply them, and those who wink at such things and work side by side with known deceivers without protest. We commend to all message mediums Aesop's little story: "A certain man had a goose which laid him a golden egg every day. Being of a covetous turn he thought if he killed his goose he should come at once at the source of his treasure. So he killed her and cut her open and great was his dismay to find her inside was in no way different to that of another goose."

GEO. B. WARNE, M. D.

"MIND FROM MATTER."

Geo. W. Lewis, A. M., Thinks it Unproven.

Prof. Larkin, of Lowe Observatory, states that substantially matter is transmuted into mind. Mr. Lewis, in The Progressive Thinker, No. 744, doubts, on the ground that Prof. L. furnishes insufficient proof. Is it not possible after all that Prof. L. is substantially right?

In some of Charles Dawbarn's recent articles in The Progressive Thinker I think he demonstrates a big lot of the proof. He shows that all action of matter is mind, but is not so called till after reaching a certain stage. At least I so interpret him. Others may read him differently. I think Mr. D. and the Prof. are substantially in agreement. I would take issue with the Prof. in his expression. I think mind is nothing but motion, as all phases of chemistry are nothing but motion. If this is right, then matter could not be transmuted into mind, since transmutation means changing one substance into another substance. I think thought is only motion. The latest text books on Modern Psychology make this view of thought and mind very clear. In this view, thoughts are not things.

As the name of thing is sometimes applied to motion, it would thus be right to call thoughts things. So, defining transmutation as changing the nature of things, and allowing things to be other than substance, then my issue with the Prof. would no longer be an issue.

It was long since scientifically demonstrated that matter is not inert. This means that matter has life, as, in the broadest sense, there would be no motion without life. There would be no so-called natural law without life being involved. When it was first pronounced that sound and heat were motion it was as astounding as it is now to state that mind is motion. It was first thought that electricity was a transference of an unthinkably fine substance. It is now taught that it is the motion of ether, as mind is the motion of air, and wave the motion of water.

Modern Psychology makes it very clear, by elaborate experiment and reasoning, that, with no brain, there would be nothing of the kind of motion denominated mind.

Hudson Tuttle, in the "Arcana of Spiritualism," says, "the Spirit life is an infinite prolongation and evolution of this." It is not thus at all strained to think the spirit brain an evolution of the physical brain.

The five senses were long ago resolved into feeling. There is good authority to the effect that feeling is motion, of myriad types, each type having a special name. Change the position of sitting, or lying, and it will change the thought wave.

Another high authority says, "volition is the essence of mind." Almost any person can feel within himself that volition is motion.

The attraction and repulsion of the atoms is no more specific and definite than is the same law in individuals.

HELP FOR THE SICK AND INFIRM MEDIUMS

FROM THE N. S. A. HEADQUARTERS WASHINGTON, D. C.

List of Contributors—Sympathetic and Tender Hearts Touched—Concerning Law Against Mediums.

To the Editor:—I am now ready to make my first report of progress, in the matter of collecting from the Spiritualists at large the sum of one thousand dollars by the first of June, that we may secure the other thousand dollars that has been generously promised to the N. S. A. for the Mediums' Relief Fund. As has been before stated, the National Association is paying seven mediums the sum of twelve dollars a month, each, towards their support; we would be glad to extend the list to take in many more who are in need of aid, but not till the fund increases can this be done. During the present week, we added another aged medium, a resident of this city, to the list. This beneficiary is eighty-two years of age and has no one to look to for aid but the N. S. A. This would have made the eighth on our list in addition to the complete support of Dr. Slade; but we have just learned of the transition of one of our pensioners, Mrs. Kendall, of Massachusetts, and we have to-day forwarded the sum needed for the burial of her remains. Thus the good work is going on. Our beneficiaries are grateful and appreciative, and we feel that we are not only blessing them, but that everyone who contributes to this work is also blessed by it.

Some of the letters we receive with the contributions to this fund are beautiful. One elderly lady, who is herself an inmate of an "Old Ladies' Home," wrote, that in sending ten dollars to the fund, she felt it a privilege; that she would send more, but all she has left is a sum to bear the expense of cremating her body when the spirit takes its flight.

Another aged friend, now ninety-four years old, who has a home with her relatives, sent us the only three dollars she had, saying she could put it to no better use than to have some poor medium benefited by it. A gentleman in a Home in Pennsylvania, sent his dollar with a good word for the work. Sweet little Alice sent fifty cents for herself and "Precious," and wrote, "I sold my chicken for 23 cents, and put that in with the money." Surely these souls must be blessed with good thoughts and happy dreams, who have unselfishly done what they could; to one and all, we send our hearty thanks. Our contributing list stands as follows:

Friend in Old Ladies' Home, $10; Chas. Bolton, $10; Helen A. Haddox, $10; Thomas C. Smith, $15; J. R. Francis, $5; T. B. Wait, $5; Harmony Circle, South Buffalo, $5; Wm. Schroeder, $5; A Friend, Hamburgh, Iowa, $5; E. W. Brooks, $5; Geo. Seifert, $5; Mrs. P. E. M. Dunn, $5; S. A. George, $5; Samuel J. Day or Way, $5; Mrs. A. J. Mintun, $5; Mrs. M. B. Sprague, $3; Mrs. E. J. Woodward, $2; S. A. Tallmadge, $2; John H. Kramer, $2; Lucy W. Houghton, $1.50; Mrs. Nettie Johnson, $1.50; A Friend, $1; Julia Bunker, $1; August Kleine, $1; Chas. Holkirk, $1; Mrs. A. C. Headley, $1; Arthur Peiffer, $1; T. C. Millard, $1; Mrs. S. S. Rockhill, $1; E. Hughes, $1; A. J. Brooks, $1; Mrs. T. J. Schneitzer, $1; Mrs. C. H. J. Bowen, $1; Geo. L. Ralston, $1; David Frolick, $1; C. H. Phelps, $1; A Friend, Providence, R. I., $1; Abner Sisson, $1; John Lynch, $1; Alice and Precious, 50 cents; A Friend, 50 cents; Mrs. Speck, 25 cents; E. Bsorcious, 25 cents; Two Friends, 15 cents.

Mrs. Zoller and Mrs. Williams, two of our good mediums of Washington, with other talent, gave a public benefit for the Mediums' Fund, at Wonn's Hall, March 10, from which we realized the sum of $12.13; this sum added to the amount of foregoing contributions makes a total of $138.78.

We are greatly encouraged, and we feel that if all who can, will send according to their means, and if other mediums in different cities and towns, will also hold a benefit seance or meeting for this fund, that the required sum of one thousand dollars will be in our treasury by the last of May. Please, friends, do not delay, but send your contributions on as soon as possible. Mr. Ralston, whose donation appears in our list, sends a dollar each month for the mediums' Fund; the one noted is the first from him since the thousand-dollar collection was started.

Now concerning the recent statement of a law to drive mediums from Washington, our legitimate mediums are not molested, nor do they fear; they are pursuing their work as formerly, nor will they be troubled. The new law is to reach the sharpers whose doings are nefarious, and who are no part of Spiritualism and its works; one or two have been run out of town, and all decent people are glad that they have gone.

A Correction in Regard to the Fox Family.

To the Edtor:—In your issue of Jan. 9, is an article by Mr. Titus Merritt, purporting to give a short history of the Fox family, which is endorsed by Mr. Hudson Tuttle, and which we think somewhat misleading in conclusion.

Mr. Merritt says Ann Leah Fox was thirty-four years old when the spirit rappings were first heard at Hydesville, on March 31, 1848. The ages of the other girls we admit as correct.

In Mrs. Ann Leah Underhill's book called The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism she says, "at this time, 1848, I was little more than a child." Farther on she says, "when I was married I could count fourteen years and five months."

Her husband's name was Fish. She says, "I was twice a widow before I was twenty-four." On page 230 she says she was married to Calvin Brown, September 10, 1851. Calvin Brown died May 4, 1853, his age nearly 29. See page 252. On page 292 she says, "Mr. Underhill and I were married on the 2nd day of November, 1858." Now if Mrs. Underhill knew what she was talking about she was in her 28th or 29th year when she married Mr. Underhill.

But if Mr. Merritt was right, she must have been in her 45th year. I have always been a great admirer of the Fox family from the start to finish. Ann Leah speaks in glowing terms of her father and never a word of drunken or gambling habits. He was an exemplary man, being class-leader in the M. E. Church.

There is a small band of Spiritualists here, but we are not organized. We have no medium near here, so we have to be contented to read The Progressive Thinker. We think it a great intellectual feast. We hope sometime in the near future to see a medium and a lecturer here. I am 73 years old.

"But there is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32:8

Phenomena attending individuals of the human family demonstrate that there is more to man than the flesh and blood that becomes tangible to us. Mind is claimed to be the result of sensation, but then there is something more than the physical organism that manifests thought. We have had occasion to demonstrate that there was an unseen universe existing close about us, and yet beyond our reach. So we shall find if we investigate far enough that there is an unseen person with every person we come in contact with, that this body is only the medium that connects us with the tangible world. Indeed, some of the phenomena of personalities would indicate that we are a multiple of personalities, each independent of the other.

Some writers have assumed that man is composed of at least seven distinct personalities, and that in some cases these personalities are so disrelated and distinct as to be uncognizant of each other. But we have no disposition to discuss this phenomena of altered personalities. There are more common phenomena that will answer our purpose.

Elihu's statement that there is a spirit in man and "the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding," was his apology for attempting to answer Job when his aged and scholarly comrades had failed. He intimated by the expression that there were other sources of information than that reached through the schools; that when a rapport was once established between heaven and earth, the soul might grasp intelligence hitherto inaccessible to it.

A SUBJECTIVE SELF WITHIN US.

The statement, "There is a spirit in man," is the point I want to demonstrate in this chapter. To do this I shall commence with the most simple and yet the most unobserved of customs—handshaking. We shake hands as one of the courtesies of society without a realization of the relation it places us in to each other; yet we realize that there is a closer courtesy in handshaking than in other forms of civility, because of our effort to avoid handshaking with disagreeable persons. But we never question why we treat different individuals different, nor do we stop to think there is a subjective self within us, that has reasons for refusing this courtesy to one set of people, and favor it to another. His ideas as to his reasons for so doing are very confused and unsatisfactory; yet there is a reason, although he does not quite understand what it is. And when we come to analyze it we find it difficult to harmonize it with materialistic views of the relations of individuals to each other. When two persons shake hands with each other, they exchange certain portions of themselves, and carry what they have received away. Now when the elements of two are antagonistic, the one who is most spiritual of the two suffers annoyance from the contact. This we call Magnetism. Psychical emanations would probably be a better definition.

We found in the case of Mons. deRochas' experiments that a sublimated body extends beyond the person for a distance of nine feet, more or less, and that it holds such relations to the nerves, that some very sensitive persons are sensitive to any disturbance to any part of it. This is still more pronounced in the relations between the sexes, each sex being able to distinguish the presence of one of the opposite sex, when they approach each other.

I am not laboring to show spirituality by this illustration, but to demonstrate that we have sensations beyond the physical — something beyond the mere material, a sublimated sense that we are loth to recognize. We generally form our estimate of others from our acquaintance with them, after we have had opportunity to draw conclusions from their deportment and behavior, but often long before we have had opportunity to weigh men and women, some of the more sensitive of us have formed a proper estimate of their characters at the moment of first meeting, and if all have not done so, it is because the subjective self has been so subordinated by the positive self that we are disabled for that duty.

WONDERFUL WORKINGS OF THE SUBJECTIVE SELF.

This subjective self is not subject to the laws of the physical; it can go out and measure characters without being placed to the inconvenience of accumulating a lot of testimony pro and con upon the subject, because it goes into the inner nature of the individual and gathers up these elements which go to make up the individual; sorts them out, estimates their bearings upon each other and strikes a correct balance. It also demonstrates that there is a spirit in man, which has cognizance of facts independent of the senses.

This occult power may be carried so far as to enable one person to think through the brains of another, making the other speak his thought, and perform his will. This is now, incorrectly, I think, called hypnotism. I say incorrectly, because hypnosis means sleep, whereas often no person is so wide-awake as one in this superior condition. They not only have the ability to express the thoughts of another, but they may see long distances, and tell what is going on at different places. This demonstrates that our brains are instruments or tools of thoughts, just as the organ is an instrument of music. The music is not in the organ, but in the mind of the musician.

THE NERVOUS SYSTEM THINKS.

Mind and brain are not co-related parts, belonging to each other, for there may be a brain without a mind, but when the mind is in action there is a waste going on in the brain, just as there is a waste of sulphuric acid and zinc in the development of electricity. But the wear on brain is not from the secretion of thought, but the expression of thought. We think through our brains, and as the Niagara wears away the rock over which it runs, so we wear or dissolve the elements composing our brains.

It is now conceded that the nervous system thinks; that is, we may think through our nervous systems, as we do through our brains.

We co-ordinate all our actions from the medulla.

It is true that the medulla is ruled by the cerebellum, and the cerebellum itself, in a few instances in the human family, by the cerebrum, though I am sorry to say those who show a deference to the reasoning faculties are likely to be unpopular.

With man there are perceptive faculties placed immediately above the eyes which guide much of the action of the brain. In a reptile, whose brain is only double the size of the spinal cord, there are only two little dots where the perceptives should be—enough to lead it out of danger; but with an invertebrata there is no specialized brain of any kind, yet it, too, shrinks from danger, showing that its brain is not centralized, and yet there are the almost imperceptible molecules of mind, of which I have spoken in my chapter on Inorganic Life.

READING WITH THE FINGERS.

This is demonstrated also in the fact that in cases of the loss of one organ, another performs the double duty of responding in place of the eliminated organ. The blind hear more, and the deaf see more and quicker, than those with both these faculties. And in case one has neither faculty, the soul yet finds means of both expressing itself and coming in contact with the outer world.

Hudson Tuttle in his Philosophy of Spirit and the Spirit World, relates the following instance of the ability of a lady to read with her fingers:

"Mr. Sanby relates an instance of a young friend who had the regular functions of the nervous system overthrown by the sudden news of the death of her father. During the attacks peculiar to the disease thus induced, which is known to physicians as the protean order, she possessed all the powers of the somnambulist; the extraordinary powers communicated to the other senses by the temporary suspension of one or two of them, are beyond credibility to those who do not witness it; all colors she can distinguish with the greatest correctness by night or day; and I may safely say on any part of her body as well as her hands. She can not only read with the greatest rapidity any writing that is legible to us, music, etc., with the mere passing of her fingers over it, whether in a dark or light room (for her sight is for the most part suspended under the paroxysm), but she can read any book or writing by simply placing her hand on the pages."

The hand here assumes the part of the eye. It sees and synthesizes the letters of the alphabet and conveys the intelligence thus received to the brain, and thus communicates it to the world outside. This we call psychometry. From this we have only one step to thought transference or mind reading, which is only soul communication. I believe I may say that a majority of the people of this world have this faculty to a greater or less extent, and if they would but search within, instead of casting their faith upon the idle tales of another, they would find it. We subordinate our souls and our spirits—aye, even our manhood to the teachings of another, instead of keeping the inner chambers of our minds and spirits swept and garnished. If we should brush some of the cobwebs from the Great Within we should possibly be able to find the pearl of great price.

LAURA BRIDGEMAN—HER REMARKABLE CAREER.

Laura Bridgeman is a case in point. She was completely blind and deaf. No sound ever reached her ear; no object ever greeted her sight. She was completely shut out from the outer world. To her this world was without form and voiceless as herself. Her magnanimous and philanthropic teacher says of her:

"As soon as she could walk she began to explore the rooms of the house. She became familiar with forms, density, weight and heat, of every article she could lay her hands upon. An attempt was made to give her knowledge of arbitrary signs by which she could interchange thoughts with others. There was one of two ways to be adopted: Either to go on and build up a language of signs which she had already commenced herself or to teach her the purely arbitrary language in common use; that is, to give her a sign for every individual thing, or to give her a knowledge of letters by combinations by which she could express her ideas of the existence, and the mode and condition of the existence of anything. The former would have been easy, but very ineffectual; the latter difficult, but if accomplished, very effectual. I determined, therefore, to try the latter."

After some explanations as to how he made known the elements of sound, and bringing her to understand how certain combinations meant a definite thing, he continued:

"Hitherto the process had been mechanical, and the success about as great as teaching a dog a variety of tricks. The poor child sat in mute amazement, and patiently imitated everything her teacher did. But now the truth began to flash upon her; her intellect began to work; she perceived that here was a way by which she could, herself, make up a sign of anything that was in her mind, and show it to another mind, and at once her countenance lighted up with a human expression. It was no longer a dog or a parrot; it was an immortal soul eagerly seizing upon a link of union with other spirits. I could almost fix upon the moment the truth first dawned upon her mind, and spread its light to her countenance. I saw that the great obstacle was overcome and henceforth nothing but patience, perseverance and plain, straightforward efforts were to be used."

At the end of a year a report of the case was made, from which we select the following extract:

"It has been ascertained beyond a possibility of a doubt that she cannot see a ray of light, cannot hear the least sound, and never exercises her sense of smell if she has any. Thus her mind dwells in darkness and stillness as profound as that of a closed tomb at midnight. Of beautiful sights, sweet sounds, and pleasant odors, she has no perception; nevertheless, she is happy and playful as a lamb, a bird, and the enjoyment of her intellectual faculties, or the acquirements of a new idea, gives her a vivid pleasure, which is plainly marked in her expressive features. In her intellectual character it was plain to observe an insatiable thirst for knowledge and a quick perception of the relation of things. In her moral character, it is beautiful to behold her continued goodness, her keen enjoyment of continued existence, her expansive love, her unhesitating confidence, her sympathy with suffering, her conscientiousness, truthfulness and hopefulness."

Hudson Tuttle, in mentioning this case in his Psychic Science, says:

"Her spirit was locked within her body without the least contact with the world through the most useful senses; yet she not only thought in the same manner as those who possess these senses in perfection. If thought depends on the senses, then the quality of thought should change when deprived of the senses. It is true that when thus fettered in expression, it does not escape the limitations of its surroundings, yet in the struggle we see the indication of the limitless possibilities of the spirit when these are cast aside."

THE SPIRIT AND THE PHYSICAL BODY.

If mind grows out of sensation, and probably it does, it is evident in this instance it is not dependent on sensation. After all, may we not be mistaken as to the mind being an extension of sensation? May it not be possible that sensation is a tactual connection between the mental and the physical? Our souls look out into the world through our eyes, take in the conflicts of the world through our ears, and ascertain its hardness, softness, solidity, or its relative relations by the sense of touch. And when we lose all our sensations but touch our fingers become as the attaena of the groveling insect that feels its way through the world. Thus the fingers become to us all that all the five senses are.

Yet as I have already intimated, the five senses are not all there is of us. As the elements of the body extend beyond the body, so is it demonstrated the spirit may go out of the material and take cognizance of things out of reach of physical sight or hearing. And if the mind can receive and record events at a distance from the body, then the theory of sensation as a primal cause for all our intelligence has been removed. I do not say that the mind may not have been developed in the first place by the senses, but I claim that having thus developed it may pass to that high condition as to be independent of the senses. Further, I do not claim that mind may exist independent and apart from organic structure, but I do hold that it is not at all dependent on our carnate structures for its existence. I believe that there is a sublimated and finer interior to everything tangible to us. If by physical I am to be understood those things tangible to us, and by spiritual those elements in nature which we cannot gauge or measure by physical things, I will say there is a spiritual to everything physical. That we do not discern it, argues nothing against its existence, as I have shown in another place. If such is the case, then there may be a duplication of our senses to correspond. Now we know that we have just such a duplication of at least some of our senses, as we have clairvoyance, clairaudience, psychometry, etc. I do not know but it would be superfluous for me to try to establish the existence of these duplications of the senses, as almost any whose reading has extended beyond the fashionable, trashy literature of the day has read something on these lines.

PREDICTED THE GREAT FIRE IN PARIS. . .

Most of our readers will remember the Bazar de la Charite fire in Paris, May 4th, 1897. On that day at Vouziers, France, a Dr. G. was called to see a peasant woman living out of the village a short distance. It was about 4 o'clock when he reached his patient's bedchamber, and he remained there some 25 or 30 minutes. The woman was very low and he had no hope of saving her. There were present several women. The woman seemed to be in a stupor, and about 20 or 22 minutes after 4, as the doctor was about leaving, roused up, uttering a loud cry, a cry of horror and agitation and began to talk very rapidly.

"Oh, mon Dieu," said she, "It is on fire; yes, fire! And they do not see that it is burning; they see it not yet. Oh, the unfortunate ones. It is burning under the floor and they know nothing of it. Now it is bursting into flames. The poor women, they are rushing to the door. Not that way—you cannot get out that way; there is no door there. The poor young girls, all so beautifully dressed. Save them! Save them! They are on fire."

The peasant women as she repeated these words stated she was out of her head. "She sees purgatory, and there are great rich dressed ladies there, beautifully dressed." But she contiued:

"Save them! They are all crowded together there in the corner. There is one whose hat has just caught fire, and there is another. Oh, all their skirts are in flames. What cries. And all that mass who are falling one on top of another. They could save themselves so easily there—just over there—there is a door there. They have fallen in a pile across the door and they are all ablaze. It is raining flames. Great drops of fire are falling on them, the ceiling is giving away. Oh, those who are in the room behind them—they cannot see how to get out; they are rolling over each other, piling on top of one another. The poor woman—drag her out! For God's sake, drag her out!" The scene lasted thus for five or six miutes, then she said: "The whole place crumbles and disappears in flames."

About 5 o'clock she died. About five minutes before she died the doctor left, and that night repeated the story to several parties. The next day, when the Paris paers came, the whole story was there repeated confirming what the dying woman had so faithfully described. This woman had never been to Paris in her life, and knew nothing about the existence of the Bazar de la Charite, yet she described it and a fire in it as it was actually taking place.

I have already referred to psychometry, but I want to bring up some evidences of it. It is not necessary that I should, for there are sensitives in every community where there are several hundred people who have the ability after a short time experimenting, to take a scrap of manuscript, and simply by holding it in their hands, describe the character and idiosyncrasies of the writer, diagnose his disease, if he has any, and give many points of identification of him. S. B. Brittan, in his thoughtful work, entitled "Man and His Relations," relates the circumstance of a negro who got killed on ice by being thrown violently from what used to be called a whirl-go-round, against a cake of ice, and killed:

"Among the persons who witnessed the accident," he says, "was a physician, who, the same evening, had occasion to prepare some pills for a lady of very delicate organization, and withal exquisitely susceptible of the magnetic influence. Several persons were in the office while he was compounding the medicine, to whom he related all the circumstances of the accident on the river; at the same time he was shaping the pills in his fingers. The doctor sent the pills to his patient, who took them on retiring for the night. The lady had no knowledge of the accident, but on falling asleep, had an unusually vivid dream, which she related on the following morning. She was on the ice, and in the midst of a great company of persons, who were amusing themselves on skates, and otherwise. In the crowd she observed a negro seating himself on a revolving sled, and she declared he was instantly killed by being thrown violently against a cake of ice."

It doesn't matter whether the materialist admits that this lady received this intelligence psychometrically, or had read the doctor's mind, which after all is the same thing, it demonstrates that our senses are not the only avenues of intelligence. When a person says, he will only believe what he can demonstrate to his senses, he confesses himself a bigot. The man who will deny everything beyond his comprehension, thus claiming that he has reached the limit, making boundaries of his own information, beyond which he assumes no other person has ever gone, or can go, assumes he has reached the limit of investigation, and any one professing to have adverse evidence, is either an idiot or insane. Usually they deny all facts presented to them and refuse to put themselves in a way to obtain facts. They discover a relation between mind and brain, therefore when the brain dissolves the mind ceases. Thus their conclusions are all jumped at. I want to say here, and I shall try to explain it in another place, that the history of every event is impressed on objects in the neighborhood where it occurred, and may be read as readily by the psychometrist as Jesus read the history of the Samaritan woman at the well.

A SUPERIOR WORLD ABOUT US.

It was not my intention when I commenced to write this chapter to bring forward so much testimony on the subject, but just to show that there was enough about us, very common matters, too, to show that while we may live in a world of sense, there is a superior world all about us. The matters I have been referring to are too well established to require that further evidence should be produced. If any one will take up any annual Report of the Society for Psychical Research, he will find abundance of evidences on the matters herein considered and attested beyond question. The person who lays claims to scientific attainments and refuses to read this periodical is taking more credit on himself than he is entitled to.

But there is another kind of evidence, to which I wish to refer at the risk of being sneered at by that pseudo wise class who continually congratulate themselves over the superiority of their attainments. That is dreams. I don't mean all dreams, or even the half of our dreams, but I do mean to say that occasionally men and women dream of things that are sometimes remarkably correct; and in their dreams they visit places and are seen at the places they visit by other parties. The following was reported to The Progressive Thinker a few years ago:

REMARKABLE STATEMENT BY MR. WARDWELL.

"My brother, who is a Methodist clergyman, now stationed at Castine, Maine, relates one instance that has occurred in his life, in a manner substantially as follows:

"'While attending the Divinity School at Cambridge, Mass., some twelve or fifteen years ago, I left my folks at Bucksport, Me. During my absence my family had moved from the house where I had left them to another in a different section of the village, a house I had never entered. I retired to bed one night, and, as I supposed, fell into a sound slumber. Immediately I found myself, as I supposed, going somewhere, and came suddenly to a full realization that I was on Elm street, in Bucksport. I passed by the Congregational church, cast my eyes up to the town clock on the Methodist Church, and it being moonlight distinctly saw that it was nearly 11 o'clock. On the opposite corner I met three lady acquaintances whom I saluted with the courtesies of the evening, and passed on to the house to which my family had moved, went in, passed upstairs, looked at the children quietly sleeping in bed, in which my wife slept, awoke her, and sat upon the side of the bed and talked with her. My return to Cambridge appeared much to me as my going away. I was going somewhere and soon realized that I was wide awake. The experience was too real to forget, so I wrote my wife next day a full account of it. Now my wife had had a dream the same night, and a most singular coincidence connected with it, and wrote me next day an account of it, our letters relating to the same affair crossing each other on their way to and from Bucksport. She wrote that I came home, and she found me standing beside her bed, as she awoke, and that I seated myself on the side of the bed, and we talked. The next morning Annie H. came in, and the first thing she said was, "Where is V?'

"'In Cambridge, I suppose, replied my wife.

"Miss H. playfully remarked: 'I know better. He saw me coming and has hid to give me a scare.'

"'Why,' said my wife, 'he certainly is not at home.'

"'I don't care what you say,' continued Miss H., 'I know he is at home, for N., G. and myself were returning home quite late from a call, and we saw V. coming down here on the corner of the street, and spoke to him, and I'm going to find him if he is in the house.'

"Well, she didn't find me, because I was not there. But I would like to have this matter explained. I dreamed I was in Bucksport, Me., two hundred miles distant from where I actually was. I spoke to three persons on the street; these three persons recognize me, and one speaks of it to a fourth, who dreams she saw and talked with me. Was I there? or was I not?"

It is a question whether this was all a dream, since all his experiences are corroborated by the statements of three waking persons, and another who had reason to believe she was awake. This case does not stand alone, as I could multiply cases if it were necessary, all going to show that something in man may go out in our sleep and may appear at great distances from the physical body.

These phenomena must be explained by the materialist in harmony with his theory. As we are willing to meet him on his own ground and discuss the matter from his own evidences, so he should be willing to meet us on our evidences. If men may project themselves and become objective apparitions at a distance, then a physical body is not necessary to a continued existence. If the spirit or double may exist out of the body for an hour or half an hour, why may it not continue eternally?

A SECOND THOUGHT.

The morning after the last issue of the Truth Seeker had gone to press we received the following letter from our Postmaster:

"Office of the Postmaster, New York, N. Y.,
"February 29, 1904.

"Publisher of the Truth Seeker—Dear Sir:—Referring to previous correspondence relative to the mailing of your publication to Canada, I beg to inform you that the Hon. First Assistant Postmaster-General directs this office to advise you that the appeal made in your letter of the 28th ultimo has been determined in your favor, and to accept for mailing copies addressed to Canadian destinations, provided, of course, such copies are not otherwise unmailable on account of any article or advertisement the circulation of which is forbidden in the domestic mails, and the publication does not violate the copyright laws of Canada.

"Appropriate instructions have been issued, and the copies may be presented for mailing as second-class matter at your convenience.

"Very respectfully,
C. VAN COTT, Postmaster.
"Per E. M. Morgan, Assistant Postmaster."

We are glad that the Hon. Robert J. Wynne has so thoughtfully considered the case, for it seems that the matter did not leave his office at all. The Truth Seeker has never violated any law or regulation of the postoffice of this country, and we do not see why or how it can be lawfully thrown out of the mail. What the Canadians do is, of course, beyond the cognizance of this government. Their postal laws are still more peculiar than ours.

There is no more to be said as to the matter as affected by the action of the Washington post-office authorities. At the request of a foreign official they did us an injustice and have repaired it. Something, however, may well be said of the Canadian officials. The Hon. William Mulock is now Postmaster-General of Canada. He is empowered by the Canadian law to refuse mail privileges to any journal he sees fit. There are quite a number of journals published in this country to which his department refuses mail privileges. But that suppression, we have learned, does not suppress. Those journals can be found in all the cities and towns where the demand for them justifies the expense of sending them to Canada by express. The absurdity of prohibiting them is apparent. But to include the Truth Seeker among that class of publications is still more absurd, and we have asked the Hon. William Mulock to rescind the order of his predecessor, Sir Adolphe Caron, as to this paper. When we receive his answer our readers shall know what it is. —The Truth Seeker.

A man cannot have an idea of perfection in another which he was never sensible of in himself.—Steele.

THE LYCEUM BANNER.

The Lyceum Banner of late unfurled,
We wish might float o'er all the world,
To teach the truth to all the young
Of every kindred race and tongue.

We know that every girl and boy
Its truthful teachings would enjoy
For none more zealous seek for truth
Than hungry-minded eager youth.

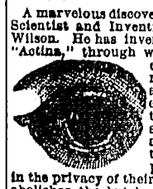
The lyceum is the wisest means
For teaching children in their teens—
When older grown they'll not depart
From facts and truths they learned by heart.

They need just such a lesson tract
To teach them how to think and act,
And soon we'll know, by style and manner,
What children read the Lyceum Banner.

To make each child more wise and kind,
It seeks to stir both heart and mind;
To help each grow, instead of shrink,
It tries to make them feel and think.

To educate is not to stuff—
To memorise is not enough;—
Each child is but a helpless elf
Until it learns to think itself.

The Banner kindly shows the way
By which each one its part may play,
But when the way is clearly shown,
The part it plays must be its own.



Long may the Lyceum Banner wave,
Upheld by zeal both true and brave;
And may its work to make all free
Be crowned with glorious victory!

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. O. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all affctions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T.B., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storyettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest:"

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

To the Spiritualists of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri.

We expect to turn our faces westward March 1. We desire to hear from societies and individuals who would like our services.

Please write us at once if you would like our services, or we may have passed you by before we hear from you. Address us until March 10, Rochester, Ind. Home address 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y.

MISSIONARIES' NOTICE.—All mail for E. W. and C. A. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, should be addressed for the present as follows: No. 725 West Jackson street, Bloomington, Ill.

Marguerite St. Omer Briggs is open to receive calls for societies for April, May and June, or for camp engagements, as speaker, psychometrist and message medium. Can be addressed at 415 Thirteenth street, Beaver, Falls, Pa.

Dr. N. F. Ravlin, of Baltimore, is open for camp-meeting engagements, and with societies for the coming season. His labors in Baltimore as pastor of the First Spiritual Church, will close the last Sunday in May. Address 308 North Green street, Baltimore, Md.

Bangor, Me.—Following a union revival held by several ministers of the Holiness society, Beal's Island, Jonesport, is reported to be in a state of religious frenzy and fanaticism that threatens to result in the loss of many lives. One man who rowed over from the association to Jonesport said preparations were being made to kill a number of children as a sacrifice, the parents believing they had the power to restore them to life. Several deputy sheriffs and numerous citizens have gone to the island and will remain there until the excitement subsides. It is declared that the people are destroying their watches, rings, jewelry and other articles of ornament. The storekeepers are throwing away their cigars and tobacco and various animals are being sacrificed, all at the dictates of the ministers, who say that unless this is done all will be damned. A cat and dog were slaughtered recently and their blood scattered about the building of worship. Mrs. Beals, a member of the flock, arose at a meeting and declared that she had been told by the Supreme Being to kill her baby. The meeting thereupon broke up amid riotous scenes. Mrs. Beals was committed to an insane asylum.—Detroit Times.

E. W. White writes from Columbus, Ohio: "Mrs. White and myself are here for the month of March, and are open for engagements in Michigan for April. Communications may be addressed either in care of the General Delivery, this place, or to our home address, 292 Harrison avenue, Detroit, Mich."

Mrs. A. B. Strozier writes: "Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, of Chicago, held meetings at Willis, Texas., March 7, 8, 9 and 10. The hall was crowded and great interest was manifested by all present. Her occult powers are great. Everyone was fully satisfied with her readings. We are anxious to have her with us again."

A protest against the appropriation of any money for chaplains in the service of the United States has been made to the Senate by James Seldon Cowdon, of 524 Tenth street Northwest. The petition has been laid before the Senate by President pro tem. Frye, and referred to the Appropriations Committee. Mr. Cowdon "protests against the appropriation of any public money for any religious purpose whatsoever, and especially against the pay for chaplains." He enclosed a circular of the Washington Secular League, calling for "the complete separation of church and state."—Washington Post.

Fifty-Sixth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, at the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas., March 31 and April 1 and 2. "Freezing a Mother-in-Law." "Dr. Cure All." Bazaar each afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Appropriate tableaux each night. Afternoon admission, free; night admission, 25 cents.

Correspondent writes: "The 56th anversary of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated at U. V. U. hall, by the First Spiritualist Society of Findlay, Ohio, with music, and flowers as an offering to our loved ones gone before. Frank T. Ripley, the old-time worker, under the control of his guides will deliver the anniversary address. The Spiritualists of the surrounding towns have been invited. Celebration will occur on Sunday, March 27, at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m."

J. M. White writes from Creighton, Mo.: "Last fall I paid a visit to this place and held a few meetings with good results. On my return here I find that the friends have gone to work with a good strong developing circle, and are meeting with excellent results, thus proving the value of the homo circle.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

VICTOR VOGEL'S ORCHESTRA AND BAND.—First-class music furnished on all occasions. Office and residence, 4217 Champlain avenue, Chicago, Ill. Telephone Oakland 1111. Mr. Vogel is a well-known Spiritualist of Chicago and a natural born musician. His orchestra will be most excellent at dances and entertainments given by Spiritualists, and will add much to the interest of the occasion. As a special feature of his musical work, he introduces many original novelties—imitations of birds, etc.

We are having Sunday afternoon meetings for the public, and expect to have a great many interested by the time the guides are ready to open the other seances to the public. There are many mediums here before the public to-day, who can6t give as good results as are being obtained by these people in their home seances. Spontaneous manifestations in the homes are a prominent feature of the growth here. My stay here is for an indefinite time, but am open to engage for camp-meetings for the coming season."

Mrs. Elsie Hornbeck's address is 1806 Colfax street, Evanston, Ill. She is Frances E. Willard's medium.

Mrs. Lily LeSieur writes: "At our next Band of Harmony meeting, Masonic Temple, hall No. 512, April 7th, afternoon and part of the evening will be devoted to hearing from the members and interested friends, telling us of their experiences, how they earned a dollar, to contribute to the Band of Harmony. We have had a good attendance all winter despite the severe weather we have had for several months; only a few more meetings before vacation. Don't miss our dollar party, as it is one of the best meetings of the year. Our friends will please bring refreshments as usual."

Jennie C. Paine write: "Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, state missionary, came to the society at West Potsdam, N. Y., on the 13th of February, where she remained ten days, giving five lectures in the Methodist church at that place. Her lectures were well attended. I wish everyone could hear Mrs. Reynolds, as she leaves such good impressions behind her. We are hoping to have her with us again in the 'good old summer time.'"

Emily E. Philp writes: "The Englewood Spiritual Union held a social test circle at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Speight, on Saturday, March 12. It was largely attended. A fine program was rendered. A number of mediums were present and many messages were given. Then refreshments were served. We are preparing for an Indian campfire and council, to be held at Hopkins' Hall, 528 W. Sixty-third street on Saturday, Mar. 26. All are cordially welcome. Admission, 15 cents. Come and have a pleasant evening. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt will speak for us on March 20 and 27."

Mrs. Stella Nicum writes from Dayton, Ohio: "Mr. W. V. Nicum spoke for the Dayton Spiritual Society, Sunday, March 13; his subject, 'The man who is to be.' A large, enthusiastic, and responsive audience was in attendance. The society is in a prosperous condition. The president, Frank M. Brown, announced that he had secured the Gorman Hall, a larger and better place for meetings. Mrs. R. S. Parkess rendered beautifully two solos which were greatly appreciated and enjoyed by all. Mr. Nicum will again address the society, Sunday, March 20."

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, vice-president of the Illinois State Association, writes President Warne under date of Feb. 19, from Dunedin, New Zealand: "The theater in Melbourne, seating two thousand, was packed to the doors each night, and they told me they were the largest meetings they had had for over twenty years. I speak here next Sunday. This is a Scotch town altogether, about 48,000. The following two Sundays I speak in Wellington, which is the capital of New Zealand, and the last Sunday I am at Auckland. I sail for America on March 18, and will be in Chicago about the 15th or 20th of April. The Australians are years behind the times, and lack in physical and mental development. The Americans are far ahead of them. They have the good sense, however, to know this and everybody has high ideas of America. Vegetation here is simply marvelous and the climate in New Zealand all you could desire. I am keeping my eyes open to learn all I can. I feel I live a year in a day and a lifetime in a month."

J. H. Clark writes from Spokane, Wash.: "The First Society of Spiritualists have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. F. French; first vice-president, Mr. Anderson; second vice-president, Mrs. M. E. Connell; secretary, G. H. Clark; treasurer, Mr. J. French; trustees, Mr. Watkins, Mrs. F. Jennes, Mr. J. Poull, Mr. F. Nitzell and Mr. F. W. Butts. Mrs. Florence Heckman, of Tacoma, Wash., has lectured for one society for the past two months, and is still with us. She is a first-class speaker and has given the best of satisfaction. She will remain here indefinitely. All societies wishing a thorough spiritual worker will do well to correspond with her. Address her at Metropole Block, Room K, Spokane, Wash."

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes: "The Lynn (Mass.) Spiritualists Association, Alex Cairdy, M. D., president, will celebrate the fifty-sixth anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism at Cadet Hall, on Sunday, March 27. Exercises will be continuous from 12:30 to 10 p. m. Children's lyceum will hold their session at 12:30; at 2:30 Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, assisted by Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Mamie Helyett and Mrs. Maud Litch; entertainment by children from the lyceum at 4; supper at 5; song service at 6; concert by Chase's orchestra at 6:30; regular service with Mr. and Mrs. Kates, speakers, at 7:30. Other special features will be arranged later. No efforts will be spared to make this one of the finest anniversaries ever held by this society. Mr. and Mrs. Kates are the speakers for this month and the first Sunday in April, and are attracting large audiences by the excellence of their work, both in lectures and communications."

J. S. Taylor writes from Cheshire, Ct.: "I read an item in The Progressive Thinker, relating to sick and disabled mediums; that they should be provided for. A suggestion was made that if every Spiritualist in the United States would give one cent each, a good work would be accomplished. Now, let Spiritualists get a move on themselves and establish some method by which this can be done. I will submit this plan: Let every place where Spiritualist meetings are held have a small contribution box put up, plainly to be seen and plainly labeled, so people would know its object; then very few persons would fail to drop in a cent, a dime, or a dollar, or even more. Now I believe this plan could be made successful; if Spiritualists will agitate this subject and bring it to a focus a good work can be accomplished. Why not?"

DOINGS IN TEXAS:—Mrs. Laura B. Payne, vice-president of the Texas State Association of Spiritualists and one of the most energetic workers in the ranks of spiritual workers, has been making a tour of the north and central parts of Texas and has pleased the people wherever she ministered, with her eloquent and logical lectures. Mrs. Alice Baker and son Milton are doing acceptable work in Dallas. Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, state missionary, is doing thoroughly satisfactory work in the southern part of the state. Other sections of the state desiring her services should address Secretary LeRoy Hutchings, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas. Dr. J. M. Temple has also received missionary certificate from the State and is doing a work that is highly commendable; he has lately been in Beaumont, the great oil center, where some weeks ago Mrs. Kayner organized a society, and the people speak in high terms of his message work. The society in Galveston, where President John W. Ring presides, is making elaborate preparations for a celebration of the anniversary—bazaar and entertainments, March 31 and April 1 and 2. Donations for the bazaar should be addressed to Mrs. H. Heyne, Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Texas.

Oscar A. Edgerly's engagements as made for the next six months are as follows: During the month of April he will speak at various places in New England. For May he will serve the First Spiritualist Society of Hamilton, Ontario. During June he will fill engagements with the First Spiritualist Society of Conneaut, Ohio. From July 24 to 28 inclusive he is engaged with the Freeville (N. Y.) camp association. From July 31 until August 28 inclusive, he is engaged to act as chairman at Grand Ledge, Mich., camp-meeting. September 3 and 4 are engaged with the Wentworth (Ohio) association at its Grove meeting. Mr. Edgerly still has the first three Sundays of July at his disposal. He will be pleased to hear from societies desiring to engage a trance speaker and test medium for the season of 1904 and 1905. Home address, 29 Public Square, Lima, Ohio.

Mrs. M. A. Morrell, of Kent, Ohio, writes: "I have just read Dr. Bland's beautiful book, 'In the World Celestial,' and I wish to express my high appreciation of the grand truths contained therein. May the author long be spared to spiritually illumine the pathway of blind and starving humanity. That book is destined to do a great work in enlightening the world. Heaven speed the day when its grand truths shall be spread broadcast. I shall pass this book around among the preachers. One has already said he would be delighted to read it."

S. J. Bliss writes: "We as Spiritualists have resurrected an interest in the Spiritualists society in Lansing, Mich., once more, and hope we may keep up the same in the meetings. Dr. Marvin has kindly given his services as speaker for the past three Sunday evenings. Mrs. Fuller, of Grand Rapids, has been with us two Sundays, giving tests from the rostrum. Her messages were remarkably correct. She gave every name correctly, and the cause of death. The meetings were very well attended. Mrs. Richard Spencer, trumpet medium of Grand Rapids, Mich., gave a trumpet seance with good results. Thirty-nine people attended. Rev. Stocking, among many others, received some very convincing messages from spirit friends. Mrs. Spencer went from here to Grand Ledge to fill an appointment there. She made an engagement to be here at Lansing the first of April to give a seance, two evenings."

The First Spiritualist Society of Galesburg, Ill., is a newly organized body and auxiliary to the State Association. Fifteen members are enrolled upon its charter application, and they associated themselves together for work without going to the trouble and expense of having a missionary of either the state or national associations come upon their field for that purpose. This spontaneity of their effort is an example for the unorganized Spiritualists all over Illinois and the nation. Single individuals can do little for the cause, but a few determined ones banded together soon attract attention, create interest, command respect and gain a hearing for the truth. Mr. and Mrs. Wm Weakley, of No. 38 North Pearl street, of the College City, are active promoters of this local movement. Slowly, surely and perseveringly is their rule of action.

F. H. Rice writes from Boston, Mass.: "Thursday evening, March 10, will be long remembered by those present at the meeting of the Ladies Spiritualistic Industrial Society. There was present a large and very appreciative audience to listen to those who entertained. Among those whose remarks were both pleasing and instructive, were Mr. J. J. Morse, wife and daughter, of London, Eng.; Dr. Huott, with some very satisfactory readings; the Misses Stewart, Blair and Murphy, with pleasing songs; Mrs. Dix with well-timed remarks and a poem; Mr. and Mrs. Scott whose remarks are always interesting, and Mrs. Chapin and Mrs. Whitlock. Do not forget Mr. C. E. Watkins and his illustrated lecture, Mar 17, and also the dance, March 24. On March 31, instead of the anniversary services being held by the society a supper will be served at the hall, from 5 to 7 p. m., to all those wishing to partake. All are cordially invited."

J. S. Roberts writes from Louisville, Ky.: "I regard The Progressive Thinker as one of the best papers now published in the United States, giving the people information of their condition in that life of which they had formerly been kept in such profound ignorance. The cause is growing in our city. Even the ministers of the Christian churches are getting their eyes open. One preacher, a Baptist, in December last, asked himself a couple of questions in a sermon, and answered them himself as follows: 'What is heaven?' he answered by saying that it was a figure of speech. Then he asked, 'What is hell?' He answered by saying it is also a figure of speech; that when we die we go down or we go up, and when we get there, we are not asked whether we came from Wall street or whether we dressed in fine clothes, or whether we came over in our rags. Another Baptist minister preaching a funeral sermon, said: 'The friends of the dead one are around the corpse. You ought not to weep; your friends are all around you.'"

Hans Mettke writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "Following a very strong impression, I write to you to thank you for your excellent paper, in which I have enjoyed amongst many other articles, the story of Mrs. Ida L. Lewis, with whom I correspond and who has become a very dear sister to me. The letters of Carlyle Petersilea are fascinating to me, because I am also a musician, a teacher, as well as a performer on cello, piano, and with voice (baritone), and am a great admirer of Liszt, whose spirit is with me occasionally, as I have been told. I look forward with great pleasure to the next number, which will tell us about the interview between Liszt and Petersilea in the great cathedral. Looking through a musical magazine from Boston I saw the notice of Petersilea's passing away June 11, in Tropico, his home near Los Angeles. Nothing can please me more than such news from the spirit realms about the arisen masters in music. I wish you the very best success with all your efforts for the good of humanity, and shall always speak the best word possible for The Progressive Thinker, which I remail to a poor friend in Los Angeles. May the good angels help you in your work and remove all obstacles to success."

REED'S LAKE CAMP.—Sadie Herrick writes: "The many friends who attended the Reed's Lake Camp last year, will, I believe, be sorry to learn there will be no camp there this year. The camp grounds and belongings are now in the hands of W. S. Gunn, the chief Promoter, and now largest stockholder, who for reasons known only to himself, has made it impossible for the association to hold meetings this year. At a stockholders' meeting last month, Mr. Gunn personally stated that his son wished his withdrawal, wholly on account of his health and advanced age, but that he was not pressing his claims in any way against the association, and wished us a successful camp the coming summer. The following Tuesday, contrary to his word, I, as secretary, was informed through an attorney that Mr. Gunn had ordered a foreclosure at once. A more beautiful spot could not be found in the state of Michigan, and last year on our opening day the grounds were dedicated to Spiritualism, and angel blessings were invoked in the name of Mr. Gunn's spirit wife and son, and now, I wonder, do angels weep? The brightest prospects were ahead of us, many letters were received making inquiries regarding camp this summer. Mrs. Gillespie, Mrs. Kaufman. Mrs. Walton, and Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond were booked, and others in view; but I am obliged to cancel these dates. A street car line is surveyed right past the gate, consequently envious eyes were on us, and this may explain, a representative of Chautauqua has been over the grounds, and in correspondence for some time concerning them."

Dr. Ballard writes: "At the Church of Higher Forces, Indiana avenue and Thirty-fifth street, last Sunday evening, many new faces together with the regular attendants and members listened to the first of three lectures to be given by Mrs. A. E. Palmer on the subject, 'The New Creation.' Mrs. Palmer is an intelligent and fine off-hand speaker. Conditions were put right by the beautiful music dispensed by the Caldwell family. Our medium, Mrs. Grace Aitken, gave many soul-stirring tests. Another one of those sociable socials was given at our medium's home last Saturday night. The parlors were filled to overflowing. The usual programme, consisting of psychic and palm reading, music, etc. The next social occurs on the 26th inst. Recognizing the masterly manner in which the editor of The Progressive Thinker is endeavoring to life the veil of skepticism and bigotry, some kind of a move should be instituted to force the paper into the unwilling homes, especially where dwell the young, for through the young can be demonstrated the truths of spirit communion. How many worn-out and wearied hearts could find solace in this cold, selfish world, could their eyes be opened to our beautiful philosophy that they might come in touch with their dear loved ones who have passed to the home unclouded with selfishness. The happiness to be derived from the conviction that those who have preceded us across the dark river known as death, is beyond mortal man to understand or to estimate. Nature every minute of our life is endeavoring to force us to take advantage of the situation, and still there is the procrastinating indifference that has deprived many a heart-broken mother and disconsolate wife from again holding communion with their loved one. I wish it were in my power to make everyone understand here what they must understand after their transition, the truthfulness of the life hereafter and the return of the spirit to this earth's plane. I would not rest until I had gathered every living human being within the folds of our beautiful faith. All roads lead to a spiritual meeting every Sunday afternoon and evening, including our own church."

Mrs. Alice Gehring, the well-known medium, writes that after April 1 she will locate in Denver, Colo. Her home address will be given later on. Mrs. Gehring is regarded by many as a most excellent slate-writing and trumpet medium.

D. A. Richardson, of St. Joe Station, Ind., criticises the actions of lecturers and trumpet mediums, because their prices are so high that the friends there cannot well raise the amount to secure their services. He thinks they ought to come down in price somewhat.

Lorenzo Worthing writes: "The officers of the Sunapee Lake Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association, N. H., met in Knights of Honor hall, on Hanover street, Manchester, N. H., Feb. 28, to make arrangements for their annual camp-meeting, at Blodgett's Landing, N. H., the coming season. The officers are: President, John Gage, of Henniker, N. H.; vice-president, Mrs. Effie I Webster, Lynn, Mass.; secretary, Lorenzo Worthen, of Hillsboro Br., N. H.; treasurer, Mrs. Harriet Comstock, of Newport, N. H.; business committee are Thomas Burpee, of Sutton, N. H.; H. E. Gove, of Riverdale, N. H., and Mrs. Harriet Comstock, of Newport. N. H. Everything looks for success for the coming camp-meeting and all are in harmony to make it successful."

D. Parker writes from Stoneham, Mass.: "I am pleased to see you take some notice of the Catholics. I am glad there is one paper that is not run by the pope. We are coming to pretty serious times. I think the school question will be the most important one in the next presidential election. I think Archbishop Ireland is laying back and sawing wood. He will wake up before the convention."

OUR PREMIUM BOOKS.

OUR TEN BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL PREMIUM BOOKS.

An Opportunity Never Before Offered on This Earth to Form the Nucleus of a Splendid Library Along Spiritualistic, Psychic and Ethical Lines of Thought—A System of Humanitarian Work Originated Solely by The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "Seers of the Ages, or, Spiritualism Past and Present," by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills an exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have TEN Premium Books only, and you can select them as follows:

Any three of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the ten premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Lastly, all of these TEN valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.10, something never before equalled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

TEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.10.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.

6—The Next World Interviewed.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an oportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS! CLUBS!

To Clubs of ten or more we offer the following terms to each one: The Progressive Thinker one year, and ONE of the following books, $1.15: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science"; "Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present"; "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands"; "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," Vol. 3. The one who gets up the Club will be entitled to the paper one year free, and any two of the books he may select among our list of premiums.

J. Iliff Mettler writes from Great Falls, Montana: "Where is Farmer Riley, W. W. Aber and many other so-called and widely-advertised materializing mediums, that they do not accept Hale's offer of $1,000 for just one spirit form. Such an opportunity as this should not be alowed to pass without being accepted, unless, unless the reason is that they know they are unable to deliver the goods. It is proper that they make an explanation of their reasons for the benefit of the readers of The Progressive Thinker."

James T. Whitehead writes: "Why does not some medium grab the $1,000 of Mr. Hale, of Los Angeles, Cal., by presenting a genuine materialization? Every medium holds seances for pay. Why is it that all will avoid large pay when it is offered. Mr. Hale's offer is no bluff, it is no bet, it is simply an offer for some medium to hold a seance at his home. Any materializing medium will hold a circle if at least $25 is guaranteed as a compensation, if results are obtained. Then why kick when $1,000 is offered? Why will not some medium simply 'try?' It looks suspicious—no one willing to try to 'capture' the $1,000, while so many are obtaining from $10 to $15 every night they hold a seance.'

Peter J. Loeb writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "The Society of Sacred Communion will hold its first services on Easter Sunday evening, and every Sunday thereafter at 1246 Bedford avenue, opposite Halsey street. Our good sister, Miss E. C. Resch, young and gifted medium, will demonstrate spirit return. This society will have the Bible as its foundation, and in connection with the church, there has been a Cross and Crown Aid Society formed to support the work. The doors will be thrown open to the public. All will be welcome."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Our monthly party will be at Lakeside Hall, Saturday evening, Mar 26. Our booths have been nearly all taken, and you will have your choice of some of the finest psychics in the city, to give you a free reading from 8 to 9, when the dancing will begin, and Vogel's orchestra will discourse their finest. Lunch will be served in the dining-room above. Prof. Smith, the fun-maker, will be present also. Mr. Hurlburt, the 'funny man,' Dr. Hall, from Columbus, Ohio, will make you laugh. Little Gracie will give specialty dances; also Florence Daniels, our angel singer, will give some fine sketches and special music. All this beautiful program we have prepared to entertain you for the small sum of 25 cents."

Dr. G. Lester Lane writes from Boston, Mass.: "With all my soul I wish you gigantic and nobly-earned success."

H. F. Coates writes: "Sunday, March 27, will be devoted to celebrating the anniversary of Modern Spiritualism at Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Our programme will consist of speeches by different ones, music and recitations. We expect a good time, both afternoon and evening. Our hall is large. You will find a welcome. Come."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society was highly favored with a fine talk from Walter DeVoe, on the 6th of March, and Dr. Agnes Chester, See on the 13. We need more of such new-thought speakers. They will wake the people up and set them thinking. On March 20, Mr. Marsh stirred up the ideas, and gave a fine lecture. On Mar. 27, Dr. P. M. Harmon will occupy the rostrum, and probably will answer questions. Services every Sunday evening at 7:45 at 323 East 55th street.

W. H. Pelkey writes from Iowa: "I have heard more or less talk among the Spiritualists, and have seen occasional mention in The Progressive Thinker, regarding having a camp-meeting during all or a part of the time during the St. Louis Exposition; at some point near the fair grounds. Now that everyone is making definite plans regarding their visit to St. Louis this summer, I think it is time that it should be known to all Spiritualists exactly what is to be done regarding this matter, and I believe the best way to have it known to all is through The Progressive Thinker." There was some talk of having a Spiritualist camp-meeting near the St. Louis Fair grounds, but the project, we have been informed, has been abandoned; the attractions at the Fair will be too great to make a success of any camp-meeting.

N. A. St. Clair writes from Toronto, Canada: "A very successful Quilt Social was given by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Toronto Spiritualist Association, on the 24th ult., netting a handsome sum for the benefit of the Association. The entertainment was given under the direction and leadership of Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, whose unsparing efforts made it a complete success. Mrs. Harding is now serving the Hamilton (Ont.) Society during the month of March. An innovation in connection with the recent funeral of the late Mrs. A. W. Sparling was a marked feature in the history of the Toronto Spiritualist Association. A union service was held at the residence of Mr. Sparling, comprising the Methodist and Spiritualist services. Notwithstanding the marked contrast, the Spiritualist service proved very impressive, appropriate and acceptable to the large and mixed (orthodox and Spiritualist) assemblage present. Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes, of Boston, serves the T. S. A. during March and April. She has met with a cordial reception, and is having excellent success. The association would be pleased to hear from mediums who desire engagements for 1905; also from test mediums who desire an engagement for July and August, 1904."

H. D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., paid Chicago a flying visit a few days ago. He has been lecturing at Toledo, Ohio.

Dr. G. B. Warne, president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, and vice-president of the N. S. A., will lecture in Buffalo, N. Y., next Sunday.

Mrs. Sarah A. Walters writes: "I would be pleased to make engagements with societies wishing a speaker and test medium. It is essential that they address me at once. I will also officiate at weddings and funerals. Address me at Fulton, N. Y."

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Mercy Catlin left the earthly casket, Feb. 27, in Concordia, Kansas, aged 85 years. A spiritual funeral, well attended marked the respect in which the dear old lady was held by her friends and neighbors. B. R. A.

Mrs. Emma Benjamin Knapp of Crystal Lake, Ill., beloved wife of T. M. Knapp, passed to the realms above, March 10. She was laid to rest at Oakridge Cemetery, Chicago, Ill., March 12. Her age was 55 years.

A short time before she passed away she told those gatherd at her bedside that she had a vision of her home beyond. She said there was a straight path over a dark mountainous way, with great chasms of darkness on both who cannot give as good results as are end was a glorious bright place, and a gateway all illuminated and sparkling. People glorified were passing in. She said, "I walked straight up to the gateway; then a gentle voice said, 'Not yet; you must wait just a little longer before you enter.'" She entered the gateway just a few days after this beautiful vision was shown her.

CRITICAL.

For the Benefit of Seekers After Signs and Wonders.

Seldom do I take part in controversy. In your very instructive paper of late in various issues we read views condemnatory of materialization. I get tired of hearing about the would-be-convinced people. From my extended experience and I have spent 750 evenings with this particular phenomena, I would not go across the street to convince anyone. I have so stated. Progress goes on just the same. The trouble with the American people is this, all that they can see is matter, or as the boy says, "as far as his nose." Read Laura Fixen's article in March 5th issue of The Progressive Thinker; it will give you something to think about. I personally told Mrs. Fixen when she asked me about that country (Australia), the people out there are intellectual and became Spiritualists by reading its philosophy, and therefore have an intellectual understanding of the truth. That is why 2,000 people will go and listen to a speaker. Out here, all the people think about is a ten-cent show, or some physical seance, materialization, etc., and these very people have to go to a circle or seance once or twice a month in order to be continuously Spiritualist (or, rather, spiritist).

My advice to mediums is to pay no attention to the would-be know-it-alls, but educate your visitors in this, the grandest philosophy in the world, and let your test and other so-called Spiritualists, sit and cultivate mediumship for four or five years themselves, then see if they would pay any attention to these challenges of $1,000.

Study the various books upon the subject, read your spiritual papers, and philosophize with yourself, and then you will not be like the boy at school, when he is studying histology; he tells his teacher that he can't see what use it has in a study of medicine, but when he studies it out for himself he finds his mistake, and so you will find that when you have done some hard thinking, you will not expect your mother to materialize with the old-fashioned skirt, store teeth and pox marks and thousands of other nonsensical things; but rather listen to their teaching, and their individuality. Let us continue to be students always, and not demand a medium to do something of which philosophy you don't know anything.

I am a lover of truth and I don't advocate fraud but no man or woman can understand Latin in one week, or any other subject. Give a medium the benefit of your doubt, if you are dissatisfied, sit in your own home, with your family, then perhaps you will feel more kindly towards mediums. Your readers must know materialization is true, that has been scientifically proven. Once a fact, always a fact. I don't care how many frauds your readers have found; what everybody wants to know, are the various phenomena of Spiritualism true?

By reading our philosophy you will understand why Spiritualism is growing throughout the civilized world.

How Some of Our Readers Can Make Money.

Having read of the success of some of your readers selling Dish-washers, I have tried the work with wonderful success. I have not made less than $6.00 any day for the last six months. The Mound City Dish-washer gives good satisfaction and every family wants one. A lady can wash and dry the dishes without removing her gloves and can do the work in two minutes. I got my sample machine from the Mound City Dish-Washing Co., of St. Louis, Mo. I used it to take orders and sold 12 Dish-washers the first day. The Mound City Dish-Washer Co. will start you. Write them for particulars. Ladies can do as well as men. JOHN F. M.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Felix: Q. Is the theory of "Subjective and Objective Minds," of Dr. Hudson, generally accepted by scientific men?

A. Dr. Hudson was by no means the originator of this hypothesis. In various forms it has been advocated under various names in explanation of psychic phenomena which could not be otherwise accounted for. He elaborated the conjectures of his predecessors and formulated an hypothesis which was seized with avidity by those who were opposed to Spiritualism, not for its scientific value, but because by it Spiritualism could be plausibly explained.

The theory of a "Subconscious Mind" as distinct from the common or "Objective," has no foundation in science, and in the form presented by Dr. Hudson, has not been received by scientific men as a part of science.

There is a subconsciousness as has been explained in preceding numbers of The Progressive Thinker. Its origin is in the nerve centers outside the brain, in the reflex system of nerves and this is fully accepted by scientists. This is, however, entirely distinct from the hypothesis under consideration.

It must be borne in mind that if the spiritual origin of the manifestations be admitted, there is nothing for the hypothesis as presented by Dr. Hudson to explain, and no reason for its being. Its purpose is to explain them by other than spiritual means and if it fails in this it is superfluous.

The enemies of Spiritualism were waiting and praying for a weapon wherewith to destroy it, and this "subconscious mind," intangible as moonshine, a name covering with mystery and ignorance, which the masses do not and cannot understand, gave the most plausible and effective to their hands. Because of this it has been exploitered, extravagantly praised and pushed into notoriety, not because it has its foundation in science or has been accepted by scientific men.

A. A. B.: Q. I notice in advertisements of medicines for the cure of catarrh, and some other diseases, there are representations of the microbes or germs. Are these representations, truthful?

Q. We presume this correspondent refers to the illustrations which call attention to advertisements of "patent medicines." If so, nothing could be more untruthful and misleading. There are germs of disease, and microbes, but there is nothing in the realm of life like the beings represented by these unscrupulous advertisers. The pictures are drawn from imagination, and are as arrant deceptions and frauds as the remedies.

Medium: Q. I have received a circular letter, promising to develop me into an extraordinary medium in ten lessons, for which I am to give one dollar each. The writer says that he can do this for any one, and teach any one how they can control any one they please. Can he fulfill these promises?

A. There is no doubt about his being able to develop any one credulous enough to trust him, out of the ten dollars, but as to his developing mediumship by a series of lessons, he promises what in its very nature is impossible. If it were possible to teach any one how to control whomever they desired, it would be criminal to impart that knowledge to those who would use it for selfish and the lowest purposes. Fortunately there is no such knowledge to impart, and those who advertise that they have this power and can impart it to whoever pays them for it, promises what they know they cannot perform.

Archibald Scott: Q. I have received a circular of a promising mining scheme and the offer of stock at a price, which if it advances as the prospectus promises, will be a bonanza for me. Do you know anything about the ——— Co?

A. We omit the name of this wonderfully promising company which may or may not have a claim staked out in the mountains which hedge in the Arctic circle. On general principles, a mine that is valuable does not go begging for stock buyers. A prospective mine, may if in honest hands, develop great wealth, and the stockholders reap large reward for their investment. But in this case, they take the risk of the mine proving valueless. It is a game of chance, and more often than otherwise the claim proves worthless. Such an enterprise may be perfectly legitimate. Some one locates a claim, which he thinks is promising. No one knows or can know its value until it is worked. The development costs money, and he sells stock to raise the means to sink a shaft. If rich ore is struck those who purchase shares find their investment profitable. If nothing more than barren rock is reached, they find the balance on the wrong side. They bet on the result and lost. To one honest transaction there are many fraudulent. The property exploitered, may be an abandoned shaft, or a claim contested. A company is chartered, and the capital placed at millions of dollars as the value of a claim or claims that may not be worth a nickel. The promoters never intend to develop the mines. Why should they engage in the uncertain business of mining when they hold in their hands the certainty of selling the stock to the dupes who believe their flowery prospectus and flattering promises? It is such stock that is offered for half par price with the guarantee that in six months or a year it will be at par, and not a share sold for less! In vain will the purchasers of such stock await dividends, paid from the sale to other dupes. The money received goes into the promoter's pocket, not to the development of the property. The stock is worth less than the good sheets of paper used in printing. The most amazing thing is that any person with ordinary sense, can be inveigled into throwing away their money in such schemes of transparent rascality.

If this correspondent has an attack of "get-rich-quick" fever, and has so much money he does not know what to do with it, we know of no way in which he can rid himself of it more quickly, and at the same time cure himself of the fever.

J. L. C.: Q. Can dematerialization of spirit forms be simulated by trickery? Is this phase of mediumship in any way detrimental to health? Why do not honest materializing mediums accept the offer made by the Los Angeles parties?

A. With the conditions which are demanded by most "materializing mediums" complied with, there is no barrier imposed to deception, and the simulation of spirit forms is the easiest jugglery. How easy, is shown by the many fakirs who have succeeded for a longer or shorter time in passing off the most blundering tricks for genuine spirit appearances. The genuine medium cannot be injured in health, by the temperate use of this phase, but we have seen the wreck of health in those who practiced deception, presumably from the nervous strain and anxiety experienced by the constant fear of exposure.

The reasons why materializing mediums do not accept the offer of the Los Angeles parties, is for each one to state, but if genuine, it is a duty they owe to themselves and the cause to at once accept, with the reservation that essential conditions must be complied with. If the offer is not accepted, they must understand that before the tribunal of the world and all Spiritualists, they convict themselves. The challenge is straightforward and honest, and should be taken in the same spirit. If materialization is possible, here is an opportunity to set the fact before the world, and silence opposition.

It is useless to hedge and plead excuses. There are no excuses. If the challenge is not taken, materialization will disappear from the evidences of Spiritualism.

There have been many offers before, made in antagonism, and imposing at the start conditions which would negative successful results. This, however, is by fair-minded men, who are willing to give the amount to be convinced. The medium who accepts, should demand that one-half the members of the seance be Spiritualists, or friends, who would take no further part than give magnetic support, and assure a correct report of the test. The conditions to be imposed should be settled beforehand, with the understanding that several seances are to be held, that conclusions may not be hastily reached because of failure at first.

If the manifestations attending the Medium Aber, be as reported, some of the least which occur at his every seance, would win the prize and demonstrate the possibility of the appearance of spirit forms.

Three Days' Mass-Meeting at St. Paul, Minn.

Dear Sir:—The three days' mass-meeting of the Minnesota State Spiritual Association, held in St. Paul, Minn., February 26, 27 and 28, 1904, is now a thing of the past, but the grand, beautiful and uplifting thoughts that were expressed by the different speakers will live through all eternity, and I feel from the remarks that I heard expressed that they have been the means of starting a large number to realize the grand truth that the cause of Spiritualism is trying to bring to the people.

The mass-meeting was opened with conference conducted by Mrs. C. D. Pruden, and in her remarks she said: "I believe in Theosophy to a certain extent. Christian Science is trying to steal our thunder, the churches are disturbed over our work and influence, but I also believe there are as many inspired men in the pulpits to-day as in Spiritualism."

Mr. Joseph P. Whitwell expressed the thought that Spiritualism teaches fearlessness, teaches its adherent to grasp the value of true manhood, it taught its children the natural consequence of wrong-doing, the value of right-doing and that of good life really brings happiness.

Mrs. Lowell gave the lecture in the afternoon, and her remarks were strong and to the point.

Mr. Will J. Erwood, of La Crosse, Wis., was with us and delivered the lectures at the three evening services, and this good, true co-worker should certainly be loved and appreciated by all Spiritualists, for he is doing a grand work. His subject for Friday evening was Spiritualism, World-Wide and World-Old. He dwelt at length on the moral and ethical side of Spiritualism. Saturday evening he lectured on "The influence of environment on the evolution of character," and his Sunday evening lecture was on "Gleams of Immortality."

The other speakers were Mrs. Joseph P. Whitwell, Mrs. Asa Talcott, Mrs. C. D. Pruden and Mrs. Carrie Tryon. Mrs. Eva McCoy, of Marshalltown, Iowa, was with us and gave mesages and readings every evening, and her work is so well known that it needs no comment. The other mediums that gave greetings were Mrs. E. Sauer, Prof. Zeno, Mrs. Jacobs and Brother Erwood.

To me the most impressive service was the Children's Lyceum, but as Brother Erwood said he would write an article upon this point, I will say that it certainly was an educator.

GOLDWIN SMITH

A Great Literary Light Scintillates This Week.

SABATIER ON RELIGIONS OF AUTHORITY—MR. SMITH'S COMMENT ON THE REMARKABLE BOOK—POINTS RAISED THAT WILL ATTRACT ATTENTION EVERYWHERE AMONG THE GREAT THINKERS.

Momentous [as set forth by Mr. Goldwin Smith in the N. Y. Sun] is the crisis in the history of man when all authoritative religion, consecrated tradition fails him, and he is left to work out by his own reason the problem of his origin, state and destiny. With the religions of authority would pass away the whole order of Spiritual guides, leaving, as the departure of the clergy certainly would, an incalculable void not only in our theological, but in our moral and social system. To such a crisis, however, according to M. Sabatier's work on "Religions of Authority," to the importance of which you have called my attention, we have come.

The days of all the religions of authority, in M. Sabatier's opinion, are numbered. He appears to think that the papacy is likely to last the longest. it has a wonderfully strong organization, an imposing and fasciuating ritual, a legendary antiquity founded on a mythical list of early popes. It still commands the allegiance of masses like the Italian peasantry, who can believe in the miracle of St. Januarius and the Holy House of Loretto, or the crowds of pilgrims to Lourdes so vividly painted by Zola. Of educated adherents it retains few, of scientific adherents almost none. It offers in these times of religious confusion and perplexity a tempting haven to the weak and doubting mind. It has in its own despite gained in spiritual character and respectability by severance from the temporal power. As an anti-revolutionary influence it is rather regarded with complacency by the conservative statesmen of Europe. Guizot seemed to have this feeling about it. But now, loaded with such a burden of historical memories as weighs on the character of no other power, from the foundation of the Inquisition and the massacre of the Albigenses down to the persecution of the Huguenots, it is going into its last struggle against reason and progress. In its Syllabus it bids defiance to liberty of conscience and of opinion, to the right of the state, to the great gains of and principles of modern civilization. It has consummated its pretensions by the usurpation of infallibility and its defiance of fact by proclaiming the Immaculate Conception. It is in the fatal hands of the Jesuit or of ambitious priests like Manning and fanatics like De Maistre. Catholics who keep terms with reason, such as Montalembert, Lacordaire, and the seceders from the Council of Rome, have morally withdrawn from it and are under its ban. The holiest and highest of Catholics of former days would now be almost heretics and in danger of having to do penance for absolution. Once more let it be said that the Papacy is not the Catholic Church, nor is the Catholic Church the Papacy. The Papacy is an Italian usurpation, always in Italian hands. Papal theocracy is the creation of Hildebrand. The Patriarchs of the two imperial cities, Rome and Constantinople, had a natural supremacy, which in the case of the Patriarch of Rome was enhanced by the tradition of empire without being overshadowed by the presence of the imperial power. The authority of Gregory the Great was spiritual and moral. He did not, like Hildebrand, aspire to theocracy and proclaim his supremacy over all the powers of the world. Unless we keep this distinction in view, a great body of truly Christian character and life which never ceased to exist within the pale of the Papacy may otherwise be confounded with the action of anti-Christian power.

That the Papacy was not the whole of the Catholic Church we have a reminder in another religion of authority, with which M. Sabatier does not deal. The Eastern Church, now mainly represented by the Church of Russia, has from the beginning remained separate from that which is represented by the Papacy in spite of an enforced, transitory and nugatory act of submision. In this case the authority is largely national, the identity of Church and State in Russia being complete, so that the Procurator of the Holy Synod is a very important Minister of State. The Church is Holy Russia, and Holy Russia is the Church. The immobility of the system verges or torpor. Naturally, those who break away from it break away with a vengeance. The orthodoxy of Pobyedonostseff gives birth to heterodoxy in Tolstoi and something more than heterodoxy in Kropotkin. Here also the incipient forces of dissolution may be seen.

Yet another religion of authority unnoticed by M. Sabatier is Anglicanism, the religion of the State Church of England. A State Church that of England is, in the fullest sense of the term. Its doctrines and ritual are an amalgam of the personal bias of Henry VIII., who died half a Catholic, though in revolt against the Papacy; the policy of his executors; a new aristocracy which looked for support to the party of progress against the ancient nobility; and that of the opportunist statesmen of Elizabeth, which was one of theological compromise. In the history of the Church of England the several elements of its composition predominate in turn: first the Genevan, which gives birth to the Lambeth Articles and the delegation to the Calvinistic Synod of Dort; then, under Laud, the Catholic; again, after a long period of torpor, the Genevan or evangelical; and now once more in a large section of the clergy the Catholic, though a small section is rationalist. The authority in this case is the Parliament, which originally settled the system without any real regard to Convocation, but in those times itself was Anglican, whereas it is now made up of men of all religions and of none. Such a state of things, if the Church of England is a spiritual body, cannot last long. She may be forced to break her political bonds, and dissolution will ensue.

Practically the most important of the subjects with which M. Sabatier deals is the Protestant authority, that of the Bible. He seems fully to embrace the judgments of criticism, literary and historical.

"In what condition do we actually find the text of the Old Testament Scriptures. Instead of the homogeneity formerly attributed to them, we find in the historic books a fabric woven of documents yet more ancient, whose vari-colored threads are easily distinguishable, making clear that the Pentateuch, and the books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel and Kings assumed their present form at a very late date. Furthermore, what a medley of disarrangements do we find in the prophecies of Isaiah, Zachariah and Jeremiah, to speak only of those whose want of connection is visible to the unaided eye! What is the book of Psalms, if not the Psalter of the Jewish synagogue, made up of hymns of very different periods, already gathered into earlier collections? What shall we say under this head of Proverbs and the entire Solomonic literature, offshoots of which are found down to the second century before our era?" (p. 236.)

M. Sabatier abandons in plain terms the supernatural notion of the Bible and confesses that it is no longer the infallible rule of religious thought, the oracle of absolute and eternal truth. Yet he treats it still as the great aliment and support of spiritual life. He says that it "continues to discharge a double and essential function in the life of churches, families and individuals, that it is no longer a code, but remains a testimony; is no longer a law, but is a means of grace; does not prescribe the scientific formulas of faith, but does remain the historic fountain of Christian knowledge." Luther, he says, and Calvin, used the Bible freely as spiritual food without bibliolatry; Luther disparaging the Epistle of James, Calvin looking askance on the Apocalypse. To which it might be replied, in the first place, that Luther and Calvin brought with them confirmed convictions from their previous religious state; in the second place, that they were not common men. Simple souls can hardly be expected to make use of a great course of literature as food for spiritual appetite developed within themselves, injecting into it their personal thoughts and emotion. They want authority, or at least a positive rule such as they believed they had in the Bible, believing it to be throughout the inspired Word of God.

How, after the admissions which M. Sabatier has made, can he continue to speak of "the Bible" at all? How can he persevere in treating as a book that which is in fact a collection of books, independent of each other and varying greatly in character, spirit and value? The Old Testament is the whole of ancient Hebrew literature bound up together. The idea of God differs materially in different parts of it. The God of Genesis is anthropomorphic, and the special deity of a patriarchal family. The God of Joshua and Judges is intensely tribal, sanctioning in the interest of the tribe wholesale massacre, as in the case of the Canaanites; treason, as in the case of Rahab; assassination, as in the case of Sisera; inflicting plagues upon all the Egyptians to make Pharaoh let the favored tribe go. This deity and the deity who makes Balaam's ass speak, who sends a lying spirit to Ahab, who makes bears kill a party of boys for mocking Elisha, is a conception surely lower than that of Deity in the second Isaiah, in Amos, in the more spiritual Psalms. The Psalms are manifestly by different hands. The spirit of some of them is gentle and beautiful. That of others is the reverse.

An attempt has been made to impart unity to the collection and at the same time to explain away its moral difficulties and give it as a whole the character of a progressive revelation by the help of that universal key, the principle of evolution. But no process of evolution can really be discerned. In the latest books of the series, those of Ezra and Nehemiah, there reigns the narrowest tribalism; a tribalism which commands the Hebrew to put away his Gentile wife. Of the book of Esther it is only necessary to say that it is the source of the feast of Purim.

If the Hebrew literature is divested of the character of revelation, is it certain that we owe it more, morally and spiritually, than we owe the Greek? The Greek Pantheon, of course, is morally low, though sunny and inspiring to art. But the deity of Socrates, though indistinct and hardly personal, is sublimely moral. In the Hebrew literature there is, on the whole, not much of tenderness or affection. We have Ruth, it is true, we have the friendship of David and Jonathan, and some other touches of humanity. But there is no parting of Hector and Andromache. There is no Antigone or Alcestis. There is nothing like the sentiment of the Greek epitaph in which the dead wife says that of the two babes which she bore her husband, one she keeps with her as the pledge of his love, and the other she has left to be the prop of his old age. Sternness, amounting often to grimness, seems to be the general tone of the Old Testament.

Then, upon what principle would M. Sabatier say, if belief in a supernatural revelation is to be discarded, are we to bind up the New Testament with the Old. The Deity and the religion of the Old Testament are tribal, and tribal they remain to the last. The God of the Chosen People might be destined to extend his sway over all the nations of the earth; but He would still be the God of the Chosen People. The God of the New Testament is the equal Father of all. The son of the carpenter at Nazareth would, of course, accept uncritically the sacred books of His nation with their traditional interpretations. But it was not from the narrative of the plagues of Egypt or of the slaughter of the Canaanites that he drew His ideas of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. If the religion of the New Testament owed its birth to that of the Old Testament, it was rather by repulsion than by production. Of the alleged prophecies of Jesus in the Old Testament, criticism has entirely disposed. The spirit of the Old Testament crucified the Teacher of the New. Nothing is more dear or familiar to us than the Bible as it is. Great indeed would be the wrench of parting with it. Yet nothing surely can be less rational than a volume in which certain portions of Hebrew history and literature are bound up identical in source and spirit with the Sermon on the Mount.

For my own part, I should prefer to rest the claims of Christianity to serious and unimpassioned consideration, no more on anything mystical or esoteric than on anything supernatural, but rather on the evidence of the character, moral and social, which Christianity has produced, and the relation of that character to the progress of humanity. These are facts not less certain in their way than any that can be submitted to the investigation of science.

LESSONS OF THE PAST.

By Which Spiritualists of the Present Should Profit.

Without having made a life study of church history or being able to trace all the ins and outs, all the windings and turnings of ecclesiasticism, yet there are certain main facts well known, certain historical features which are generally recognized and accepted by the general reader, especially by those who have been reared under orthodox influences, and who upon arriving at the age of maturity, have made some examination, for themselves, of the faith which had been taught them as infallible truth, which to doubt or to question was sinful and dangerous—those who have read just the ordinary works in circulation, for and against the claims of orthodoxy. Of course by depending on desultory reading, one is quite liable to get their history very much mixed, especially in church matters, where there are so many contradictory statements made by the different sects in the Christian world. Yet I wish to make just a rough sketch of the case, as it has come down to me, and if I am in error in any important point, it will be remembered that I am not pretending to be any authority in the matter, and perhaps some of our Spiritualistic reverends will kindly set me right.

It is generally understood that, at the dawn of the Christian era, the early Christians were a plain, unworldly people, very much in earnest, very zealously intent upon following the teachings of their great leader, who had declared his kingdom was not of this world, and whose doctrines and precepts were in marked contrast to the practices and religious systems of the people among whom he and his followers lived.

It is also believed, that they suffered great persecutions, and that great efforts were made to silence and suppress them, in spite of which they prospered and multiplied until, it being found impossible to destroy them or their faith by open measures, the Roman Emperor, Constantine, either pretended to, or really did become a convert to Christianity.

This, of course, made their religion at once popular. Whereupon this new and powerful convert to Christianity proceeded to convert Christianity to his kingdom of this world, and the Christians, instead of continuing to be the plain, persecuted people, zealous of good works and Christian lives, became the persecutors and murderers of people of other faiths—became proud and pompous, and assumed many priestly titles.

Soon there was a pope. There were cardinals and bishops and archbishops, reverend and very reverend fathers. All were intrenched behind the power of the state, and priestcraft thus in the saddle, proceeded to ride. Articles of faith, labeled infallible, were dictated to men, and men were compelled to subscribe to them or suffer torture and death. All freedom of thought and of speech among Christian nations, so-called, was gone. Many rites and ceremonies, copied mainly from older forms of religion, were instituted under new names, and the Roman and Greek Catholic churches were fully armed and equipped for their foul work of crushing human freedom, retarding the onward march of mankind and robbing the world of the forward impetus which the spiritual teaching of Jesus had given it. Instead of putting up the sword, as he had counseled, the church unsheathed the sword, and the blood and carnage in Christendom of the last nineteen hundred years are the fruit of that tree.

Instead of "Letting their light shine," their light became the darkness of the ages, and "How great was that darkness."

"Vainly, that ray of brightness from above,
That shone around the Galilean lake,
The light of hope, the leading star of love,
Struggled the darkness of that day to break."

But it is beyond the power of man to annul the divine law of progress, and through suffering humanity has struggled painfully up to a new dispensation, which has been ushered in under the name of Modern Spiritualism. The people of the new faith have been and still are, like the early Christians, a despised and persecuted people, but the ne wlight is still shining and penetrating to the darkest corners of Christendom, bringing new hope and joy to the world. Mankind has outgrown much of its fear. The power of the priesthood has waned, and a fair opportunity now exists to utterly break and throw off its shackles. Will that opportunity be improved? Yes, if men are sufficiently developed to appreciate the blessings of freedom to the extent of paying its price, which is, now and always, "Eternal Vigilance."

The enemies of free thought are legion. They are vigilant and are ever exerting themselves to the utmost to retain their power over men. Not only is this the case in the old orthodox churches, but with some who came out of them and joined the ranks of the New Thought people. Marching under the banner of Spiritualism are some, who do not seem willing to relinquish the old priestly prestige. To simply remain on equal footing with the mass of humanity—to be only one of the common brotherhood of man, does not seem to satisfy their ambition. They are plaintively asking "Why can't I have my title of Reverend?" They are insidiously striving to bring in the rites and ceremonies of a rotting and dying ecclesiasticism—to inoculate the growing young giant of the new age with the same virus that caused the decay of Spiritualism among the early Christians. The same lust of power and greed of material wealth that caused the loss of Spirituality so early in the Christian era is at the bottom of such work.

When Jesus said, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," he uttered a sacred truth that will forever hold good, and if Spiritualists would remain the "Light of the world"—if their desire is to bless and free humanity from the darkness and superstition in which they have so long been groping, they must not put their new wine into the old church bottles. However popular churchianity may be, however firmly intrenched behind the power of the state, Spiritualists cannot afford to adopt its hypocritical practices nor to masquerade in its bedraggled rags. If there be those who "Love greetings in the market places—to be called Rabbi or Reverend, and to make long prayers to be heard of men," better than to walk humbly among men and to suffer, if need be, for the truth's and humanity's sake, let them go back to the old church where they really belong.

Spiritualism in Reading, Mich.

A. A. Finney, trumpet medium, of Grand Rapids, Mich., spent a week with our little society here and held three very satisfactory seances. Mr. Finney, like other trumpet mediums, requires total darkness for the seance, but in return as proof of genuineness he has one of the circle hold both of his hands throughout the evening. Physical manifestations are very strong in his circles aside from the trumpet work. The results of his seances are very mystifying to the skeptic. A fourth seance was attempted but owing to a rain storm, had to be abandoned as no manifestations were obtainable in the heavy condition of the atmosphere.

The society here has just entered upon the second year in the work and have leased the reading rooms for another year. The society are not working for new members so much as they are their own development and unfoldment. "Soul perfection" is their motto. One member has developed clairvoyance and others are making rapid strides along the line of other phases. One member is working entirely on the plan of independent work, free from so-called "control," and while the unfoldment is perhaps a little slower than that of the "controlled," he is more than satisfied with the results obtained.

Among other things he has gained absolute control of self in so far as worldly passion and pleasures are concerned, is curing himself of chronic diseases of many years' standing, and is able to throw off colds, etc., in a day's time, all without the use of medicines or stimulants. Writes inspirationally upon subjects he knows nothing about. The course of development is rather rigid for one whose whole thought is for self-gratification, however. The first law followed is "Thou shalt not kill," and in following it he partakes of no meats or animal fats, for the eating thereof is equivalent to the killing. This law is conscientiously adhered to even down to the smallest of living creatures, and it cultivates a veneration and love for all life, and makes the second law, "love thy neighbor as thyself," an easy one to follow. The strongest stimulant that passes his lips is milk. A twenty-four hour fast once each week gives the vital organs renewed strength. Deep breathing lightens the burdens of a whole day. His highest aim is to use the powers thus attained in labor for humanity, for humanity's sake alone.

The tobacco habit was lifted at the very first sitting of the society's circle, and all the petty vices and habits have left one by one until the soul is almost absolute master of the body, and his theory is that when that mastery is complete all things else divine will follow in quick succession. This development has been going on for about a year now, and in this time he has labored on an average of about eleven hours a day where both brain and muscle are in constant action (is a foreman printer) and is healthier and stronger than he has ever been before. He is very sensitive to thoughts and conditions surrounding him at all times, and avoids inharmony as far as possible in his daily life. His watchword is to prepare to live—not to die.

O. V. LABOYTEAUX.

A Good Materializing Medium.

Every Spiritualist will be glad to learn that we have another good materializing medium in the person of Mr. Emmet Forbush, of 105 Quimby street, Grand Rapids, Mich. He is a young man, age thirty-one, and lives with his sister, Mrs. Nora Gillett.

On the evening of Feb. 16, my wife and I attended one of his seances at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Chappell, corner of Alpine and Fifth streets.

The lamp was turned partly down and set on the floor behind the sitters, giving a good light.

A dark curtain was hung over the kitchen door; the medium sat in a rocking chair in the kitchen; three men and seven women sat in a semi-circle in the sitting-room, facing the curtains or kitchen door.

Songs and melodies on a little music box alternated with the appearance of spirit forms.

About fifteen different full spirit forms appeared. Some were recognized as relatives and acquaintances of the sitters; other forms were guides of the medium. The spirit forms were full from head to foot; most of the forms were ladies, dressed in white garments; some were tall and some were short.

The spirit forms would hold on to each inside of the curtains and step out as far as they could; some would swing far out. One form stepped out far enough to touch the sitters on their heads and shoulders; this spirit was one of the medium's controls and could talk louder and longer than the others. We could see the forms quickly disappear downward, on the floor.

The medium came out of his trance somewhat exhausted and said he felt like coming out of a deep sleep.

The sitters were satisfied and well pleased.

Mr. Forbush is a nice young man, having no bad habits; he is moral and upright. He regards his mediumship as a spiritual gift from the angel world, to be used to enlighten and comfort humanity. We are glad that he is a medium of whom we all can be proud. He would be pleased to attend camp-meetings. H. E. MARTIN.

A Tribute of Love.

A much beloved, noble, broad-minded lady has passed from our ranks; we feel her loss keenly, and all the respect that we can pay her is her due.

Born into the higher life, March 1, 1904, Mary L., beloved wife of Edwin H. Mozart. She was a true worker consistent in her belief in God and immortality, and she welcomed the end without fear. Although having everything to live for, when she felt the change approaching she called her devoted companion by a tender name and said: "I think that this is death creeping over me," and with a few instructions, and loving good-bye, she folded her hands in peace.

O, how beautiful the faith that bridges over the waters of Lethe. Her funeral was conducted under strict Spiritualistic belief in every respect. Three able speakers gave comforting addresses; sweetest music did much in calming bereaved hearts that will so deeply miss a noble benefactress. As she lay in a most elaborate casket, with her silver-crowned head resting on the finest embroidered pillow, gowned in the softest shade of purple satin, a vandike of point lace, hands encased in silken silvery gloves, so delicate in texture, that the nerveless fingers like folded lily leaves shown through in their long repose. The canopy under which she lay (as well as the casket, etc.,) was in the same shade of purple glow that the setting sun leaves upon the twilight's bosom with his last kiss. The pink and gold room in which she lay was literally banked with flowers in designs of every conceivable beauty that loving friends could fashion.

They have laid the casket with its precious form away 'mid ever blooming roses and rare flowers, where birds sing their gladsome songs in morning's first ray, and the sun in golden gleams kisses the dew-laden grasses, where the daisy hides from the amorous breeze to waft her loving glances up to God. How sweet the thought, to die and know that the form in which we so long have tarried will be tenderly and lovingly cared for, and beautifully dressed for its long sleep! No believers save the Spiritualists, bury their loved ones in such sweet simplicity and glorious faith. They know that, "though dead, they have never died."

Death sought a home of love
To bear away its dearest prize,
He whispered like a cooing dove,
She answered him in sweet surprise.

Flowers rare with fragrant breath
Were scattered o'er her silent bed;
While tearly tears from eyes bereft,
Baptized the dear beloved dead.

Be calm, dear soul, rest in peace
And know an angel guards thy bed;
Weep no more but seek release
In love, she wreathes around thy head.

She sings of love and immortality
She breathes the truths in glad refrain;
Of a reunion in the yet "To-Be."
When the Jasper gates swing wide again.

BOOK REVIEW.

The Yoke. A Romance of the Days when the Lord Redeemed the Children of Israel from the Bondage of Egypt. By Elizabeth Miller. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Publishers. Indianapolis, Ind.

A romance of much power, on the subject of Israel's bondage in Egypt, as related in the Old Testament. Because of its biblical foundation it appeals particularly to the religious classes.

The Greek Philosophers in the Evolution of Ethics. Socrates, Plato and Aristotle. By Prof. James H. Hyslop.

In arrangement and analysis Prof. Hyslop's lecture shows the work of a master in literary style, and in his chosen field as a teacher of ethics. The student will find the subject finely and clearly elucidated.

The volume is published for the Brooklyn Ethical Association, by Chas. M. Higgins & Co., New York, Chicago and London. Gilt top, handsomely illustrated. Price $2.

The homeliest language carries conviction if it is the truth.

HIS BLOOD BOILS WITH INDIGNATION.

OPEN LETTER TO PROF. HYSLOP.

Prof. Hyslop—My Dear Sir:—My father was a lawyer residing at Warren, Pa. At the age of 16 I commenced reading law during school vacations, intending to follow law as a profession, but a boy chum was a telegraph operator, and while associating with him, I almost, without any particular effort, found myself a telegraph operator.

As operators were scarce in the early 60s, I was offered a position as operator at Langdon's Station, just south of Erie, Pa., which I accepted, and gradually lost sight of my intended future law practice, and drifting west became a railroad and telegraph manager.

During the year at Langdon's I boarded with farmer Langdon, a good, honest farmer, a descendant of John Langdon of Revolutionary fame.

Three of his daughters were spiritual mediums at one time, but upon my arrival in April, 1865, the power had left the two older daughters, and the third was then what is known as a trance, clairvoyant and clairaudient medium.

What I experienced during the year in that farm house would take a large book to write.

From that time to the present I have never lost an opportunity to acquire knowledge, whether in the fields of astronomy, geology, chemistry, electricity or phenomena.

I have spent many thousand dollars in time and money in my investigations, merely because I desired to know the truth.

Now, when I read the writings of these men calling themselves professors of psychology, and psychology is the science of soul, my blood fairly boils with indignation.

I crave the opportunity to get one of them cornered before a jury of minds trained to weigh testimony.

They remind me of walking dictionaries. They invent words applying to things that exist only in imagination.

The late Dr. Hudson, with his theory of subjective self, is a fair example.

Think of it, a subjective self; that is irrational, the origin of all good as well as evil, a connecting link between man and divinity and also a representative of the devil.

As president of this company my business takes me into many states and I travel extensively.

Wherever I go I challenge every priest, preacher or professor I meet. I never met a man I could not humiliate by simply asking him questions. In turn I give them the privilege of questioning me for a week or a month if they so desire.

A certain spirit that controlled the Langdon girl in 1865, and I have been friends all these long years. She has materialized to me over thirty times, and usually with sufficient strength for me to talk to her.

I have a Hindoo friend who claims he lived 900 years ago. I presume I have held 3,000 interviews with him. He has materialized to me some five or six times.

I can go into a room of half a dozen strangers, and in thirty minutes have a table tipping. I can make a speaking dial with a jack-knife, paste-board, pen and ink, and tack to the table, and intelligent communications can be obtained.

After getting the table well started I can leave it myself, and it will continue to work for those present as long as my Hindoo (spirit) friend remains to work it for them. Under favorable conditions, he has at request overturned a table with two men sitting on it.

Before my wife passed away four years ago, through the mediumship of a speaking dial, we had almost daily interviews with our spirit friends for years, and particularly with my Hindoo friend on philosophy and occult science.

In 1878, I retired from railroad and telegraph business and took up medicine and chemistry.

Now there are men who are more periphrastic, and have command of a much larger vocabulary of high-sounding scientific (so-called) words than I, but upon actual knowledge of the material and the occult I am ready at all times to meet on five minutes' notice any living person. I am prepared to scientifically demonstrate every claim I set up. But herein lies a proviso: You could not demonstrate a problem in algebra to a a man who had never studied that branch of mathematics.

It would be equally difficult to demonstrate an occult problem to a person who has no conception of occult laws.

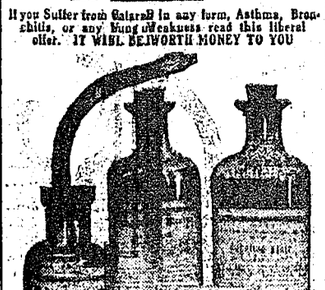
Now, what arouses my indignation is, that these men who pose as professors of psychology, show by their writings and reports, that they are densely ignorant on the very subject they seek to be known as experts.

I despise a humbug wherever found, whether preacher, priest or professor.

I never made one dollar out of it and never care to. I would disdain to accept compensation for witnessing to the truth of a fact so sacred.

This letter is not intended as a criticism, either upon Prof. James or yourself, as I believe you are both on the right track, but you have many difficulties, such as ignorance and prejudice to retard you at every turn.

While I can go out on the street and challenge any preacher or priest upon my own responsibility, it would hardly be the proper thing for you to do; they would hustle you off to an insane asylum, and promptly appoint your successor.



You, of course know the class of humbugs I am after, and if you have any one in particular in mind at present you can send them this letter as a challenge from me.

They Are Genuine at One Time and Fraudulent at Another.

VARIOUS MATERIALIZATION PHASES.

The Part Which Catholic Spirits Play in Deceiving People.

The article from C. W. Stewart in a recent Progressive Thinker, lacks but one thing—the full recognition of the work of opposing spirits who purposely control the medium to deceive, or rather, use the unconscious medium to play false.

Perhaps some of my personal experiences will illustrate what I mean—my own experiences and those with which I have been connected.

Some years since I attended three seances of a materializing medium that I have never heard accused of fraud. In one of those seances a Spaniard materialized who had been educated for the priesthood but died before taking orders. On the other side he met one of his teachers who had begun to be skeptical while here and under his influence, he—this Spaniard—had repudiated the Catholic church, and was then, as he said, the control of the gentleman who had invited me to the seance.

This spirit, while standing in full view of the other members of the seance, told me that there was more opposition to Spiritualism on the spirit side of life than here; that the Catholic church there was prompting the church here to do all in its power to perfect materialization inside its own lines while at the same time hunting up susceptible persons on the outside and developing them as mediums, giving genuine manifestations at one time and fraudulent at another. This for the purpose of destroying any confidence in Spiritualism, but, if they could once accomplish such perfect materialization as Jennie Leys sought, the medium sitting on the platform, and the materialized spirit addressing the audience, then they would proclaim to the world that the church materialization was of God, and all outside of it of the devil.

I think it was at the last seance of the three that the manifestations took place which illustrated the power of spirits to deceive if they so choose. The cabinet was double, having a partition through the middle and a door to each department. As we faced the cabinet, the medium took her seat in the, to us, left side of the cabinet, and the manifestations occurred at the other end, the door on the left being closed, and the other opening and closing as occasion required. At this seance the spirits made their own light, no other being in the room. The door stood open and it was perfectly light inside that end of the cabinet.

I sat where I could see the whole of the end of the cabinet, and as I looked back to the lighted cabinet, after looking away a moment, I was startled to see what looked like a fac simile of the dress the woman wore when she shut the door on herself at the beginning of the seance. Upon looking more closely, it seemed to me that this garment was not quite the shade of the one worn by the medium, but I counted the buttons on the sleeve, three in number. Just then the seance closed, and the medium came out the other door looking like one just waked from a sound sleep.

I went to her, took her hand, said, "Well, you are back again," noticing at the same time that the sleeve at the wrist of the hand I held had two buttons instead of three, and the dress really did seem of a little different shade from the one seen in the cabinet. I then, carelessly stepped to the cabinet, finally went inside, and without seeming to do so, examined the place where I had seen the dress hang. There was no place to hang even a pocket handkerchief. The next morning I met all those who were at the seance, three besides myself, and talked with them about the matter. No one had seen what I saw, and the reply I received from the spirit friends was that they had purposely shown me this to teach me how easily spirits could give the appearance of fraud, if they so chose. I accepted this explanation, as the medium could have no possible motive for taking off her wrapper and hanging it in plain sight. If Spiritualists as a body were as anxious to get at bottom truths as they are to unearth fraud, they would not be the victims of spirit frauds as they now often are.

The readers of The Progressive Thinker will remember my effort a year ago to get a Gordon job press. I secured about half enough for this purpose, and then everything stopped so far as the press was concerned, and I had only the small press on which I can print only one page at a time for my 24-page monthly, but I kept it a going, doing nearly all the work myself, till the volume was completed. It nearly took my life, but I conquered so far as that was concerned.

Nearly all of our old Spiritualists know of the medium of the Rockies, John Brown. While in Clinton, Iowa, nearly twenty years ago, I had some correspondence with him, in which he expressed his deep sorrow because of the tendency among Spiritualists to conform to church methods, a subject on which we fully agreed. Some of those letters may be found in the book compiled for him by J. S. Loveland. While wondering that I could get no more responses for the press, I picked up this book and read one of John's letters, commencing with:

"I have been trying to write to you for several days, but have been prevented by opposing influences; they seem afraid of you, and try to keep everything from you."

They may well be afraid, for when the bottom truths which I teach, are understood and applied, all church power will be over. Neither ignorant nor designing spirits can bewilder mortals more.

John was so much more annoyed by those opposing influences while living with his first wife than afterward, as she was a Spanish Catholic.

Old Spiritualists also know the history of Jennie Leys—how she was obsessed by a Catholic priest for years. Well at one time those obsessing Catholic spirits came to John in disguise and told him if he would go to Los Angeles he would set Jennie Leys free. Filled with the desire to do this he hastened to Los Angeles, but alas; he found it to be but a trap to get him in their power. He did not even get to see Jennie, but there was a poisonous magnetism thrown upon him that nearly killed him and would quite, had not one of his spirit friends controlled a San Francisco medium and sent him a prescription that neutralized their poison and saved him.

Well, when I read the words written so long before, "They seem to want to keep everything away from you." I realized that they had in some way gotten hold of the lines and stopped the coming of the press fund; but long the road that has no turn. I have not given up the press; I shall conquer yet. In the meantime the magazine must rest till I get it.

One more experience. Somewhere about twenty years ago, there came to Clinton, Iowa, where I was then publishing Foundation Principles, a woman who was speaking on the labor question. I was acquainted with her, knew what her views were, and when she stood before her audience and talked so much about God and his judgments, I was disgusted, for I knew it was done for effect. At the close of her lecture, a strong influence came upon me and I walked up to her and said: "The working people will never secure justice till they let go of God and take hold of themselves."

This influence held me for several days, and I wrote what I after put in pamphlet form under the title of "The Folly of Worship, or the Curse of Godism." I did not sign my name to it, but put it out as from the spirit side of life. I first published it in the paper. Eleven hundred of the pamphlets were scattered.

Some fifteen years afterward I read in Lucifer an extract from that same pamphlet, or a new edition, it being claimed that it was written by a well-known medium under control, when her eyes were so sore she could not see to read. I went to a pile of F. Ps., and found that so far as the extract was concerned, not a word had been changed. I wrote to the medium and received no reply, but I heard no more of her pamphlet. Some six months before this I had felt a very strong desire to re-publish the pamphlet, but failed to do so, and had the same ideas been given in different phraseology, I should have thought that the control, failing with me, had gone to her, but it could hardly have been given exactly the same through two different brains, and yet the laws which govern these manifestations are so little understood it is hardly safe to pass judgment.

I had much more to say, but I fear it would make too long an article.

VOL. 29. CHICAGO, ILL., APRIL 2, 1904. NO. 749

A LESSON

Given by a Spirit, July 11, 1903.

Observe well the labors of the spirits on the immortal planes nearest Earth, and by mortals, and how these labors are jointly conducted, yea, pushed forward zealously in the conditional fields and vibratory force streams.

It is something wonderful to behold this force, thought, and substance interactivity so largely for selfish purposes, that the truth must be brought to the comprehension of man.

We are pleased to see Earth's studious ones searching for the causes of the many hitherto mysterious effects realized upon Earth. They learn slowly but surely, something of universal, as well as specific operations of forces wherein obtain causes that are sure to produce corresponding effects. At present, man's attention is turned upon the many labor projects in progress and new ones constantly inaugurated under the rules of joint labor or stock companies, etc. All these labor projects are heavily shaded, those in the mind, and material realms, with personal ambition and selfish objects, by those posing as leaders, who, as a rule, are artful to gain a following, and do many things and make unwarrantable promises to succeed in their efforts or enterprises which, owing to these facts are classed as illegal, for the reason that such leaders and their associate helpers become usurpers of force streams and force lines established for universal, not specific or selfish operations. This causes grievous difficulties for the masses of Earth's people therefore those in authority on such planes of manifested life where the trespasses are committed, are in duty bound to call a halt and rectify such pursuits by reversals of said force streams and vibratory activities. The changes thus wrought affect all humanity to some extent, but in particular all those who by their vibratory registrations, are numbered as contributors to said force streams for selfish objects, or rather, to further the schemes of the leaders of such movements.

We declare positively, that all movements that induce or compel adherents or business associates, as the case may be, to use much will power and specific thought to deny and to affirm that which suits their leader's purposes, become in time detrimental to all the people, and in particular to those associated with such movements. Here we class "Christian Science," "Mental Science," all branches of so-called "success" movements; all branches of so-called Divine or Mental Healing that have selfish ends in view, etc. All pursuits where force unions are made use of and force currents monopolized for any selfish object or gain, are illegal, and therefore a detriment pro and con, that is, to leaders and those led, etc.

Now to qualify—said force streams and force lines are in operation for the benefit of all the people, the same as sun and air. When they are drawn upon for supplies and uses, those who do so, can with such knowledge how to draw and use such substances and forces, benefit others only by making their labors the labor of love and their services to others free of monetary considerations; then it is rated as working in accord with universal rule and for the weal of humanity.

Bear in mind, healers and workers in these fields of services to humanity are entitled to a living, but it should be given them as free-will offerings, not as charges, because the one course brings blessings, the other is illegal and brings troubles in its wake. Then, too, be it ever borne in mind, that in strictly physical labors, whether conducted by one proprietor or corporations, it is illegal to conduct such enterprises other than on strictly business principles, according to world's rules. Spiritual and monetary force streams are separately operated and legal only on their own lines. We wish not to be understood that these lines can be changed by the thought and will output of any small or great number of mortals thus active for any purpose, but these force streams can be polluted by unfit thought directed to the Spiritual when really the objects desired are material and selfish. The material or monetary currents cannot really be polluted in any such sense, but they become clogged, over-crowded, then the tracers mark each one's thought and force output, the accountants return reports to the acting rulers on such planes and if any movement has in such wise usurped in excess of legal ratios, then such movements can be arrested as stated, and this results in failure.

THE COLOR SOUL.

Does not the beauteous rainbow hue
Thy soul with love and strength imbue
As out upon the cloud-mist wall
The sun-rays in effulgence fall
And blend all colors in a scroll, n emblem of the Color Soul?

ho scans a crimson sunset sky
nd purple clouds that linger nigh
Without inbreathing from the view
Some strength to soul and body, too,
As something drawn from out the whole
Of Nature's charming Color Soul?

Who looks upon a sunlit sea
In all its blue-green majesty
And draws not nearer to its shore
To watch the waves and hear the roar,
And sense the colors as they roll
Up from the water's Color Soul?

Who looks upon the springtime bloom
When flowers burst from Winter's tomb,
Or out upon the hillside green,
And sees not thro' this mortal screen
The thing divine he would extol,
Knows not sweet Nature's Color Soul.

Temporal laws rather punish men when they have transgressed than form them to be such as transgress seldomest.—Milton.

A CURIOUS INCIDENT.

An Evangelist Who Was Controlled by a Spirit.

To the Editor:—I have but recently entered the ranks of Spiritualism, having progressed from the narrowness of orthodox teaching.

From my childhood I had been an enthusiastic worker in the church, having traveled as an evangelist through much of the eastern section of this country and England.

I have become a Spiritualist from religious convictions, and I must say I was one to all intents and purposes long before I left the church. The last time I spoke from an orthodox pulpit, I took for my subject, Luke 1:74-75: "That he would grant unto us that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life."

I think I must have been controlled that evening by a very broad-minded spirit influence, for instead of calling my fellow-creatures poor hell-deserving sinners, grovelling worms of the dust, and that every foot of this beautiful planet is cursed by sin and cursed by God, doomed to burn and melt with a fervent heat"—instead of all this, I felt that the earth is glorious and beautiful, had been for ages and for aught human minds could tell, would be for ages to come.

I have a remembrance that I realized on that occasion as never before a sense of the divinity of my own soul, and theirs, and that instead of beating my breast crying, "Have mercy upon us miserable sinners," we should stand up and thank God for what we are; look up without fear, and know for a certainty that the possibilities for holy and righteous living are within ourselves, that as long as we grovel in the dust, we will see nothing but its unsightliness, and a fearless looking into the laws that govern us, will elevate us and our conceptions of God.

Needless to say, the "sermon" did not suit the brethren and the official board of that particular church has not waited upon me since, having heard that I have "become tangled up with them Spiritualists," as one of these worthies has it. They have come to the conclusion that I have "fallen from grace," and are praying that I might be reclaimed before it is too late; and that I might be rescued as a "brand from the everlasting burning." They have pleasantly situated me, have they not?

Oh! but I could tell them that I never lived in as close touch with the Infinite, and I never loved my fellow-creature or desired their spiritual upliftment as much as I do since becoming a Spiritualist, and to this end I am working.

A dear friend gave me the most beautiful gift I ever received in my life. It was nothing less than The Progressive Thinker, which comes to me regularly every week, and for which I look eagerly. I do not see how any Spiritualist can do without it.

Acting upon the thought that if Spiritualism is so good to me, it is good for others, I have been advancing its cause, and I do not know of any better way than getting all I can to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker. I have many promises, but as all cannot subscribe at the one time, I do not wish to keep those who give their names first, waiting for others. I have, therefore, concluded to send them in as they come to me. In the Second Spiritual Church of Baltimore, we are working earnestly to teach the religion of Spiritualism, and all who desire to help us by sending us literature for distribution can do so by addressing

A Voice in the Air Gave Warning.

Here is an incident that none can imitate; no sleight-of-hand performer can duplicate it; none can insinuate fraud. It was a genuine phenomenon; it saved a life.

I have often heard this incident narrated by my wife and her father who were witnesses. It happened in the summer of 1871 when she was a girl at home with her parents, who lived near Potterville, Mich.

At the breakfast table, her father, Samuel Lesher, now living at Mancelona, Mich., said he was going to the saw-mill, half a mile distant, to move some lumber from its side out into the road. He ate in a hurry and left the house. Just then he felt a touch on his shoulder and a voice in air said: "Don't go near the mill to-day, for you are in danger of your life." He looked all around, but could see no one near him. He went on to the stable still determined to get his team and to remove the lumber.

At the bars or gate, he felt a similar slap on his shoulder and the same warning words were repeated in the air above his head. He looked around searchingly, but could see no one. In a field near by, he went to work cultivating potatoes. At noon, he told his family about his warning experience. In the afternoon, he continued his work near by.

About the middle of the afternoon, he was resting and talking with a neighbor about the warning voice. Suddenly a loud explosion was heard. The explosion shook the house and frightened the inmates. The daughter ran out and asked her father if it was an earthquake. He told her that the sawmill and boiler had exploded. The result was that the saw-mill had been thrown over on the lumber that Mr. Lesher wanted to move out into the road. If he had been working there, he woud have been in danger of his life. As it was, the engineer was killed and the sawmill was in ruins.

From whence came that warning voice?

Next Sunday evening, March 6, Mrs. Jennie Martin will speak at Lincoln club hall. You are invited to hear a living witness of that phenomenon which none can duplicate.—H. E. Martin in Grand Rapids Post.

The man who resists a tendency will not have to regret a habit.

THE WISDOM OF PASSION.

A Review by Helen Campbell, Author of "The What-To-Do-Club," "Mrs. Herndon's Income," "Miss Melinda's Opportunity," "Prisoner of Poverty," "Roger Berkeley's Probation," "Women Wage-Earners," "In Foreign Kitchens," Etc.

Now and then in the flood of print pouring from the presses, never in so strenuous and overwhelming measure as in the opening of the twentieth century, comes a book of another order; a personality of its own, distinct and absolute; a word that crystallizes thought, and points out clearer pathway for every thinker to come; a book as to which the instant word will be that in which Walt Whitman summed up his own:

"Camerado! this is no book?
Who touches this touches a man!"

For surely it is no bookish pedant bringing us deductions from other men's thoughts, but a clear brain for his own, and eyes quickened to see the meaning of thoughts and the world that holds them.

So it is that in "The Wisdom of Passion," we find something absolutely new in the handling of a theme distinctly philosophic and easily smothered under technical handling. But the author though perfectly familiar with technical methods, dismisses them with a breeziness that compels a smile from the severest stickler for ancient form. He knows books but they are on the whole accidental factors. The real thing lies deeper than books, and he proceeds to demonstrate this thesis in a manner that compels respectful hearing from even the most determined adversary. He is in haste, and the superabundance of material can by no means be condensed to fit the apportioned space. It bubbles and boils over recklessly, but one forgives the occasional looseness of method, in the charm and truth of the work as a whole. It is essentially constructive thinking; a book as vital in modern psychological science as the work of Lester Ward or William James. He is artist, but impressionist rather than Pre-Raphaelite, and a maker of epigram and aphorism as he pursues his reckless way, annihilating old traditions, and sowing wise sayings broadcast.

"A study of the human soul." We have never before had exactly this thing. A study of the human soul and its passions; of their powers, relations and influences, and their methods of making or marring the man in whom they dwell. To this explorer the soul is a mental unity of passions, using passion as an expression of a mental force of the soul. The subliminal self is to him a large portion of the soul's working equipment, and one of his noblest chapters, "The Passions of the Prophets," is an illumination on the way the prophets and poets have journeyed. Deepest of all contentions the book holds—most vital in its bearing on the new science Sociology—is his insistence that its foundations must be laid in a broader psychology. "The hope of the race," he tells us, "lies in the deeper study of the divine laws of the individual soul and in its intrinsic moral worth rather than in the progagation of the interpretations and beliefs of old books."

No living psychologist has so closely touched the very heart of the matter, and the brilliant, audacious, yet also reverent writer, since he feels and owns all that is noblest in the human soul, has given us in this unique book something so abounding in suggestion that he may well make others with fuller handling of many a point now barely indicated. We welcome this in the psychological field, above all in an hour when the psychological laboratory thought is uppermost; and thought machinery threatening again the place of the "hand-made" natural product. We are lost in the details of the laboratory. This writer leads one out to the open and "a plain public road," sweet airs blowing from the everlasting hills beyond, and blue sky and sunshine for all that world over which soul was made ruler—lost for a time full knowledge of how best to rule, and now again sees the way open—the reconquering of the kingdom sure!

Let Nature Cure Your Cold.

It is much better to prevent having colds by eliminating broken down tissues of the body by exercises, diet and proper bathing than to have to sneeze and blow it out in what is termed a cold. It has been proven by soldiers, hunters and those exposed to the rigors of a winter climate that if they do not overload the stomach, and do take considerable exercise in the open air, they are free from colds. While if they are housed in for any length of time, eat heartily and exercise but little, they are stricken down with the influenza or cold. Nature wishes to cast off the effete matter of the system and takes this course to do it.

When one gets a cold, what is the usual method of procedure? A dose of quinine, the sitting down quietly by a stove, or the going to bed. Then they must eat heartily "to keep up their strength," as they say, and if they have no appetite, which is usually the case, some fancy dish to tempt the palate must be concocted by the cook. It would never do to fast! They would die, sure, if they missed one meal—and to skip two or three. Never!

Now, let me tell you how to let nature cure your cold. First of all, stop eating. If after you skip two or three meals you have a ravenous appetite, eat sparingly of nutritious food—fruits and whole wheat (graham) bread preferable, drink plenty of water. Take exercise in the open air, breathing in deeply as you walk the first few steps, then exhale the next few. It is best to count three or four as you inhale and the same as you exhale. This draws in plenty of oxygen, which burns up the broken-down tissues. Take a warm bath at night, rigorously rubbing and slapping the flesh with both hands after drying with rough towel. This will cause increased circulation and wash off the material which millions of little pores have been casting off.

Try it, my friends, and after you have rid your system of the inflamed condition, strive hard not to get it clogged up so again. Reform your diet, increase your exercise, breathe plenty of pure air day and night and bathe frequently. You will then laugh at colds, and go out into God's pure air in all kinds of weather, and fear no evil effects.

A cold bath taken each morning will act as a tonic and greatly facilitate the above directions as preventatives. For beginners, it is best not to bathe the whole body at once, but take it in sections, thoroughly drying and rubbing as you go along. Take one pound of sea salt, one ounce each of ammonia (in chunks) and camphor gum. Pour boiling water on, when dissolved strain and add a little to bath water each morning.

The Wholesome Life.

It Is Beautifully Portrayed by Victor E. Southworth, in Common Sense Advocate.

THE GREAT COMPANIONSHIP OF THE WORLD.

A fact of the utmost importance concerning human life is that individuals exist by one another and for one another. Society is not an artificial grouping of otherwise unrelated factors. The human being could never have developed into a "human" being had he not first been a social being. It is through the mutuality of his life's experience and endeavor that he has achieved progress.

It takes all men, and all sorts of men, to make a man. The same common clay is moulded into each of us. The same universal elements are somewhat variously commingled. Cæsar and Cudge, Jesus and Judas grew out of the same stock. There is even more than a spiritual equality among the most diverse people—there is spiritual identity.

The wholesome life is established in the unity of man and in the unity of nature. It leaves no place for separation. The wholesome is that which includes all. The individual can attain the perfect life not by disassociating himself from the mass, but by coming into wholesome relation with the mass. No man can do justice to himself until he stands helpfully, naturally and in freedom toward all men. Neither can he do justice to another or to society save as he has maintained a healthy self-regard.

To thoroughly live means the lifting of one's life beyond the limitation of self-consciousness into the realm of world-consciousness. It means the placing before us of no standard of excellence to which all the world is not eligible.

TO THOROUGHLY LIVE IS TO HAVE NO PRIVATE SCHEME OR PLOT, NO DESIRE OR EXPECTATION OF GAINING FOR OURSELVES A HEIGHT INACCESSIBLE TO OTHERS. IF WE ARE LIVING THE WHOLESOME LIFE WE WILL RECOGNIZE EVERY ACT OF SELF-REGARD AS A SOCIAL SERVICE, AND EVERY SOCIAL SERVICE THAT WE DO AS AN ENRICHMENT OF OUR OWN BEING.

Someone has said, and it is my thought over again. "The most complete and perfect form of selfishness is the most complete and perfect form of altruism." Human individualities are distinct centers of consciousness in the one life, just as there are different nerve centers in the one physical organism. We are individuals, not as opposed to one another, but as inclusive of one another. There is no possibility of gaining any real advantage for one's self, save as our action is conducive to the good of all. And if we attempt wisely and generously to give ourselves in loving service to others we are actually bettering our own condition.

Humanity is one man. There is something of all men in each of us. All seeming antagonisms of interest exist only because of our misconceptions as to what constitute our true interests. In the long run what serves one serves all; yes, and in the long run what degrades one degrades all.

As we come to understand that life is an infinite and eternal unity we see that quite independently of any man's disposition or choice he always acts in living relation with the whole. By necessity, whatever he does serves the purposes of the world, even when he is most wilful and blind in his action. As the theologians would say: "And God shall make the wrath of man to praise Him." So all human conduct, whether it be the deed of a saint or of a scamp, enters into the world's life helpfully. The noble action is a positive factor, the false action is a negative factor. The one helps directly, the other helps by contrast and indirectly.

There is nothing utterly wasted or lost—nothing that is not in time turned into good results. The one man, by his heroic life, gives the world an inspiring example; the other, in the very act of folly or ignorance, gives the world a warning example. It all counts in the rounding out and fulfilling of human experience.

In the great companionship of the world there are no non-communicants. No one is of no account. The weed has undiscovered virtues, and is a weed only because we have failed as yet to rightly interpret its meaning.

There are splendid qualities in the wild apple. Even as it is, at certain seasons of the year and under certain conditions, Thoreau tells us, it is preferable to any of its more distinguished rivals. So often we find excellent traits of character, elements of strength and wild virtues in the savage and in the criminal; and there is no hopeless specimen.

The unity of life, the solidarity of the world, is not man-made, nor does it wait for our recognition of it in order that it may become operative. It is a living principle that holds humanity together in spite of the perversity and stupidity of folks. Even the frightful devastations of war have been more than good in ways undreamed of by the combatants. And no social or economic system, however seemingly merciless in its operation, has been wholly mistaken. The severities and enormities that are a necessary outcome of the present system of private profit are not to be looked upon as altogether fruitless. They are an incident of social development; they are the groaning and travailing precedent to the birth of a new order.

Society moves forward toward a condition which will satisfy the reasonable and righteous demands of all its members. The ideal is not to be attained outwardly and by force, but through the gradual bringing of the people into a consciousness of their true relation to one another.

It is a fact that the outer life is but a reflection of the inner spirit; and the prevailing social and economic conditions, the laws and customs of a people, are at any time a true measure and test of man's average development. The improvement of the outward condition follows upon, and is a result of, the raising of the standards of life in the public mind. Whether the people are sufficiently definite and agreed as to what is most desirable in social life that desire is certain to be realized.

It is equally a fact that every improvement in outward conditions reacts upon the inner life of a people. The heart of man responds gladly to the touch of beauty, and the whole life is invigorated by kindly, helpful and humane associations.

First, the outward conditions are determined by the spirit of man, and being steadily improved to meet his inward requirements they react to stimulate all that is best in his nature. So that we have a balancing of man and his environment—a swinging of the pendulum between the inner and the outer life, the center of equilibrium being established neither in the caprice of man nor in the weight of circumstances, but in the blessed sovereignty of natural law.

The psychic life of nature, like the physical life, is always a readjustment, the balancing of extremes. Nothing can endure save as its existence is according to the requirements of justice. The universe is a perfect harmony—a balancing of part with part—no single atom being neglected, no simple process discredited. It is a system of exact compensation. No life in nature is made subordinate more than another. The sun is impartial. The earth receives all with equal welcome. Mutuality is stamped upon the face of life.

And so human society tends toward this final adjustment; the words of man are to be conformed to the works of nature, and only so can they be successful in the best sense. The wholesome life will be found to be the common life. There will be in human relations the same balancing of part with part, the same impartiality, the same mutual aid, that are everywhere seen in the outward world.

Good, better, best, are terms which can be used only to express relative conceptions; but there is an absolute principle of goodness that that which is best for one is best for all. And toward the full realization of that principle the life of the world surely tends.

The last word of social science is but an echo of the cry of every human heart, and that cry is for fellowship. The mutuality which is stamped upon the face of nature everywhere is the deepest and most irresistible impulse of the human soul. Nothing can satisfy the growing life of man that does not contribute to the common good. And this is as it must be, or the integrity of natural law would be violated and the universe proven a lie.

Every act of injustice is, in the last analysis, an insanity. Every cruelty, every hateful impulse, every wilful deception, every threat of violence, every lustful desire, every mere self-indulgence at the cost of another's happiness, is all the same as if an idiot were to beat his head in rage against a wall. We do not know any better or we would not continue one moment a life of mutual antagonism.

Let me impress upon your mind the fact that human society is not an experiment; it is not dependent upon any chance event or turn of events; it is not a matter of man's preference, as if we had power to thwart the universe or to add anything to its completeness. The true life of man is as much subject to natural law and is as perfectly an outworking of the universal life as is the growth of a blade of grass or the swing of a planet.

There is no peradventure or perhaps as to what the common life of the world is growing toward, or into what condition it will ultimately arrive. The future society is already established in nature, its main lines of development are everywhere indicated, and its final realization is inevitable.

The clearing up of human consciousness will mean the fulfillment of justice in public affairs. The human heart beats to the tune of universal well-being. Every healthy manly instinct, every noble passion, every true desire is a prophecy of the day when the sun in all its course shall pour its warmth and light into open, loving hearts, and peace and good will shall encircle the globe.

Justice is certain to follow human intelligence, the reign of love is certain to result from the increase and building up of the wholesome life.

This is life's beautiful meaning—that it shall grow the most superb individuals, not for their own sake, but for each other's sake; not to stand apart in solitary grandeur, but that out of the sharing of each others' lives there shall grow without limit a perfect companionship. "The base of all metaphysics," as Whitman says, that which underlies all systems, all philosophies and all religions—"is the dear love of man for his comrade, the attraction of friend to friend."

It is provided for by an eternal necessity that you and I and all men everywhere should be lovers. Indifference toward one another is lack of life; hatred toward one another is a hindrance of life; but love, love is the triumph of life.

CALIFORNIA.

A Worker's Letter from Los Angeles.

Having watched the columns of The Progressive Thinker since the offer of one thousand dollars by Mr. Robert Hale and Mr. Cherry, to be given to any materializing medium who will come to our city and produce one genuine materialized form; and not seeing an acceptance by the many who claim to be able to produce this demonstration, many of us are led to wonder, why this silence?

We have many noted mediums claiming this phase, among them Mr. W. W. Aber of Kansas City. Why cannot he hold up the Banner of Truth, and consent to visit California, and lift the many of Los Angeles Spiritualists out of the mire of doubt into which they have fallen as to this phase, not only by the Elsie Reynolds exposure, but by the many other impostors who find California's clime so congenial for their nefarious work.

The writer is personally acquainted with Mr. R. Hale and Mr. Cherry, and will vouch for their honesty and earnestness in the cause of Spiritualism.

It is true Mr. Hale has reached that point or state of bitterness that many of us have attained, by having been duped.

Now I will make this offer: "If there be any of these noted mediums that we read such glowing accounts about in our spiritual papers, who would care to visit Los Angeles for the purpose—not to procure the $1,000, for that is minutely small considering what is at stake, viz., the proof that there is genuine materialization. In view of this I will offer my parlors while they are here, and aid them in every possible way so that a harmonious circle can be selected from the best of our Spiritualists, and also from the ranks of our many honest investigators.

It will not be required of them to produce a form, if conditions should not be just right, at the first seance. We can try, try again.

Los Angeles is a beautiful city, and the climate about perfect at this season of the year. With the many other attractions, the writer will vouch for, not only a profitable time to the medium, but one of the most enjoyable visits imaginable.

There are excursion rates now on for March and April and also the fore part of May, $33 from Chicago, which I feel can be procured, as one brother suggested, by contributions from Spiritualists at large. This, then, would leave the party free from an outlay as to railroad fare. Some will say, This savors of a challenge, and even if the medium were willing the guides or controls would object, etc. Nonsense! Any spirit not sufficiently interested to help clear the track of the refuse that has been placed upon it by such as have visited Los Angeles is not worthy or recognition.

The right kind of spirits who act as helpers are just, as is the right kind of Spiritualists—ready at all times to stand for truth.

We have many honest workers in this city, each doing a work, yet like many others, we have divided ourselves until we have at least six Sunday services in as many halls, and just about the same spirit of "I am better than thou" existing among the workers; yet with all this Spiritualism is growing, and what we fail to do in proving man is immortal, the New Thoughtists and the many other cults, including the churches, are bringing about.

The writer has somewhat neglected the Spiritualist rostrum, growing weary of this ceaseless demand for tests.

As a rule our secular press is not favorable towards our ism or mediums, yet recently three of our papers gave quite a lengthy report of a lecture delivered before the Progressive Club by the writer. This proved to me that humanity can be reached outside of our spiritual halls.

I received a letter in answer to one of condolence and sympathy I sent to a friend who lives in my home city, Evansville, Ind., and who lost five relatives in the Iroquois theatre, in Chicago, that dreadful holocaust; among them her son, and daughter, Miss Essie Muir. As they were Presbyterians I felt my letter would not have the spiritual comfort, as I spoke of the nearness of these loved ones, and conveyed in verse the words of sympathy from the influences surrounding me. What a joy it was to me to find in her reply that of all the letters or words of condolence sent out to her in this sorrow, my letter afforded her the greatest comfort. She says: "I read over those lines every night before retiring and have copied them for each of our relatives, and sent them also to my darling Essie's friends. It was she who was taken for a Red Cross nurse and sent to the hospital where she passed out two weeks alter." So we see, dear friends, the good we all can do as the days are going by, with this gift that is of God.

SPRING IS COMING.

The gentle spring is coming,
There is gladness in the breeze,
We can see it in the bearing
Of the grand old leafless trees.

A divine unrest is stirring
The very soul of all,
And a joyous, happy feeling
Will answer to the call.

The little rootlets feel it
Under winter's bed of snow,
And they say to one another:
"It is nearly time to go

"And brighten up the dear old earth
That kept us snug and warm
Down in her tender bosom,
So free from cold and storm.

"We must soon be getting ready,
After all this quiet rest,
To don our Easter garments
And appear our very best.

"We must each one have a bonnet,
Or a crown and some nice frills
To decorate the beauteous earth—
Her valleys and her hills."

Denounces Spiritualism as a Maniac-Making Religion.

Dr. John D. Quackenbos Declares Spiritism Is a Foe to Psychology and Intellectual and Moral Progress —Compares It to Devil Worship of East.

To the Editor of the New York Herald:—The inference that has in some quarters been drawn from my statement in the Herald of Feb. 21 regarding the piano work of Mrs. McAllister Spencer, viz., that it is a genuine manifestation of so-called spirit possession, is vitally at fault and prompts me to define more carefully the difference that exists between her theory of spirit control, of direct action upon her body by spirits outside of herself, and the position of psychology as to the possibility of simulation by her transliminal self of the gifts and power of expression that once characterized great musicians no longer in the flesh.

I do not accept possession by outside intelligences as an explanation of Mrs. Spencer's work. Provided the facts of her life are as given by her friends, she does it all herself. The interesting question is, Where and how does she receive her inspiration? Is it possible for her transliminal self, in its cosmic or extra-planetary life, to recognize disembodied souls as individuals, to enter into fellowship with them and appropriate such of their talents as her taste may approve, for expression in her object life? Can her supernormal gifts be thus explained? Mrs. Spencer herself is a spiritist and accepts as an incontestible fact that the most conspicuous tenet of this faith, viz., that objective man can, under certain conditions, hold communication with spirits who have left the mortal form. She further believes in "impersonation," or possession by unseen intelligences, and so explains her musical improvisations.

Now, while psychology admits the possibility of communication with spiritual personalities, it offers a very different modus communicandi. It has advanced the doctrine that "different consciousnesses, or different aggregates or states of consciousness, may combine and interpenetrate, somewhat analagously to what theologians mean by the communion of souls." Every educated person is aware that a given transliminial self may communicate automatically with other human transliminal selfs by what is known as telepathy, the direct communication of one mind with another, at a distance, otherwise than through the normal operation of the recognized sense organs —that is, without the use of words, sounds, odors, looks, gestures or other material signs.

Telepathy is a form of mystic perception and impression which inheres in animal nature and characterizes certain methods of brute communication. Recent experiments have proved moths and other insects to be capable of thought transference so far reaching as to impress their fellows miles away with a knowledge of their existence and whereabouts. It is well known to whalers that a cataceau struck by a harpoon has power instantly to convey information of the presence of an enemy to a spouting school a mile distant, so that the individuals composing it immediately disappear below the surface. Some twelve years ago the late Austin Corbin purchased twenty-five thousand acres of farm and wood land in Sullivan county, N. H., and stocked the estate liberally with cervidae. In 1897 it was predicted that the extinct carnivores whose natural food is venison would return to the region.

Recently Austin Corbin, Jr., reported the presence of a family of pumas, or mountain lions, in the park, and other observers have discovered the lynx (both rufus and canadensis) in evidence. By what mysterious power of cognition did the great cat, a century vanished from this region, become aware of the presence of deer and elk in Blue Mountain Park? I suggest the theory of a telephathic communication—the radiation of subtle waves of cognizance from the mass of fear entertained for their traditional enemies by a community of four thousand animals of the deer tribe—to fugitive panthers in the Alleghanies, or in remote areas of the Green and Adirondack mountains.

If brutes possess this inscrutable power of communication, and exercise it for their benefit, it cannot seem marvellous that a professional trance-medium, in perfect training, should be able to project her transliminal self indiscriminately or with method in her ecstasy, force her way subjectively into the penetralia of selected human minds, and so possess herself of information calculated to confuse, deceive or otherwise impress her investigators. For has such a medium ever revealed anything that did not exist either in her own consciousness or in the consciousness of some person present, or in the consciousness of some living human being not present at the seance?

None will deny that the laws governing such telepathic intercourse, the question as to the extent of its prevalence among the living and its possible extension into the world of the dead, are of supreme concern to humanity. The fact that minds brought into hypnotic contact through the approximation of the physical bodies they tenant can exchange thoughts, feelings, ideas, knowledge, convictions, suggests the possibility that minds temporarily separated and to all purpose discarnate in natural sleep or in hypnosis, or even in states of reverie—transliminal selfs, free to traverse the world and its purlieus—may communicate without reference to space limitations and are mutually impressed, exalted and refined.

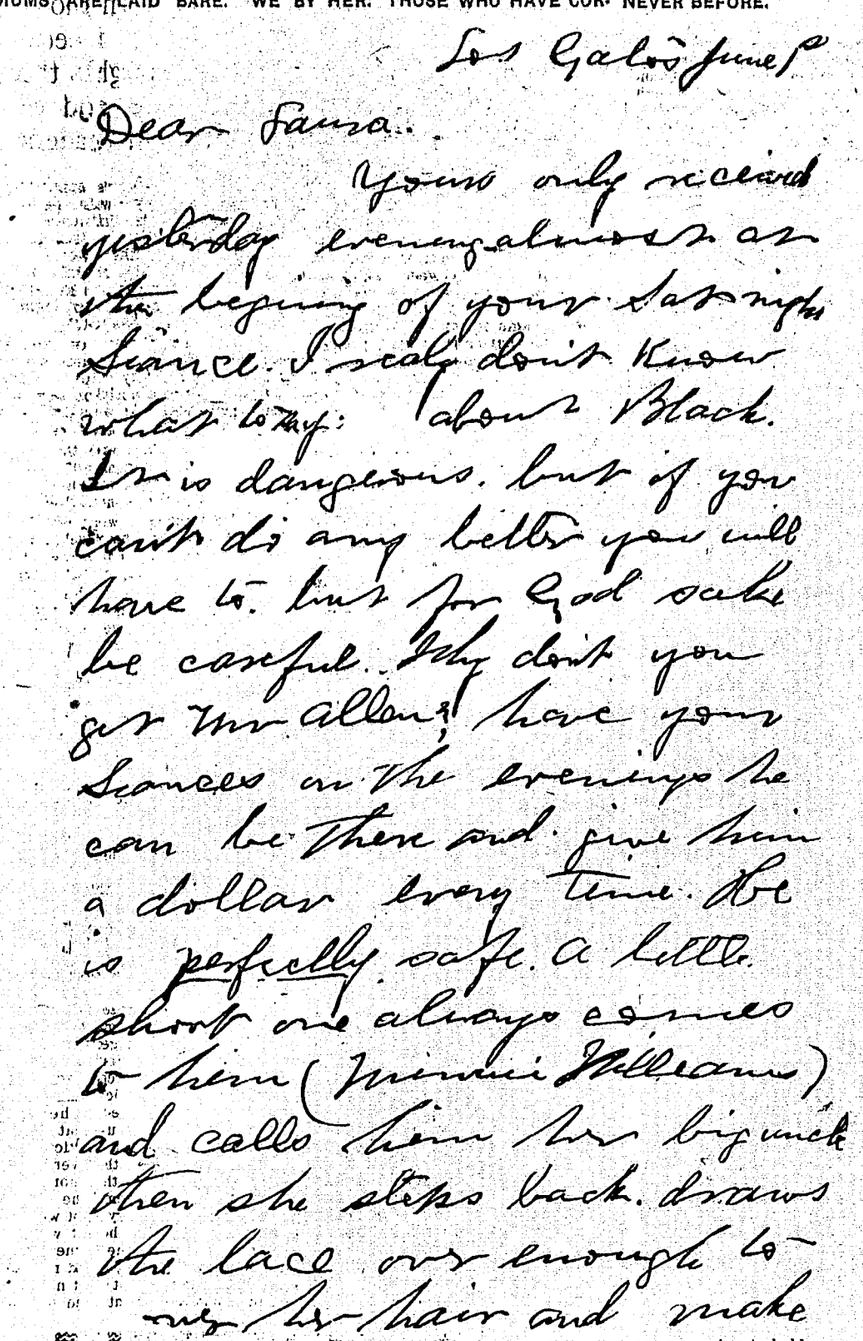
Reasoning analogically, we are warranted in the inference that communication with extra-human intelligence is as possible as with kindred transliminal selfs. Such is the position of psychology, which proclaims to-day the existence of every human being in two distinct spheres of consciousness—an objective, or normal (a mere fraction of his nature), in which he is known to his earthly associates, in which he takes cognizance of the outside world and consciously carries on the ordinary business of life; and a subjective, transliminal (across the threshold), or supernormal, in which he is capable of acting independently of a physical environment and at a distance from his physical body, in which, as the image of God, he intuitively apprehends, possesses supernormal information and power, reigns supreme over functions of body and motions of mind and is obnoxious to the touch of other higher spiritual agencies that have access to him in the transliminal world alone.

Thus psychology postulates a plane of meeting, if meeting be possible between the embodied and disembodied, infinitely higher than the level of the seance.

Further, to the skirts of Spiritism is pinned a revolting religion comparable to the devil worship of the Eastern Hemisphere. It thrusts a female principle into the Godhead. It flouts the divinity of Christ, interpreting Jesus as a healing medium and losing sight of Him in a throng of benevolent daimons. Its teachings regarding marriage are subversive of all respect ofr the sacredness of sex, and free love is its ideal of social happiness.

Spiritism is a foe to all intellectual, moral and maternal progress. It thrives because of its pretence to satisfy the most intense longing of human nature, the craving for a re-establishment of objective relations with the departed. But we have no evidence that the spirits of the dead are concerned in its phenomena. The idea of intercourse with discarnate friends through the machinery of the seance is repugnant to reason. Aside from the fact that if the communications be accepted as messages from the souls of the righteous dead such belief cannot be reconciled with an exalted conception of the powers of disembodied spirits, we are confronted with the equally significant fact that the intellectual status of all circles is foisonless and low.

Psychology, on the other hand, in its most advanced positions, is perfectly consistent with Christian belief. Compare its dignified and rational theory of soul intercourse with the teaching of the Church as to the communion of saints—that all the members of the Church visible are mystically united in Christ with one another and with the members of the Church invisible, having spiritual fellowship in common, and, in addition thereto, fellowship or communion with God in faith and love and prayer. Thus Christianity makes the living and the dead one blessed society, loving and worshipping the same Lord; we remembering them and they remembering us; we living in the blessed hope of meeting and recognizing them in the life of the world to come.



The New Testament is silent as regards the possibility of our direct communication with the dead. Its attitude here is negative, just as it is in regard to all scientific law. The Bible was not written to teach men physical science or psychology. They are left to explore these vast fields at will, and the coming century will disclose wonders far beyond any yet disclosed. We know nothing as yet. We have gathered a few large pebbles at the water's edge of the great tarn of the future; its vast reaches of sands are yet to be sifted in the interest of humanity. And man is as much at liberty to question nature in ethereal spheres as to seek her secrets in the laboratory or read her laws in the heavens. The discovery of a new star or chemical element or micro-organism is of absorbing interest, but such interest pales into insignificance beside that involved in an opening of the way to a perfect comprehension of man's relationship to Deity, to destiny, to his disembodied fellows and to other spiritual personalities that are not of this fold.

A SUGGESTIVE LETTER.

WE REPRODUCE A LETTER ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN WRITTEN BY MRS. ELSIE REYNOLDS, IN WHICH THE METHODS USED BY THE SO-CALLED MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS ARE LAID BARE. WE REPRODUCE EXACTLY THE FIRST PAGE OF THE LETTER, AND THE HANDWRITING IS SIMILAR TO OTHER PRIVATE LETTERS ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN WRITTEN BY HER. THOSE WHO HAVE CORRESPONDED WITH HER CAN COMPARE THE HANDWRITING, AND COME TO THEIR OWN CONCLUSIONS. THE LETTER WILL SET HONEST SPIRITUALISTS ALL OVER THE WORLD TO THINKING AS NEVER BEFORE.

Los Gatos June 6

Dear Laura.

Yours only received yesterday evening almost at the beginning of your last Seance. I really don't know what to say: about Black. It is dangerous. but if you can't do any better you will have to. but for God sake be careful. Why don't you get Mr Allen? have your Seances in the evenings he can be there and give him a dollar every time. Be so perfectly safe. a little short one always comes to him (Minnie Williams) and calls him her big uncle then she steps back. draws the lace over enough to cover her hair and make herself look tall by standing on her tip toes (Oh God if anyone should see this) and jumps out as his mother, throws her arms around him and call him "my dear boy." Then let "Madam" his soul mate come about your height. This in the bright robes. Never mind his "tongue" he don't mean anything. Let him suck. By all means let lonely come if called for. I don't know who Howard is, unless you mean Sawtell Howard. Don't take any Hall for materialization, No! No! No! Allen could get a crowd all right but it would hurt you. Do you mean Lester of Sawtell? Of course he is all right and a firm believer. A little skeptical. Will bear lots of taffy. So will Will Stewart. Yes, let Lilly come and sing. Always say Elsie sent her. Don't pay Taylor unless you are obliged to, especially, Laura, if you have ever been intimate with him. If he presses you for it, pay him and ten tell him to do his worst. If he threatens to write you up, or if you think he will, tell him you have a very particular friend on one of the papers, who will publish anything you wish to tell him of his woman and [certain words omitted.—Editor.] The [word omitted.—Editor.] man Kidd is not dead, nor is he her husband. She may now remember him. He attended my seance 16 years ago and I thought they were quite friendly; but let her go to thunder. The less attention you give to such cattle the more they will think of you. The whole family were [words omitted.—Editor.]. Her husband and one of her sons have been in rows with women, but say nothing. I've not heard yet from "Annie." Don't care. Say! don't speak of Presta or Lindsey, nor mention their names. "He who laughs last, laughs best," wait till I come, by that time he will be tired of her. If not, let him go. Be friendly with Brower when you see him, but don't help him. Tell him you have always heard Elsie speak so highly of him. Don't let him know you heard from me. Tell him Broskie told you and I that he would take B—— place and he could never get in there again, that Hall was his friend and backer. He did say it to Frank and I, but make Brower think he said it to you and I. A little lie won't hurt. I've an object sure. So George has quit; well I expect the poor old fellow is tired. Let him rest. Oh, I wish I could give you tests, but I can't, Go to Mrs. Augusta Ferress, in the Grand Pacific and get her to give you some on Truth Seekers. She is true and a lady. In case she would be afraid I will send her a note by you. Don't never let this J—— know I advised you to leave there. She is sick all the time, poor soul. Give the name of Minnie Curry in Truth S—— and if an old lady recognizes it tell her it is her grand child died several years ago, 3 or 4 years old. If a young woman acknowledges it it will be her mother who got a divorce from her husband and married about a year ago. She has twin boys about 7 years of age and a girl about 12, each living. Tell her she has friends by the name of Martin in Spt., her mother's name is Martin. If you catch Mrs. Cobb ever in public, tell her there is a Dr. Nicles or Nicols comes to her, you think a husband. Large, portly man, rather light complexion, side whiskers. He says, wife, we were happy together and I am glad you are happy now. Died in Kansas City, I believe rather suddenly. Say, there is a small old man comes with him who says, I know Dr. Nicols prolonged my life. Mr. Little is his name. Wife in Pomona. Tell her also she has a gentleman friend in Spt. by the name of Reynolds. He was her first husband and he says our dear girl is happy. She is married and I think living in Boston. Mrs. Cobb was very anxious for him to come out as a platform test medium. I don't know their names. Tell her a young man by the name of Eddy Golding comes to her, a tall dark complexioned man, looks as if he passed out with consumption. Oh yes! He says you married him to Daisy on his death bed. Say Eddy says I have Daisy's father with him now. Name Brooks, San Diego.

A Mrs. House is always in the Hall, whose husband I think is dead. Mrs. Perkins is her daughter and is always there. Throw out some common names to them. Say you hear the name of Barnes. He is always there. You can bring Mother or Father. George Sanford always comes in late. He has a Book out called Inspirational Poems of Truth and Humor. He has a father in Spt. James wife Spt. Laura Augusta. Don't give them too straight. Say, on the platform stands a middle aged medium sized woman, rather gray or light hair pompadore, and her name is Browning. She was from President of Truth Seekers. Let her entrance you and then talk as beautiful as possible to all, and let her say the angels took my while in the Seance at Browers, but don't say that) just as I always wanted to go. God Bless Brower and Ethel Brindle. Don't never mention my name. Bring a wife to some one by name of Stevens. Throw the name out then give a wife. That is all I can think of now. Go there often. I'll try to think of more as I can think of them. Say, here is an old lady and gentleman, big people and old. They say they want Jack to know they are together in Spt. life) It will be recognized, even if he is not there. They always attended. She died first and he married a young woman which hurt their living son. Give these tests just as I tell you. Mary Oliver comes to her husband. I can't think of anything more.

Yes! move away from there by all means. Then when you want to write or anything else and any of the boxes comes you can keep still and tell them you were out or asleep. Where are you going to hold your next in Los Angeles. Anderson, Eh? You charge your regular 50c and don't let a lot of deadheads in, and take up your own collection too. Look out for Anderson's married daughter upstairs and for his son also. Johnson is very rich. Has a [certain word omitted.—Editor.] of a sister-in-law living with them. She struck at a spirit once when she—Johnson—and Anderson were having a private sitting and said "she has on a wig" M—— had her put out, you bet. Bowman went you bet, forced out. He had hurt himself, the old hypocrite. Try to get Mrs. Mills to your Seance from Santa Monica. Chase will be with her. Ask for Uncle Billy. I got the finest chicken dinner to-day and I made it myself and told Frank I wished you were here to help us to eat it. Say Laura, did you ever have any experience with chickens? Frank and I are thinking of going into it this fall. I've always wanted a congenial companion with me, one who could help me with the work, and each put in a little capital and work in unison. I believe we could get along together, don't you? We would never see anybody but ourselves here, and I don't want to. Ask me anything you want, only be careful. Find Lewis if you can, in directory, and let some of their friends take you there and get in with them. You could give them so many tests in the hall. Never let on you know me. Tell me how you did at the Hall and how you are making it in Sawtell. Good bye Laury, God bless you.

Your loving friend,

Yes, I got the papers. Keep the article I sent about Browers. If Taylor raises a row tell him you have a letter he wrote me from Napa that is a regular blackmailing thing, and that you know some of his friends in San Francisco, a lady who keeps a bakery on 2nd St. Doty and go to one of Annie's Seances, but don't say anything to Lindsey, and don't help her. Be friendly. I don't know Oakly. If lule comes make him pay, then bring an Indian to dance with him.

MRS. ELSIE HORNBECK.

She Addresses the Members of the Frances Willard Circle.

As it has been impossible for me to answer all the personal letters I have received in regard to this circle work, I take this method of reaching as many of you as I can. Nearly all of you take The Progressive Thinker, and they who do not ought to subscribe for it at once to keep in line with the onward march of this movement. I have been greatly encouraged by the results of last year's work, and am inspired to continue striving for even greater results. Many of our members have been developed into active mediumship, and all who have been faithful and persistent have been benefited by sitting in our circle. If the work depended upon me alone, or any mortal, it would not be a success. Our invisible helpers are guiding us on to greater heights of spirituality and broader fields of truth. We are conscious of a mighty, strong power in our midst, and that to bless.

Now, I would like to hear personally from every one of you who reads these lines, letting me know of what benefit the circle has been to you, and if you wish to continue your membership, as it has become necessary to reorganize and appoint the leaders for the several divisions of the entire circle.

In a letter lately received from one earnest brother he says: "I am sitting every Thursday evening as usual. I, however, missed three evenings in the last three months, which was very much against my will, but unavoidable. I am really more interested in Spiritualism now than ever, being able in a measure to see the wonderful amount of good it is doing the darkened world."

Now, brothers and sisters, let us be faithful to our Thursday evening meetings, keeping the appointment we have made with the higher intelligences to admit them within the sacred portals of our homes that they may bestow upon us by their presence, health, strength and happiness. Let us prepare the circle room in advance, making it clean and attractive, with flowers and growing plants; also let us prepare our minds for our spiritual communion by banishing all unclean, impure, obscene and doubting thoughts, knowing that in the communion with higher intelligences "our redeemer liveth." I thank you all for your encouraging words, and here pledge myself anew to do all in my power to advance the Frances E. Willard Health and Developing Circle. I hope to hear from every member of the circle as soon as possible, for there are new developments in which all should have a share. We also extend a cordial invitation to all who wish to join the circle to write to me, who am always your loving sister in spirit,

ELSA HORNBECK.

WHAT AM I?

Oh! great eternal Infinite,
The great unbounded whole,
Thy body is the universe,
Thy spirit is the soul.

If thou dost fill immensity,
If thou art all in all,
If thou wert here before I was,
I am not here at all.

How could I live outside of thee?
Dost thou fill earth and air?
There surely is no place for me
Outside of everywhere!

If thou art God and thou dost fill
Immensity of space,
Then I am God, think as you will,
Or else I have no place.

And if I have no place at all,
Or if I am here,
Banished I surely cannot be,
For then I'd be somewhere.

Then I must be a part of God,
No matter if I'm small,
For if I am not part of God
Then there's no God at all.

An Essay on "The Mouth."

A teacher asked a school boy to prepare an essay on "The Mouth," and the boy handled the subject as follows:

"The mouth is the front door of the face; it is the hot-bed of toothache and the bung-hole of oratory. The mouth is the crimson aisle to the liver; it is the fountain of patriotism and the tool-chest for pie. Without the mouth the parson would be a wanderer on the face of the earth and go down to a dishonored grave. It is the home of the unruly member, the tongue. It is the grocer's friend, the orator's pride, the dentist's hope."—Truth Seeker.

"There Is a Cure

Ohio Spiritualists, Attention!

The sixth annual convention of the Ohio State Association of Spiritualists will be held in the city of Columbus, May 27, 28, and 29, in the Board of Trade auditorium. Three sessions will be held daily during the entire convention. All societies are earnestly requested to send their full quota of delegates, and individual members are urged to be present in person. Business of importance is to come before the convention, in which every Ohio Spiritualist is interested.

Local societies and members desiring to offer amendments to the constitution must file the same with the secretary prior to April 25, 1904, as none can be legally acted upon, received after that date.

Full particulars regarding program, etc., will be given in a future issue of The Progressive Thinker.

BOOKS OF THE DAY.

PSYCHIC LIGHT; THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE. By Mrs. Maud Lord Drake. The Frank T. Riley Pub. Co., Kansas City, Mo. Price, $1.50.

This work, consisting of 600 pages, neatly bound in cloth, is a marvel of excellence. Mrs. Drake is well and favorably known in every part of the United States, and the experiences and incidents of her remarkable career are graphically written. A medium from childhood, the manifestations given in her presence are wonderfully impressive, and will hold your attention through the entire book. It will tell you something of the following: Attends a Funeral in Spirit; Animals Clairvoyant and Clairaudient; A Pair of Slippers Walk Up Stairs in Day Light; Catches the Music Box in Mid Air; Chinese Seance; Child Medium; Christ Is Coming—Christ is Here—a Vision; Colored Seance by Washington's Exclusive 400; Faces on Frosted Window Glass; How Spirits Talk; Locates Buried Money; Money Materializes in the Air; Murdered Woman Reports Her Death; Silver Brick Presented to the Medium; Spiritual Faculties, and so on and on through the 600 pages; every page full of spiritual meat. An excellent book for church members as well as Spiritualists.

AFTER HER DEATH; THE STORY OF A SUMMER. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Company, Boston, Publishers. Price $1.

Anything that emanates from the mind of Lilian Whiting possesses great value. "After Her Death" will prove especially interesting. She wisely claims that when the spiritual being that has lived a certain period here slips out of its physical body, and is free from material clogs and lamentations, the readjustment in a number of ways is made. Those who still remain in this world, are far more truly recognized; some have been unduly appreciated; some have been underestimated. The risen spiritual being, now being able to discern spiritual states, and to adjust all to a new scale of values, rearranges his loves and friendships, so to speak. In fact here is a type of the judgment day.

THE LIFE RADIANT. By Lilian Whiting. Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston. Price, $1.

The author sets forth in beautiful language that the Life Radiant is that transfiguration of the ordinary daily events and circumstances which lifts them to the spiritual plane, and sees them as the signs and the indications of the divine leading. Every circumstance thus becomes a part of revelation, and to constantly live in this illuminated atmosphere is to invest all experiences with a kind of magical enchantment. Life prefigures before us a spiritual drama in which we are at once the actors and the spectators.

In this book Miss Whiting aims to portray a practical ideal for daily living that shall embody the sweetness and exaltations and faith that lend enchantment to life. It is, in a measure, a logical sequence of "The World Beautiful," leading into still diviner harmonies. It is calculated to render the soul in harmony with the universe. It is truly an inspiration.

THE NATURE CURE BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS. Illustrated. A Bridge from the Old to the New. The Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. By M. E. Conger, M. D., Assisted by Mrs. Rosamond Conger, M. D. The Educator Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill. Price, bound in fine English cloth, $2; in neat, substantial cloth, $1.50.

This work presents in a plain concise manner home treatment for nearly all the diseases to which the human frame is heir. The author says:

"The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

"Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of the Nature Cure.

"The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as Nature Cure.

"Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. Nature Cure will lead the way to certain success.

"The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH. Scientifically Examined and Carefully Described. By C. W. Leadbeater. Theosophical Book Concern, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

This book comprises 502 octavo pages, in clear print, durably bound in cloth. The subject matter, pertaining to the spiritual nature of man and the immortality of his essential being, is of deepest interest and intense import to all thinkers, whether Materialists, Spiritualists or Agnostics. Mr. Leadbeater is widely and favorably known as a lecturer and author. He presents the views of the advanced Theosophist, in a clear and kindly manner, entertainingly and instructively elucidating the subject from the theosophical standpoint. The special chapters are devoted to: Some Misconceptions About Death. The Evidence for Continued Life. Religious Misconceptions. Our Attitude Towards Death. The Facts as They Are. Some Examples of Astral Life. Astral Surroundings. The Desire Elemental. An Extension of Consciousness. The Work of the Helpers. Astral Visits. Visits Just Before Death. Thought-Bodies. Apparitions Announcing Death. Those Who Return to Help. Those Who Need Help. Those Desiring to Atone. The Earth-bound. Hauntings. Apparently Aimless Apparitions. Less Frequent Types. Astral Impressions. How to Meet a Ghost. Classification of Spiritualistic Phenomena. Personal Experiences. The Utilization of the Medium's Body. Clairvoyance in Spiritualism. Partial Materialization. Miscellaneous Phenomena. Visible Materializations. Our Attitude Towards Spiritualism. The Heaven World. The Nature of the Evidence. How Clairvoyance is Developed. Index. The Objects of the Theosophical Society.

THRESHING STRAW.

A Consideration of Dr. Caird's Article.

In reference to Dr. Caird's article in the issue of March 12, I can agree with the most that he states, but when he says, "Doesn't it seem a pity to waste so much time disproving the Bible and exposing the old fallacies," he seems to carry the idea that a belief in the Bible and the creeds that have grown out of it, is a thing of the past; that so few now believe it it is a waste of time to disprove it. He does not seem to be aware of the fact that a majority of orthodox Christians to-day would look upon any person as a rank infidel who would dare to say that the Bible is not the infallible word of God, and would stare at a man with unfeigned surprise if he would say that he did not believe the Bible to be inspired.

Go into any of our churches, and hear them talk about "God's word," "we read in God's word so and so," etc. That does not indicate by any means that a belief in the Bible and old ideas or "old fallacies" is a thing of the past.

I have noticed this tendency of some Spiritualist and free-thought writers to assume that old creeds and religious beliefs are played out; that so few people now believe in the Bible that it is "threshing straw" to mention it. If these writers will calmly consider the number of liberals and Spiritualists as compared to the millions who still adhere to the orthodox churches and to the Bible as the word of God, they will see that there is a wonderful amount of "straw" to be "threshed" yet before the world will be converted either to Spiritualism or materialism, and even then, if all were converted to these two isms, the Materialists would have to free the Spiritualists from their "superstitions" and "old fallacies" with regard to a future life.

Now, I believe it is not best, in the interests of Spiritualism, to radically attack the Bible or other religious beliefs, in introducing the philosophy of Spiritualism, because I recognize the fact that a majority of the church members of all denominations still believe in the Bible as the word of God, and if such persons should finally be convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, one of the hardest things for them to do is to give up the Bible as the word of God, and Jesus as a savior. We can see this tendency in such advanced Spiritualists as Moses Hull, Dr. Peebles, and others who have come from the churches, and herein is the reason that some speakers "come with the Bible in their hands."

If a speaker has come from Materialism, he generally discards the Bible, rites, ceremonies, fads, superstitions, prayers, etc., but if he has come from any of the orthodox churches, he drags in the Bible, baptism, prayers, christening of children, and other forms and ceremonies of the churches. Herein, I think, is the main reason for the diverse teachings of speakers on the spiritual rostrum.

In all ages new religions have borrowed forms, ceremonies, traditions and customs from the old, and spiritualism is no exception. It is copying more and more of the rites and ritualism of the churches. In the main I think this is against the cause. If there is any truth in Spiritualism, it certainly stands out "clear cut," clearly defined, standing alone on the plane of science and truth, and should not sink its individuality by borrowing forms and ceremonies from the churches. Like the "pyramids," it should rise above the plain, firmly poised on its own base.

For fifteen years I have been investigating Spiritualism, reading papers and books devoted to the subject, with occasionally a little phenomena thrown in, but like the mariner at sea, I have been drifted hither and thither by adverse winds and currents until I do not know just "where I am at."

What does Spiritalism teach?

What is the gender of Spiritualism?

Does Spiritualism teach scientifically, or does Spiritualism teach religiously?

Is Spiritualism a creed born of religion?

If so, what is the creed of Spiritualism, and what is Spiritualism?

From a religious standpoint Spiritualism cannot be called a religion. Religion is of the singular number, and hence Spiritualism, at best, could only be designated as a creed of religion. To say all religions is incorrect. We should say, all creeds of religion—the Jewish creed, Greek creed, Roman creed, Mahometan creed, Episcopalian creed, etc.

If Spiritualiism is a creed, why not say the religous creed of Spiritualism? And why not support the God of the creeds named?

Why do the teachers of Spiritualism talk of an infinite intelligence?

What is an infinite intelligence?

Is infinite supreme?

Is intelligence knowledge?

What is intelligence?

What is infinite?

Is the Czar the infinite intelligence of the Greek creed, and the Pope the infinite intelligence of the Roman creed?

Is there any intelligence beyond the head of the creed? Is intelligence infinite?

If creeds have developed anything beyond intelligence, what is it?

Who or what creed invented or evolved the words "Infinite Intelligence?"

What is religion? What does religion teach?

Can there be a true and a false religion? How are we to distinguish between the true and the false in religion or the creeds?

What is the gender of religion?

What is the occasion of so many creeds?

Has any one ever discovered a key for us ignorant folk, that would guide us aright? If so, where can that key be procured? Is it a product of evolution? If so, can any one, not an evolutionist, become an heir?

STOP THE PAPER.

"I've stopped the paper, yes, I hev;
I didn't like to do it,
But the ed'tor got too smart,
And I allow he'll rue it.
I, a man as pays his debts,
And I won't be insulted,
So when an editor gets smart
I want to be consulted.
I took his paper eleven years,
An' helped him all I could, sir,
An' when it comes to dunnin' me,
I didn't think he would, sir.
But that he did, an' you can bet
It made me hot as thunder.
Says I, 'I'll stop that sheet, I will,
If the cussed thing goes under!'
I hunted up the measly whelp
An' as for his cunnin' caper
I paid eleven years an' quit!
Yes, sir, I've stopped his paper!"

NOTES FROM G. H. BROOKS.

Wanderings and Work in Various Fields.

I believe in my last letter I spoke of my wanderings while in Ohio, but had not finished with the state. I began my work for the Independent Society in Toledo the first Sunday in February. The name "Independent" means that they are independent of the state association, and, if I am correct, are also independent of the National. To my mind, independence is all right in some ways, but when it comes to the society work it would seem to me a far more effectual work could be done by a union of all our forces. There is need enough for concentrated action along our lines, and too long have many of our societies stood aloof from each other, thus crippling the work that might otherwise be done. Mr. Dowd is president, Mr. Lynch is secretary, and Mr. Huffman, treasurer.

The society met in what is known as Memorial Hall, an annex to the G. A. R. building. It is a large hall, and during the severe weather we have had, was never warm, keeping many persons away who would otherwise have attended. So the society secured another hall, better equipped for their work in every way, and moved into it the first Sunday in March. I have not learned what kind of success they have in their new quarters. There is a lyceum held from one until two o'clock, not large but doing the best they can with the materials on hand. The society holds a social once a month to help defray the expense of the meeting. They have had, as all societies have had this winter, the disadvantage of severe weather and dangerous sidewalks, making it unsafe for many persons to be out, and causing on the part of the officials a great deal of extra work. The Independent Society could not exist were it not for the help it receives from the few who give it a financial backing. This society is purchasing a lot in a good location, intending to build a temple as soon as possible, and I hope and pray they may soon have a temple to meet in. While I was with them I organized a Ladies' Aid which will do a most effectual work. I trust, though, the day is not far distant when the society will upite with the state society, and thus add to its influence and power.

Toledo is the home of Mrs. Curran, the president of the state society. Mrs. Curran has been more than busy in getting the scattered forces together, and organizing them to do effectual work. If the Spiritualists of Ohio will rally to Mrs. Curran, they will build up the cause of Spiritualism in Ohio, so that it will make a showing to the world and take its place as a reform movement and a power for good in the world.

There are some conditions in Toledo that I wish were otherwise—some who need to feel there is a high, a spiritual line of work, and a work that will be done in the broad light of day.

While there I was called upon to officiate at the funeral of an old-time Spiritualist, Mr. Griffith, who passed away at the home of his sons. Mr. Griffith was full of years, and ripe for the harvest.

I visited Port Huron, Mich., at the home of my friends of many years—Mr. and Mrs. J. H. White—who are ever ready to aid in the cause of Spiritualism. Mr. White has long been identified with the cause in Michigan—one time the honored president of Haslett Park Camp, then for many years president of Island Lake Camp, giving of his time and means to help build up both camps. He was also president of the Society at Port Huron, but the society is not doing anything, at present.

Port Huron is the home of Mr. and Mrs. Renwick. Mr. Renwick is a well-known materializing medium, and many there are who to-day rejoice in the knowledge of spirit return through his instrumentality. On my way to Toledo, I stopped over one night to visit my friend, Mr. C. H. Harvey and family, of Detroit. Mr. Harvey was at one time president of the Flint society. Mr. Harvey was not at home, but I enjoyed my visit with the son and daughter. In the evening we went out and called on Mrs. Kate Cleveland, a well-known medium who has many warm friends all over the land. I found she has not changed any, is the same Kate Cleveland of yore, and has her ever genial spiritual adviser and the friend of so many. I did not have the time to call on others of our workers there, but I learned that the cause is moving on in the hands of different mediums—Mrs. LaGrange and others whose names have slipped my memory.

The next week I was called to Milwaukee, Wis., on a matter of business, thus making my stay in Toledo somewhat broken. On my way to Buffalo I stopped off at Collingwood and visited my friends, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Ruggles, he being known as the popular conductor on the Lake Shore road. I held a parlor meeting at their residence. I then stopped at Painesville, Ohio, and held two meetings at the parlors of Mr. Smith, so well-known all through Ohio and at Lily Dale. I also stayed one night at Conneaut, Ohio, and met the young friends who were invited by Mrs. Caufman (who was speaking for them) to spend an evening with her at the home of the president and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. S. Mahaffy. A most enjoyable time was passed.

Saturday I started for Buffalo, N. Y., where I was to speak for the month of February. I was met at the depot by Mr. Byrum, who took me to the ever hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Ey and her sister, Mrs. Darch, where I have been most royally entertained and made to feel at home.

I began my labors Sunday morning, February 2 in the worst storm of rain, slush and water that could be conceived of; I had while in Buffalo the worst weather of the season. The attendance has been better than one could expect with the horrible weather. I found the society in a peculiar condition. During the month the temple has been sold, and the society now pays rent for what was hoped at one time to be their own. Mrs. Matteson who has done so much for the society felt she could no longer carry the burden of the temple, and no one can blame her. The society is now trying to purchase the Unitarian church on Delaware Avenue, a very fine building, complete in every respect. It is to be hoped they will either secure that or some other building suited to their work. I organized a Ladies' Aid which will do a good work in the future. Two entertainments were given while I was there which were well attended, yielding a handsome sum—one literary, the other a card party, supper and dance.

On the 8th of February, I assisted in holding a state meeting at Tonawanda, N. Y., with Mrs. Atcheson. Mr. Richardson, the state president, was sick, so I presided and delivered the address. Mrs. Atcheson followed with her marked spiritual delineations and tests. In spite of the severity of the weather there was a very large attendance, and I hope good was done.

Tuesday, the 16th, I spoke in East Aurora, N. Y., for the society there. This is the home of Mr. H. W. Richardson, the state president, and of Elbert Hubbard. I did not have time to visit the various meetings held in different parts of the society, or attend any of the many circles, as my time was fully taken. Dr. Eddy holds a prominent position at the temple, where he has on sale all of the spiritual papers, also receiving subscriptions for the same, as well as many books on Spiritualism. He also receives subscriptions for The Progressive Thinker, which has such a wide field of influence and is regarded as the standard of excellence by people who are even but slightly acquainted with the various journals or Spiritualism. Mrs. Murtha, of Baltimore, is now filling an engagement with the society, and is feeding the spiritually hungry with her excellent tests.

I leave Buffalo, Saturday, March 12, for Williamsport, Pa., then the next week on to Philadelphia, new fields of labor to me, there to meet new forces and come in touch with new conditions. But everywhere I go I shall bear the message of Spiritualism, knowing that it will uplift the race when rightly understood.

I am the well-wisher of all in the thought of spiritual unfoldment.

The only effective criticism of a poor religion is the creation of a better one.

I cannot accept the idea of the Bible that is taught by the Catholic church, I cannot accept the idea of the Bible that is taught by the orthodox Protestant church, because I cannot find any adequate reason for accepting the beliefs about it of either.—M. J. Savage.

From the Spirit Realms.

Spirit Carlyle Petersilea.

While on Earth Mr. Petersilea was a medium for the transmission of important letters from those long in spirit life. Now, having become a freed spirit himself, he will convey his best thoughts through the mediumship of his devoted wife, and we are sure they will prove interesting to our readers.

Letter Number Three.

Now, dear friends and readers of The Progressive Thinker, I returned to my wife. She had just retired to her bed, and was in a state between waking and sleeping, and that means that the spirit is partially freed from the body, and as my spirit came en rapport with hers, she saw all that had passed between me and my old friend, Franz Liszt; she also saw, pictured within the ether, Liszt and myself as we came forth from the cathedral.

"Ah! Carlyle," she exclaimed, "although, in your last days on earth, you lost your former prestige, and was held in contempt by many, on account of your spiritual belief, you have been able already to help one of the greatest and grandest of musicians; besides, a former pupil; and who can tell the vast amount of good you may still be able to do?"

This was her always. Prestige, pomp, show and glitter held no charms for her.

"Truth—truth! Carlyle," she would say. "We can afford to starve, but not to forswear that which we know to be true. But the angels will not let us starve. I feel sure of that. If we work faithfully for them, they will see to it that we are provided for."

While I am on this subject, I wish to tell the readers of The Progressive Thinker a story, if agreeable to the editor of that grand and good paper. But if he does not think it best to publish it, why, he can cut it out.

Some few years ago while I was still in the mortal form, my wife had an exceedingly lame wrist. It had been sprained, then rheumatism set in, and she was in great pain and suffered continually with it. At last it became so bad that she could not use it, and I concluded to send her to Long Beach, to a sanitarium there, where colored glass was used as one of the healing agents. We already owned our home in Glendale, together with six acres of land—that is it belonged to my wife in her own right—more than enough, as I thought, for any musician to own, as, of course, I could not work the land. But we both loved our home although the land gave us little or no return.

Every day, after taking her treatment at the Sanitarium, my wife would go down on the pier, at Long Beach, and sit in the pavilion, to inhale the mild air that came sweeping across the Pacific.

Now, I would like it to be well understood, that my father's spirit was our guardian angel, my wife being very susceptible to his influence. Every day, when my wife was seated calmly on the pier, my father would come to her—she seeing him plainly with her inner vision—and say, as he pointed in a certain direction; "Go right over there and buy a house lot."

"Oh, no; that would not be wise," said she. "We have already more land than we can possibly take care of, and Carlyle is not in a position now, to purchase more land. It would be a most foolish thing to do, I am sure."

But the next day, and the next and so on, the same command would be given: "Go directly over there"—as he pointed—"and buy a house-lot."

Every Thursday I went down to see my wife, and how she was getting on, so, when Thursday came, I went down as usual. I found my wife on the pier.

"Do you know, dear," she said, after our greeting was over, "that your father insists that we shall go over there"—as she pointed—"and buy a house-lot."

"Why!" I exclaimed, "that would be suicidal. I have no money, just now, to buy it with, and we have already more land than we know what to do with. The land we have is already sinking us, I fear."

"That is just what I said to your father; and I think as you do; but he insists."

"Well, I shall not obey thns time," I said. "It may be a deceiving spirit."

"No," she answered; "no, it is really your father. I know him and cannot be deceived."

"Well, I shall not do so foolishly as to buy land that I do not want, and really should not know what to do with; moreover, I have no money to buy it with."

This settled the matter, as I thought, but as we went up from the pier, we passed a real estate agent's office, and just as we were opposite it, I was whirled about and forced, against my will, to enter this office and ask the agent what good house-lots he had for sale? He briskly told us that he had a good many; but one in particular that he was obliged to sell that very day, as the owner must have the money; and, strange as it may seem, the house-lot was situated on the very spot where my father had pointed. The lot was to be sold very cheap, for the owner wanted the money badly. Now, I had no money with me, and thought it best not to buy the land; but the agent said he would get the money for me at the bank, providing I paid a little more. This he did; and I bought the lot and deeded it to my wife.

Great God! how my heart rises up in gratitude, as I now think of it.

I bought the lot; the next year we put up a neat little gem of a cottage, and for a year or two we went down there during the hot season and were much invigorated and refreshed—and now comes the test and cream of it all. If I had not obeyed my father's voice, my poor wife would now be helpless in her old age and without the means of support. I have passed upward, as you know, and all know what fearful expenses attend such transitions. If my wife had nothing to depend upon but the homestead, all would have been lost by becoming deeply involved; but, my poor wife, in the midst of her deep grief, and with the help of my father, turned herself adroitly, built another cottage on the same lot of land, and is now living in comfort by renting the two cottages, which gives her what she needs, besides enabling her to keep the dear old homestead.

Oh, how sad it would be for her, at her age, to part with all that had been dear to us both—and now, right here I want to say a few words concerning mediumship, "The Great Psychological Crime" to the contrary.

I know the gift of mediumship to be divine, the grandest and best power ever given to mankind. Without it man would be scarcely higher than the brute creation; in fact, it is the one distinguishing trait that raises him above the lower animals. Without it he would sink into barbarism. It is the only ladder by which he climbs into heaven. The ladder it is said that Jacob saw, was the ladder of mediumship. On this ladder the angels—which means the messengers—ascended and descended. If one can find any other ladder by which angels ascend and descend to benefit mankind, I, for one, would like to know it. Mediumship instead of leading downward, forever leads upward. That there are bad spirits, I do not attempt to deny; there are also bad men and women; but a right-minded medium need not be beguiled, no more than a right-minded man or woman need be beguiled by bad men and women.

I might have been beguiled to enter the cathedral with Liszt; but, instead, I tried to lift him out of the mire of false teachings.

If a bad spirit comes near a medium and tempts him or her to do wrong, say to that spirit, as Jesus is said to have done: "Get thee behind me, Satan;" or, get thee gone, for I will not listen to anything that is not right. But the better way, to my thinking, is to say to that spirit: "This which you tempt me to do, is entirely wrong. I will not degrade myself by doing it, but as you are not capable of directing me aright, allow me to direct you; and then teach that lower soul the right way—show it the way to the heavenly light. Perhaps on earth it had no opportunity to become good; perhaps it had been a drunkard or a child of the slums. Be kind to it as you would to one of the same on earth; teach it and show it the right path.

All spirits are teachers, and all persons ought to be. The spirits are forever teaching those below them, and men and women of earth should teach those below them.

There are two points in this narrative that I would like to clear up; for, sometimes my control weakens a little, or I myself forget or overlook them.

Some may ask, how it was that I found an orchestra in a cathedral? My reply is this: In Franz Liszt's early days, it was customary to have a symphony orchestra in large cathedrals. This custom has since been discontinued, as larger organs have been manufactured and come into use; but this did not please Liszt. He often said to me, while in the mortal body, that the right place for a grand symphony was the church; and when he entered spirit life he found many cathedrals supplied with a grand orchestra, which pleased him much; and his own was one of the largest.

The other point is this: Some of my distant relatives have wanted to know if I left any real estate in California? To them, if their eyes chance to fall upon this, I want to say: The homestead, from the first, was deeded to my wife. When I bought the little property in Long Beach, my father's voice whispered in my ear: "Be sure and deed this to your wife;" which I did, to my great joy now that I have left her down there so desolate. But for my father's still, small voice, she might not now have a place to lay her head—moreover, I gave her a bill of sale to all my personal effects, together with the copy rights of my books; and I would like to advise all those who desire to leave anything to the cause of Spiritualism, to give deeds, in full, before they leave the mortal body, taking leases in return. Do not make wills that can be broken. I have found spirits here who were very unhappy because their wishes in this direction were not carried out.

In regard to the symphony orchestra, I will relate that, when I was a young man, in Germany, while at the Leipzig Conservatory, I desired very much to practice on an organ. The only one available was in a church. Very early, cold, winter mornings, I went to this church to practice; and I want to tell you all how the organ bellows was managed. A flight of steps led up to the handle of the bellows, the man who worked the bellows would run up this flight of stairs, seize the handle of the bellows, swing himself off and allow his weight to carry the handle down, and while it was going back, run up the stairs, ready to seize it again and carry it down in the same way. I used to pity the man so much that I could scarcely play. And so, between my sympathy for the man and my own half-frozen fingers, my hour of practicing was not a very pleasant one—and that poor man had to blow that bellows for a dozen or more pupils like myself.

Liszt was some fifty years my senior, so all can judge, by this, how it was in his early manhood and why an orchestra was needed.

LIFE NOT A FAILURE.

It Is Portrayed as Grand and Glorious.

To the Editor:—So much has been written and so many theories have been advanced in regard to the origin and destiny of man and of life, spirit force and intelligence, that many have been led to think and form opinions quite different from those of earlier beliefs.

In my hours of meditation I have arrived at certain conclusions in regard to the forces of nature and the vast universe of matter, and I will endeavor to present my ideas in as few words as possible to convey to my readers the thoughts sought to be expressed.

Eternal progress is the law of Nature. I cannot conceive of a beginning of time. We may go back in thought for billions and billions of ages, and yet we are no nearer the morning of time; and so with space. We may journey with the speed of thought to the most distant star, as we think, and yet beyond and beyond the universe extends, and we know that there can be no end.

I cannot conceive of a beginning of or creation of one particle of matter or spirit in all this vast universe. The elements of all life and force never had a beginning and can have no end. Nothing can be lost, and nothing added to. The laws of nature existed eternally, and thus could not have had a Creator or Lawmaker.

The First Great Cause, so-called, can not exist, because there was no first. Matter, force, spirit, design and life never had a starting point, and can have no end.

There is no circumference or center in Nature, and it is a mistake to talk of, or pray to, the Great Central Source of power. The forces of Nature, attraction and repulsion, positive and negative principles, inhere in all substance, and are the agents and builders of all worlds, all forms and all the orders of life that we behold.

Life exists in matter in all its forms; in the animal, the tree, the grass and in the millions of insects and germs so minute that no eye can see them, and all of this living spirit is endowed with intelligence, in a degree, from the lowest up to man.

The subject is so boundless that perhaps no mind can draw the line between matter and spirit, or trace the life spark in matter through all the gradations which this immortal germ has passed, through lower forms up to man, the positive and negative forces through the male and female producing the individualized human being, which is the highest expression of life that we know anything about—a soul with infinite capabiilties!!

We perceive a tendency through all life and matter towards a higher and more harmonious condition—not always continuous, but in waves, seeming at times to retrograde, but all progressive when understood. Man being a part of Nature and the product of this unfolding, is governed by the same law he has inherited, and must rise to higher and higher conditions, just as positively as the planets are compelled to follow their course around their central sun. Life experience is an eternal school. Towards a wider knowledge and more harmonious being; and as progress is eternal, so our life in the limitless future, must continue to take on new experiences, forever and forever.

It is not necessary that we should all travel the same road of progress. There are millions of roads that lead up and around and through the hills of knowledge and beauty. This continuous learning, with a loving companion, will constitute one of the great pleasures of life. When we have outgrown all selfishness, it will be a joy to help our less developed brother man and sister woman to more harmonious conditions.

If in the great future we could become perfect—that is, if we could know all that the vast universe of space contains now or ever will contain—then life would become a failure. No more to learn—stagnation, monotony, death! No! we must continue to unfold and gather in by experience all we come in contact with, for life is eternal activity.

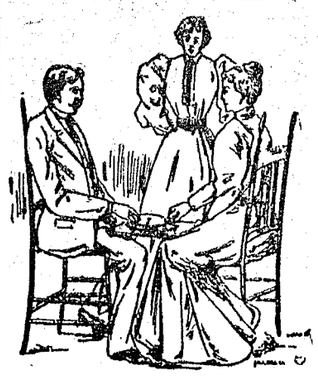
Think of the unlimited possibilities in the future for each of us. We may, indeed wonder and doubt, and ask, who am I? What am I? Where will I be in a thousand or million years hence? Will our loved ones be with us? Will love, beauty and satisfaction fill us continually with unutterable joy forevermore?

Yes, that is the only rational answer. Life is not a failure! Life is glorious! J. M. MATHEWS.

San Francisco, Cal.

The Essence of Life Is Divine.

Fair are the flowers and the children, but their subtle suggestion is fairer;
Rare is the rosebursf of dawn, but the secret that clasps it is rarer;
Sweet the exultance of song, but the strain that precedes it is sweeter,
And never was poem yet writ but the meaning outmastered the meter.



Never a daisy that grows but a mystery guideth the growing;
Never a river that flows but a majesty scepters the flowing;
Never a Shakspeare that soared but a stronger than he did enfold it
Nor ever a prophet foretold but a mightier seer hath foretold him.

Back of the canvas that throbs, the painter is hinted and hidden;
Into the statue that breathes, the soul of the sculptor is bidden;
Under the joy that is felt lie the infinite issues of feeling;
Crowning the glory revealed is the glory that crowns the revealing.

Great are the symbols of being, but that which is symboled is greater;
Vast the create and beheld, but vaster the invised creator;
Back of the sound broods the silence, back of the gift stands the giving;
Back of the hand that receives thrill the sensitive nerves of receiving.

Space is as nothing to spirit, the deed is outdone by the doing;
The heart of the wooer is warm, but warmer the heart of the wooing;
And up from the pits where these shiver, and up from the heights where those shine,
Twin voices and shadows swim starward and the essence of life is divine.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

APOSTROPHE TO TIME.

Through countless ages on thy course,
O Time! thou stayest not thy flight
Of years! One moment heedest not
The sad'ning tears of grief or pain!
Thine everlasting march of days
Rolls swiftly on o'er birth and death
Of worlds; whose age, a million years
Mark but the dawn of life began!

Thou turn'st not back thy stoic face
Nor castest yet one pitying glance
On downcast millions of the earth
Whose only crime is honest strife
By sweat of brow, by toil, by pain,
Their children's hunger to appease,
And shiv'ring bodies shield from blasts
Of wintry winds which moan through walls
Of lowly hovels where they sleep!

Thou castest not one backward glance
Upon the scene of cheerless homes
Before whose black and fireless hearth,
With visage pale and wan is seen
The children dear on bended knees
Before their mother plead for bread!

Thou stayest not when deep despair
Rests on her soul; and heart cords rend
At sight of death beheld upon
The face of darlings dear!
Nor yet is moved thy heart of stone
When frenzy to her brain doth fly,
And prostrate on the frozen hearth
Before her starving children dies!

O Time! Thy marble heart beats not
A throb of love for one sad soul
Bowed down in grief through weary years!

A VERY IMPORTANT CALL IS MADE.

A GENEROUS OFFER, AND A CALL TO SPIRITUALISTS.

To the Spiritualists at Large:—A generous offer has been made by a prominent Spiritualist in this city to give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., for the benefit of aged and needy mediums, provided the Spiritualists at large will contribute another Taousand Dollars to the same relief fund by the first of June next. The N. S. A. is now paying out a large monthly sum in pensions to worthy mediums; the calls for aid increase and the fund is constantly being depleted. Let every generous soul who has not already done all possible for this worthy object, kindly send contributions, large or small, to the following address, each will be acknowledged with thanks. The generous man who makes the offer desires to be unnamed to the public.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

WAKE UP! ILLINOIS.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, the widely known missionaries of the N. S. A., are now ready to work for the promulgation of Spiritualism by organizing local societies of Spiritualists in Illinois. Let general advantage of their availability be taken at once. Do not delay in communicating with them at Rochester, Indiana, until further notice.

The time will soon be gone and your opportunity lost if you dally with indecision. Get out of the graveyard of indifference. GEO. B. WARNE, President Ill. S. S. A.

A Grand, Good Movement.

The spirit which shows itself in concentrating capital in great trusts, by which the smaller fry are barred from competition, has now taken possession of the churches, and they are proposing to double up, unite several churches with one clergyman to preside over the united church, he performing the duties which usually devolved on several, while they who are retired, it is presumed, are to be driven into other fields of labor. The claim is: Too many ministers are working for small salaries, and congregations are too small." The probabilities are, the Lord has "called" too many into his service to make it profitable for all of them, hence the necessity of weeding out the most unproductive. Success to the movement, say we.

A CORRECTION.

Curious mistakes sometimes occur in a newspaper office. One did happen last week, under the head of "Outspoken Words," on the fourth page. Dr. G. B. Warne's name appeared at the end of the article—a mistake on the part of the printer, we regret to say. Our Reporter alone is responsible for the article, and not Dr. Warne. The wrong "line" was placed at the bottom of the article.

Obsolete Revivalism.

Just at the present time an extra and concerted effort is being made by evangelical ministers to arouse a revival furore in Chicago. Conversions by the thousand are hoped and prayed for. As a powerful and efficient means to this desired end, the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, as reported in the press, recommends that preachers should preach more about hell.

It is simply a recurrence of the olden revivalists plan of frightening sinners into the ark of safety, literally scaring them into the church and heaven.

The time was when this method was very effective in "adding to the church such as should be saved."

No doubt there are many, very many sinners who "should be saved," and Chicago has its full quota of that sort. Perhaps one could not shy a brickbat or dornick in the street without hitting one of that class. Nor would it be safe to hurl a missile into a congregation of church members during "divine services," under the assurance that no miserable sinners would be wounded.

But, really, is Dr. Chapman so superbly ignorant of the progress of human thought, as not be aware of the fact that the old time evangelical concept of hell has been left in the cobwebed pigeon-holes of memory—almost forgotten, and wholly obsolete except to a few "elect" non-progressive preachers of whom he is a type?

As a Methodist minister wisely remarked: "We may preach the old doctrines, but they do not have the old effect."

If one inquires, Why is this thus? the answer is, the people have outgrown the old dogmas, and have lost faith in hell and the preachers of damnation.

Free thought and Spiritualism are leavening thinking minds with their enlightening, humanizing, healthful impress.

So mote it be.

Speaks in a Trance-Like Condition.

A correspondent of the Chicago Record Herald, in a recent communication concerning the Hon. Bourke Cockran's return to Congress from New York, after the lapse of many years, writes as follows of his oratorical attainments:

"Mr. Cockran has said of himself that when he is stimulated by a great congregation, and by a topic that greatly interests him, he speaks almost in a trance, exactly the mental exultation, so to call it, of which Henry Ward Beecher was recently said by a friend to have made a confession. Every student of oratory and of the great orators, knows well enough what that trancelike condition is—the mental faculties overstimulated so that the senses themselves seem completely subordinated, an approach almost to cerebral condition that may be likened to momentary delirium. Mr. Cockran says that in his highest flights he sees no audience and identifies no face. He hears no sound and is unconscious even of the modulations of his voice. If he only had the sense of humor which with Beecher was always present, and sometimes overmastering, these unconscious flights of ortnory might be worth preserving as some of Beecher's sermons are. Although, in private life, Mr. Cockran seems to possess a power of wit and certainly a gift of humorous comparison that is pleasing and really the chief qualification for his coveted association with those who are cultivated, nevertheless that gift is either subordinated or forgotten when he speaks earnestly and in that self-forgetful state which he describes."

And yet there are those, even Spiritualists, who deny that there is any such thing as inspirational speaking, or trance conditions.

Lessons are for our learning rather than our liking.

A Practical Consideration of Mediumship.

SEEKING THE TRUTH.

C. F. Short of New York Attempts to Explain Some Mysteries That Often Confuse the New Investigator.

There are many persons who seek but find not; ask, but receive not, and becoming discouraged they abandon any further pursuit, while others find reward and satisfaction.

That spirit messages are often VAGUE, TWISTED, CONTRADICTORY, OR EVEN FALSE, NEED NOT BE DENIED.

While no one can sanction all this, still there are some reasons for it that should be considered. How to explain to some degree, and to find out who and what should be censured for these difficulties, is the purport of this letter.

1. The mistake is often made by applying the laws of material science to explain spiritual affairs.

2. Those souls living on a low material plane should consider that between them and the high realms of spirit existence is a wide and almost impassable chasm. To convey earthly knowledge intact into spirit consciousness is no easy matter. How often questions are unwelcome, out of place, and distasteful to the spirit who makes but slight or indifferent replies. Then again, some ask a deep question or secret of the heavenly world that is forty years ahead of our present attainment. Little pains are taken to answer such paltry puzzles. Furthermore, curiosity, pretense or selfishness may prompt the inquirer. Spirits knowing all this, make vague replies, or evade it altogether.

Often we think it most important that we know certain things, while they see that it would be better unanswered.

Sometimes we are arrogant, dictate and command as though they were servants and we their masters. In that case they never make haste nor take pains to gratify our vanity.

It is a mistake to suppose that they are all wise, infallible, perfect in knowledge and morals. This accounts for many failures, for they are yet human, and may not be any wiser or moral than we mortals, and hence many mistakes are made. They, like we, judge things from their point of view, and to expect all truth from one standpoint is a folly. We should remember that they are wise on certain matters; to push them out of the special lines, and expect perfect knowledge on other matters is neither rhyme nor reason.

Ignorance of the laws of mediumship accounts for much confusion. A perfect harmony must obtain between the spirit and the medium. A musical spirit can manifest through a musically talented medium. So of the poetic, the artistic, etc. To expect an exalted visitor to display these surpassing qualities, through a coarse, sordid, ignorant instrument, is a great absurdity. To give a fine mechanic old, dull tools, you cannot expect the finest results.

How often we approach the seance, not to have a heart to heart talk with the loved ones, but, "I have just come to get something. I am in trouble. I want to learn about that trade. Can I marry? or get a divorce? or how can I make a big deal and cheat the other fellow? That answers are so conflicting and unprofitable is no great wonder.

It should not be forgotten that vast quantities of earthly knowledge is of no value in spirit life—often more of a hindrance than a help. This knowledge is put aside and spirits are in no haste to gather it up again, even if they have the power to do so. When we ask them, "Oh, don't you remember all our high times, our ups and downs, the fights and footraces?" the answer is: "Oh, no, I can forget. I must forget these things, or I can make but poor progress in the new life. O, maybe sometime I can get into the earth condition and recall them if you insist that I must do so."

A great mistake is made by asking gloomy, unhappy questions like the following: Don't you remember how you suffered? Don't you remember how we all cried? Did we do right to put that headstone at your grave? Don't you want us to still wear mourning and to visit your grave every day and put flowers on it? etc.

Now, dear, stupid souls, instead of these being the first things they wish to hear from us, they are the very last.

Great capital is sometimes made, and wonder expressed, that spirits do not or cannot parade for our pleasure all their earthly experiences. As a partial explanation of this difficulty, bear in mind the suggestions of vibratory science.

We mean this, that knowledge gained under the slow, weak, sluggish vibrations of earthly life is eclipsed when the spirit brain vibrates a million or so times more rapidly, just as you cannot see the rapidly revolving wheel.

Spirit messages are possible when the medium's brain goes up to a high vibration and the spirit's brain slows down to touch it. This contact makes communion possible, brief, irregular, faulty, fragmentary, yet precious. The longer and the stronger this union of the two minds can be maintained, the more clear, the more valuable, the more reliable such messages become

No very great estimation can now be placed on ordinary messages. We only pursue this way because we think we believe that greater success in the future will be realized, and messages of surpassing value will be forthcoming from the higher spheres to all persons who become spiritually minded.

Few appreciate the great effort it requires for spirits to come to us at all. They come, swinging and swaying like a leaf in the breeze, almost helpless, easily moved or hypnotized. They are in such close rapport with the instrument that their messages become colored by the medium's sentiments. All strong likes, dislikes, sentiments and wishes, that an answer will be so and so these strong currents of thought affect the spirit, and all these mind currents are more in power and influence than the spirit can encounter, and it reflects them back again, so that often we get back what we send forth. These irregular results are a natural effect and not the evil intent of the spirit visitor.

What investigators receive in the seance room is not all spirit, nor all medium, nor all sitters, but is, as we might say, a compound result, and it requires much judgment to discern just how much of it belong to the spirit alone. By this time we should understand that the spirits use the elements of strength to enable them to manifest. Ignorant of this, one will cry out, "Oh, that was not my mother came, that was the medium's voice I heard." This explains all that. Or they will say of a materialized spirit, "Oh, that was not genuine; didn't resemble her at all—not a bit! It is all fraud!" Not remembering that the body which they expected to see, has long since gone to dust and this new one is constructed from the available elements that may be at hand. The writer trusts that these random thoughts will give to some more rational ideas of viewing the matter and assist them in obtaining the best results possible.

New York City.

A False Claim.

We have received a pamphlet, a clergyman the author, in which he maintains President Lincoln was a Christian—a believer in the dominant religion. A gentleman who knew Abraham Lincoln very well, a strong anti-slavery man in those times, and well posted in political affairs, has just made the statement over his own signature, in which he asserts with positiveness that when Mr. Lincoln was first a candidate for the presidency, there were twenty-one orthodox preachers in Springfield, Ill., persons who knew the afterwards martyred president well, and save just one lone, solitary preacher who voted for him, all the rest voted against him, else did not vote at all. And why this action? Because Mr. Lincoln was recognized as an Infidel. The truth is, he was an inquirer, and probably a Spiritualist, for we have positive proof that he was a frequent attendant at Spiritualistic circles. The clergy of Springfield were conscious of this fact, hence ther opposition to him.

It is closely bordering on the ridiculous to see the clergy writing books to prove Mr. Lincoln a Christian because he occasionally used Christian phraseology when writing or speaking to the multitude, after having opposed him so violently. Similar phraseology can be found in the writings of Thomas Paine, and yet no churchman has yet claimed him as a member of his faith.

A Retrograde Movement.

A writer in the Southern Churchman is seemingly distressed at the tendency of the Episcopal church to fall back into Catholicism. He says:

"The ritualists have made havoc with the Protestant Episcopal Church. They have contended for and obtained the freedom to introduce into this church the robes, the ceremonies, and the doctrines of the Church of Rome. They are building on this sandy foundation a large part of the spiritual temple of the Protestant Episcopal church. The rapid progress which was being made by the Protestant Episcopal church before the commencement of the Oxford movement was checked by it for long years, and a great deal of what is now called "progress' is on this sandy foundation, as was shown by Bishop Lee of Delaware before his death.

It is not the Episcopal church only that is adopting the methods of the old Roman church, but all the older Protestant sects seem to be vieing with each other to see which can adopt the greatest number of the practices of that church without being swallowed up by it. These imitators of the parent church have read history to little purpose if they have forgotten the flagrant crimes the old church was guilty of which led to the great Reformation.

So long as we love, we serve. So long as we are loved by others, I would almost say we are indispensable; and no man is useless while he has a friend.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

I recognize the importance of the revolt from the awful dogma of predestined happiness for the few and damnation for the many. Slowly but surely the dreadful barrier of this old belief is being lifted from the heart of humanity.—Whittier.

A Questionable Requirement Proposed.

Chancellor McCracken, of the New York University, proposes to make the qualification of the admission of freshmen to the university, a diploma from some Sunday-school, certifying that the holder knows by heart the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, a church catechism of some kind, and a score of the Scripture Psalms, and the best classic hymns. He offers to join any association of universities and colleges that will demand these as an entrance requirement.

Years ago a commission was appointed in one of the Eastern States to investigate the penitentiary, and ascertain how many of the convicts had been attendants on Sunday-schools in their youth. It was found 95 per cent of those who were doing penal service to the state had been attendants on Sunday-schools.

With this experience should such a recommendation be required of students who are about entering our great schools of learning? On the contrary it would seem as if a good moral character would be better than Bible or church learning.

To the Readers of The Progressive Thinker.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—I have been for some weeks engaged in preparing a review of "The Great Psychological Crime." As I look at the matter the articles in the Symposium were hurriedly written and failed to go to the bottom principles which are involved in genuine mediumship and hypnotism. This I think I have done; but it has cost me weeks of reading and study. If there is a demand for such a review I shall be glad to publish it. It will not merely meet the arguments of the criticised work but will state concisely the true philosophy of both mediumship and hypnotism, and will, therefore, be of value independently of its refutation of the book reviewed. I have not made an accurate estimate of the cost, but feel sure that it can be sold for twenty-five cents per copy. This is to ask the readers of The Progressive Thinker, not to subscribe, but to write me their opinion as to the desirability of such a publication. As to my ability and thoroughness you are good judges.

BOOK REVIEW.

In the World Celestial. By Dr. T. A. Bland. Published by the author, Chicago. Price, $1.00.

Dr. Bland's beautiful Spiritualistic book, "In the World Celestial," has already reached its third edition, and the sales are still increasing, which proves that those who read it recommend it to others; that it is as B. O. Flower said of it in the Arena: "A remarkable book is true; remarkable in its realistic and vivid revelations of scenes and conditions in the spirit spheres; for the charming romance of the two worlds it contains, and for the grand lessons in the ethics and philosophy of Spiritualism running through it like threads of gold." It is also remarkable, as he says, for its authorship, Dr. Bland being widely known throughout America as one of the most honest, sincere, fearless and thoughtful men of our time, and one of the most scholarly; a courageous champion of every just cause, whose pen has wrought great good in the cause of human emancipation and progress. He adds: "Dr. Bland is one of the most learned and successful of the liberal medical practitioners of the age, and the author of numerous books, scientific, philosophical and literary. As secretary of the American Medical Union, he is in fraternal touch with the physicians of all schools in every state, and many doctors have read his spiritual book because he wrote it, and have been so profoundly impressed by it that they at once began to investigate the phenomena of Spiritualism, with the result, as a rule, they get facts, proving the continuity of life, which as scientists they cannot resist." Perhaps no book of the age has been more generously treated by the press. So far as we have knowledge, no literary critic has attempted to write it down, which is another remarkable fact, considering the attitude towards Spiritualism of many newspaper writers. The skeptical critic pronounces it a fiction, of course, "but a "beautiful fiction." That brilliant editor, Dr. W. C. Cooper, of the Medical Gleaner, says: "It lifts the reader into enchanting realms. Everybody should read this beautiful book, and believe it; for even though it be not true, a sweet illusion is better than a bitter truth."

The great men of the earth are but marking-stones on the road of humanity; they are priests of its religion.—Mazzini.

THE UNSEEN WORLD.

C. W. Leadbeater Presents His Views of the Same.

At Warwick Hall, Kansas City, Mo., C. W. Leadbeater lectured on "The Unseen World," and explained in a simple way the nature of the astral body and the theory of theosophy, based on logical deductions from the law of vibration. He said, in part:

"Theosophical teaching on the subject of the unseen world is very much more precise and definite than that which we usually receive from current religious teaching in England and America. We hold that there is an unseen world, and that it is around us here and now, and not far away from us, and that it remains unseen simply because most of us have not yet developed the senses by which it can be perceived; that for those who have developed these senses the world is not unseen, and not unknown but is entirely within reach, and can be explored and investigated as may be desired, precisely as any country here on earth might be if only the possibilities of human consciousness were more fully developed. This very suggestion implies that there are additional possibilities—that as we usually know it, it is imperfect. We all know that some people have greater powers of sight and hearing than others, and therefore that there is considerable possibility of variation in consciousness. We know that there is much that the keenest sight can never reach unaided—that there are whole worlds of minute life, revealed to us by the microscope, which are far beyond the grasp of ordinary human senses. But our senses are limited in another direction. We cannot see the very air that surrounds us, our senses would give us no indication of its existence, except that when it is in motion we are aware of it by the sense of touch. We cannot see any matter in the gaseous condition unless it happens to have a brilliant color, as chlorine has.

"All information, of whatever kind it may be, which reaches us from without by means of our senses, must come to them in the form of vibrations. We see by vibrations of the ether; we hear by vibrations of the air; and if you will study this question from the scientific point of view you cannot but be struck by the fact that our eyes are capable of responding to only a very limited number of these vibrations—a mere handful out of possible millions. The same thing precisely is true of the sense of hearing—it can respond to only a very small number out of the possible sounds. So we see at once that there is here a possibility of extension; that if a man could learn to use and respond to more of these vibrations, the field of his consciousness might be indefinitely extended.

"What are the conditional possibilities, and how can they be obtained? Obviously they lie along the line of learning to respond to a large number of these vibrations which bring to us all our knowledge of this outer world. But the finer vibrations affect finer matter, and that seems beyond our reach. It seems to be, but in truth it is not. For man himself is a far more complex being than is yet recognized by the majority, and he contains within himself a great deal of this finer matter, making for him a body not generally recognized among us, though perfectly well known to medieval writers, who describe it under the name of 'the astral body,' and also to writers of antiquity, as for example to St. Paul, who called it the spiritual body. (I. Cor. xv.)

"Now if a man can learn to use this finer matter within himself, and to obtain vibrations through it, instead of only through the denser matter, then he can respond to impacts coming from the world of finer matter without him, and so become conscious of much that is at present hidden from his eyes. The power to do this is latent in every man, but only a few as yet have developed it.

"Of course our first question would be, what do they see, these explorers in a new realm of nature? What news do they bring to us who as yet are blind to these higher things? The answer is happily of the most encouraging character. They tell us that this developed faculty widens their horizon enormously, that it not only gives them a veritable world of novel information about natural processes, but that it also supplies them with information of the utmost value with regard to many problems which have agitated the minds of man, through long ages, mysteries of life and death which cannot but be of the keenest interest to all. The possession of this higher sight at once settles forever many questions about which the majority are still arguing—such, for example, as that of continued life after death."

Is Life Immortal?

In The Progressive Thinker of March 5, W. H. Hutcheson, of Montana, in a labored article attempts to prove that abstract life is immortal. There is no doubt but life, the vis vitae, under favorable environments, is continuous on earth.

The mammoth and the mite, the tree and the toad, continue to live in their offspring.

The important question is, does the soul, spirit, or mind persist as a conscious entity after death?

The life principle is an intangible and unimportant force. It is seen in a man, a mouse, and in the robust growth of Jonah's gourd. Life, proper expires with the last death-bed sigh, and is dissipated in nature's great conservatory of energy.

Brother Hutcheson in his thesis has confounded "vital energy," that presides over the growth of an oak, an ox, and an infant, with the god-like mind that makes kings of men.

Vitality is inane, it sways no sceptre; wields no influence. Nature has hung the mind of man, as Jupiter did the harp of Orpheus, on the promontory of a star, to make music for the world.

Men live in their children; and Fate reels the raveled ends of their influence, and weaves them into the fabric of the world's civilization. This possibly is the limitation of man's immortality.

Immortality was brought to light by the alleged resurrection of Jesus, yet his followers are full of doubting Thomases. Spirit return may now be better verified than in the case of the Nazarene, yet the world is full of agnostics.

As a working theory, to prove immortality, the labor of Spiritualists should be commended. Every religion on earth is founded on spirit communion. Spiritualism is earnestly trying to prove the basis of these religions true. Orthodoxy should treat Spiritualism with endearment, instead of fighting it with fire. L. L. LAMBORN, M. D.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Is mediumship injurious?

That depends; a person will be injured by sitting too long in the sunlight.

Is the sunlight injurious and to be carefully avoided?

Water is injurious if one stays in it too long.

Hold your head under water for an hour and you will be considerably injured.

Shall we refuse to have anything more to do with water?

The best of food will injure one if taken at too frequent intervals or in too large quantities.

Shall we discard all food because hundreds die every year from the effects of overeating?

Personally, I have found mediumship the reverse of injurious. From the time I became fully conscious of my mediumship up to the present I have steadily gained in strength and ability. Twice I have got up from a sick bed at the command of a spirit friend, and since the last time have steadily gained in health. I challenge anyone who knows me to show that I have deteriorated morally during the time.

Judging by my own experience I assert boldly that any medium who desires to receive and give only good, who puts out of his or her soul all hatred, envy, fear, jealousy, every impure thought, and all greed of gain, has absolutely nothing to fear.

Our inspirations come from the plane to which our aspirations ascend and the spirits that come to us when alone are drawn by the law of attraction. By our most earnest desires and not by our words and acts we not only build our future habitations and decide our future destiny but also decide our spiritual companionship. "Love worketh no ill." "Love seeketh not (exclusively) own but another's good," and it never injures nor destroys.

Envy, lewdness, anger, hatred, fear, covetousness—thoughts of such nature harbored in the mind tend to destroy one both mentally and physically, and to draw influences of an injurious nature. Get the soul filled with love for humanity, the love that is tender, merciful, helpful, patient and compassionate, and you have within yourself a creative power—a power that strengthens, vitalizes and builds up, and you draw to yourself those intelligences that will help to strengthen you, that will broaden your views and bring beauty into your life.

Spiritualism when rightly understood is seen to be the real good, the vitalizing power in all religions; take that away from them and you have left but a worthless husk.

Spiritualism is so broad, so deep, so high, so full that it meets every demand of the soul.

When I had the "orthodox" religion, I was always soul hungry. Its injustice and deficiencies impressed themselves painfully upon me even then, and I was always reaching out for something to get hold of, but since I got Spiritualism into my soul as well as my head, I have found what I so long sought in vain. I have got hold of the something I grasped after. I have learned what it is to find a heaven here and now in the midst of the most adverse conditions. I have found "the peace that passeth understanding," "the joy unspeakable and full of glory." Radiant spirits have come and talked with me as I have been about my household duties, and they always leave me stronger, wiser, nobler, purer for their blessed presence. If our earnest desire is to obtain good results that we may give good we may rest assured that the good will come to us.

BECOMES ANOTHER MAN FOR MONTHS.

Startling Case of Dual Personality Is Disclosed When Charles Du Bois Regains Memory of Past.

Quincy, Ill.—A marvelous case of dual personality has been disclosed since the arrival in Quincy, Ill., a few days ago of Charles Du Bois, who is 28 years old, and whose family home is in Gibson City, Ill. He became, figuratively speaking, another man for several months until the memory of his previous life came to him suddenly, while he was acting as a common seaman on a ship. The story of his experience is supported by plenty of evidence.

Du Bois went to Louisiana seven years ago to work on a rice plantation. Five years later he and another young man, named Albert Carlisle, agreed to run a rice plantation on shares near Gueydan, La. One Sunday morning in June, 1902, DuBois says he got in his buggy to go to church in Gueydan. While on the way he suddenly dropped out of existence so far as his memory was concerned. When the memory of his former career returned he was 400 miles from the United States coast and was on the full rigged sailing ship Endymion, bound for Diego, Suariez, Madagascar. The vessel was flying the Russian flag, but Swedish was mostly spoken on board and the captain's name was Peterson.

When DuBois recovered his former self a storm was raging and the right side of his jaw was paining him. A lurch of the ship had sent him sprawling on the deck. The shock of the fall had caused him to regain the memory of his career, but at the same time he was bewildered by his strange surroundings and by finding himself a seaman.

He was attempting to collect his thoughts when the mate of the ship ordered him to make fast the sails, but the work seemed so new to him that he required instructions. Every task which he was ordered to perform subsequently was strange to him, though he was informed that he had done seaman's work satisfactorily while he was in his other physical state.

Du Bois says the mate told him that he, Du Bois, had gone aboard the Endymion at Pensacola, Fla., on the afternoon of Aug. 18, 1902, and together with a German, a Frenchman, and two negroes had signed as sailors before the mast. DuBois found his own signature on the ship's books, though he had not the slightest recollection of having penned it.

The mate also told DuBois that the latter had acted in a peculiar manner, but that it had not occasioned much comment. The Endymion, after discharging her cargo at the Madagascar port, went to the island of Reunion and next to Rangoon, British Burmah, and finally, after several delays and trying experiences, dropped anchor in the harbor of Leith, Scotland, on Dec. 1 last.

DuBois says he was paid $145, and he made haste to return to his home in Illinois. He reached New York Dec. 14, and is now at Quincy, where his sister, Mrs. R. O. Beadles, lives. He had written to her from Madagascar, and had told her of his remarkable experience.

The only clew that DuBois has regarding his whereabouts between that Sunday in June, 1902, when he started for church in Louisiana, and Aug. 18, following, when he woke to his former self on board the Endymion, was the information given to him by the German, who shipped as seaman with him at Pensacola. The German told Du Bois that he first saw the latter working on a fishing smack. They met and became friends soon after.

The only other experience that Du Bois ever had in the way of memory leaving him was a couple of weeks before his long disappearance. He says he was Gueydan, La., and then all was blank until he found himself on a pier in Galveston, Texas.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"Spirits in Prison:" = How Did Jesus Reach Them? How Shall We Help Them? A Discourse Given Through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond.

"He went and visited the spirits in prison."

The explanation which follows by Peter is: That those who were disobedient in the days of Noah were imprisoned, or were "spirits in prison."

"Noah," in the real interpretation, means the termination of a cycle. It is interpreted as "motion" or "rest." These two words are entirely opposite to or at variance to each other in meaning; but the word really means the completion, the fulfillment of the cycle or "covenant." The ark (arc) is the covenant, or is the portion of the circle which is described by the great astronomical revolution around the central sun, and, therefore, was known as a period, a glacial period.

Such as were not ready for the Dispensation that preceded the Noachian cycle, yet were approximately ready for the teachings of Christ, were evidently the ones whom Jesus visited.

During the three days, says the early church traditions, that Jesus' body was in the sepulcher his spirit visited the spirits in prison. Undoubtedly the early church had very different records of these events from those translated into the New Testament, which are very meager. It means that during the time, or portion of the cycle, that there is seemingly the suspended animation of the Christ-life, the spirits that do not come out of the darkness fully, yet might be ready as they are enlightened and the many spirits pass into spirit life without the knowledge, technically, of spiritual things, yet who would be ready if it reached their human understanding, such are ready to come out of their spirit prisons in spirit life.

Of course, "spirits in prison" do not mean that they are behind any bars, bolts or in dungeons, but the conditions or states that accompanied them into spirit life. According to the Soul Teachings, and evidently according to the early teachings of Christianity, no great new steps can be taken in spirit life, but the spirit, if one is ready (having been in error) for enlightenment can know of its error after the body has passed to the earth as well as before.

The visiting of the spirits in prison, of course, could not have been in mockery; it must have been to do them good, to give them encouragement, to tell them of other cycles in which they could find improvement, which they had not found upon the earth before. But all this, of course, was veiled in the modern church. Not only did the early Christian Fathers of the church suppress it, but it did not form any portion of the education of the Christian teachers after the first or second centuries of the Christian era. All the education in those centuries was borne forward orally. The first disciples and their descendents taught orally. Paul was the only scholar among the disciples, and his education being from Jewish sources. The teachings of Peter were more direct and simple, as were those of John and some of the other disciples; but their teachings were not preserved because they were not in scholarship equal to Paul. Therefore we have the Pauline interpretation of Christianity instead of those of Peter, John and James. Of course, Luke was also educated, but a great deal of the history is thrown in doubt. The direct teachings of Jesus, however, seem to be well preserved in the essential teachings to the disciples and in the Sermon on the Mount and in the Lord's Prayer.

But this subject of the Spirits in Prison is very seldom alluded to in orthodox Christian pulpits, because it implies a possibility of a change after death to those who never heard the name of Jesus, which is not in accordance with the teachings of modern Evangelical Christianity concerning the soul. Because, of course, as far as dates are concerned you must place the Noachian deluge far antecedent to that in which the Jewish and Christian interpretation has fixed this period. You must make of this literal fact a cycle. Then you must understand that these cyclic upheavals are periodical, and that they are also accompanied with great spiritual outpourings, and that the "Spirits in Prison" of one cycle become those that are released to a truth, probably, in the next.

That is, all the disobedient Christians to-day, who make war, who do injustice to their fellow men, but who know better, through the commandments and teachings of Jesus, are to be and are spirits in prison, and will not be released until the next great cyclic change.

The people who were disobedient in the days of Noah, in that cycle which preceded the great glacial cataclysm—the Noachian deluge—were no more disobedient to the primal laws of Moses—to the law of loving thy neighbor as thyself, than are Christians disobedient to the primal law of the Golden Rule, or the returning of good for evil, which is the essential teaching of Christ. It is not simply the "Golden Rule:" "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you," but "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." It is the returning of good for evil. The overcoming of evil with good.

What Christian church to-day decries the preparations for war? Very few. What Christian nation to-day withholds its preparations for war? Of the eleven nations that submitted their claims against Venezuela to arbitration, to the great international arbitration, only three were ready to go to war about their claims, and those three who were so ready to go to war were the first to receive consideration. Are great international arbitrations to be intimidated by war-like nations? Are we, then, to consider that this great desideratum of the twentieth century to abolish war is impossible?

Of course it is a great thing to have eleven nations willing to arbitrate. But if it was a large matter would they arbitrate?

The Czar of Russia is anxious for the disarmament of nations. Has his nation disarmed? The whole of Christian Europe and Christian America are preparing for war. Those nations not actually engaged in war are making preparations for war, and these, as said before, when the great cataclysm comes that is now approaching the earth, will be the "spirits in prison."

Those who are disobedient in the days of this Noah, this cycle, this state of motion, this interval of rest between the great cyclic periods when the word of truth has been spoken. Many souls have responded to that truth; have refused to wage war. Many of the early Christians were elevated above the spirit of national or individual strivings; many people who have dissented from the "regular" Christian churches and have objected to warfare: George Fox and the Quakers, Mother Ann Lee and the Shakers and a few non-resistents that have been scattered throughout Christendom who object to wars of aggression or even wars of defense. William Lloyd Garrison in his anti-slavery agitation recommended no striving. Count Tolstoi is a "non-resistant," though speaking and writing words that pierce like a sword all forms of error that are in the world. You have a man in prison on Ellis Island (at this speaking John Turner was still held a prisoner) in this "free" country of this "free" nation, who is a non-resistant, but he calls himself an "anarchist." The Christians were anarchists in their early days; they sowed the seeds of dissension that spread among the people and separated them from the established church in Judea. They were those who declared the principles of self-government. Jesus enunciated that the spirit itself must be pure before there can be purity of expression, of action. Everything penetrated to the life of the individual, yet to-day these Christian nations are talking and teaching as if their kind of Christianity is that which will save the world.

How will they be saved when the "Prince of Peace," the great teacher of Olivet, summons those who have really followed him? Will these kings be summoned? Will the Emperor of Russia, the head of the Greek Church, be summoned? Will all the kings and rulers and heads of the Romanish church be summoned? Albeit, some shining lights have hoped to establish peace under the dome of Saint Peter's. Albeit, some have sung and taught like Savanarola, who taught as others have in their days, bringing hope and light, as did one in the church who followed Garibaldi ("ergo Bassi") and gave great hope to humanity. These will be summoned. But such as have placed arms in the hands of other Christians to destroy other peoples, such as have made almost every foot of the soil of Great Britain the battle ground for two conflicting Christian churches, such as have destroyed Italy and Spain, and given France over to dissensions unspeakable, such as now wait with eyes like birds of prey for the results in the far Orient to see what morsel will be parceled out to them, such as in this western land who have not the strength or courage of the great light of freedom and prosperity to lift their voices and actions to the higher plane of moral right and of non-combatants. Every foot of the shores stretching along the Pacific ocean on the one side and the Atlantic ocean on the other would be guarded by hosts of angels if there were no fortresses, no guns there. There is no nation in the world or combinations of nations that would attack a country strong enough to say, "I will have no part nor parcel in these wars of aggression and conquest," but these are the disobedient children in the days of the new Noah, and the great "Ark of the Covenant" that is being formed, and the circle, or that portion of the circle that is being described by your solar system brings you to the period of reckoning.

The cycle is passed; the nations have been warned. The Star of Empire no longer can be said to be westward, for it has encircled the globe.

Now what are you to do with the spirits in prison who have fastened these wars, these ambitions these desolations upon the human race? The spirits in prision that because of their selfishness and self-seeking cry out for more wars; who take the least of their subjects to wage war against other nations, and send their most enlightened ones to Siberia? There is a Siberia in every nation.

All this means that the visiting of spirits was not for that day and that time alone. People who are "almost persuaded" to be Christians; people who are almost ready to give up self-seeking and all this selfish striving; people who are not vindictive, who understand that wrong, and wrong-doing bring their own penalties, understand that if these could be gathered who are scattered over all the earth, there would be but a Noachian handful; there would hardly be more than those enumerated as being "saved" in the Ark.

This Great Covenant was not a literal thing; this Ark of Safety was no material thing. The great principles of life that were carried forward in pairs were not literal animals, but the Great Siderial Promise that nothing should be lost that was essential to human beings and to the bearing forward of things essential to life. That is the "Ark of the Covenant," and that is what it will be in the next glacial period.

But how many spirits will there be? Not only those who are disobedient to what they intellectually understand, and what they morally profess to teach, but those who stultify their convictions over and over again. They are the spirits in prison to-day.

If Jesus came upon the earth at this moment preaching the Godlen Rule to the leaders of nations and those who raise armies and those who supply the armaments of war, how many followers would he have? Can you count them? We can. The "one hundred and forty-four thousand," that is the symbolic number in this dispensation; the external Kabalistic record of those who are ready for the Christ or for the Noachian period or whatever be the symbol of the period of time in which a truth is stated. And all the rest are in prison. Those criminals whom you send to jail—many of them less criminal than the larger criminals who are free as far as your jails and penitentiaries are concerned—those whom you send into the other world by the scaffold are not the limit of the "spirits in prison;" perhaps not as much imprisoned as those who sent them there; but every human life, every one upon the earth at this moment who has hatred or revenge, or seeks aggression for spoil, or desires selfishly that to possess which will endanger another; every one who engages in traffic which by so doing robs another; any one who is the victim of fear, or hatred, or malice; any one who lives in a selfish house of pleasure, any one who is self-seeking, anyone who is over self-righteous, anyone who seeks salvation selfishly is in prison.

There are those on the verge of a change. It was a predecessor of the present Czar of Russia who received an illumination which came in the form of the liberty of the serfs; it came in the form of a knowledge of spirit communion; it came in the form of a promise for added freedom, and that promise was fulfilled; but the present Czar, with all his horror for war, is impelled by the precedent of his nation and his generals and advisers in places of power, so that he is unable to follow the precepts of his conscience. But they will be followed for him. Meanwhile, the spirits of those whose bodies are imprisoned in Siberia must be fulfilling their work. Their bodies will be set free. A great northern nation will arise, as if from the halls of Odin, and set free those marvelous and wondrous minds, some of whom have been waiting for more than half a century to see the light of dawn.

How shall you visit the spirits in prison? Maudlin, sentimental women, who cannot bear the slightest thing that is offensive, visit the courts to gaze upon the criminals and hear the testimony against them, who would not touch a Magdalen upon the streets with the hem of her garment, or do aught to visit those really imprisoned in sorrow and shame. The world goes mad over some fictitious sentiment, while the great under-current of continued human sorrow is neglected. A billion of people die scattered over all the earth, and no one mourns, excepting for their especial friends. A fire produces mourning for the city and the nation, but who cares for the Japanese woman and children, the Russian women and children, the women and children of all the world that are sacrificed when their sons, fathers and husbands go down to battle? These are the "spirits in prison" that the Christ of all truth and love is considering to-day.

This is the great period between the "motion" and the "rest" of the cyclic deluge, and the world is summoned by the great visiting angels. They do not stand upon the towers of ships to watch which battleship shall go down; they do not stand with generals along the front of armies to see which army shall be victorious, but they stand where the great white pinions of mercy and love prevail, following with love in the wake of the armies, following with messages of comfort to those bereft, following with whatever shall summon nations to a thought concerning that which is higher and better than greed or selfish gain.

Do you suppose the Christ-spirit was with the emperor of Germany when he thanked God for his and God's success in battle? Do you suppose the Christ-spirit is with Russia or Japan—Russia knowing the Christ, Japan bending the knee to the gentle teaching of Buddha Gautama—or that either Christ or Buddha bear the standard of those contending armies?

Humanity grows apace, and the Christ-spirit is visiting those in prison, whispering to such as have been disobedient through fear of the truth, teaching those who are ready to be taught; and out of the maelstrom of war and the cataclysm of the elements come forth those who are ready. On the watchtowers of time, or descending into the caverns of human doubt and fear these Angels of the Mighty Messenger visit the Earth to-day.

If your nation was called to arms to defend its possessions in the Orient, would you respond? Some of you say, "Yes;" some of you say, "No." But whoever would respond is a spirit in prison. Disobedient to the primal law of your nation's existence. We say it to you. We would say it to the head of the nation if we had the chance. We would say it to every legislator in the nation. We say now, that if Washington, Jefferson or Lincoln were here in bodily form they would say: "Keep out of the Orient; you have nothing to do with the Orient."

Yet the chains and gyves of the "Spirits in prison" are upon the nation, and the people feel, and are made to believe, that they are patriots when they are only slaves.

By and by the great strife will be upon you; by and by the war will spread; by and by you will seek to retrace your steps and cannot, and the great human cataclysm will be precipitated, as the great physical cataclysm is being precipitated. Then the "mountains of safety" and refuge will be hidden from your sight. Then the great period of reckoning will be here. Who will be ready for the Ark of Safety? Who will say, not one of these "little ones" have I slain? And Christ, the Great Spirit of all Truth: Jesus, Buddha, Zerdhurst, whomsoever and whatever he may be, will look above the nations of the earth and pity the "Spirits in prison."

Driven by the storms of war; driven by the selfishness of human striving, and driven by the storms of the elements are many, and knowing that such as are well nigh ready may be waiting to hear the voice, can you wonder then that the Christ spirit visited those in prison? Can you wonder that the messengers of that Hallowed Light find it difficult indeed to seek and find the prisons of those who are in darkness? Do you wonder that the voice of truth is not more willingly received? Do you wonder that the Earth, moaning and groaning for what it has not, is not enlightened enough to perceive what it seeks?

Oh! the great truth of Olivet! If that could descend through the intervening ages to the disobedient of the past Noachian deluge, so may the light of that perfect love at last reach the souls that are in darkness to-day: the kings and rulers, the mighty men, the leaders of armies, the advisers of war and the creators of war, may they at last be reached.

When the great cycle shall again be completed, and the Orient is the Occident; when that which you now call the "New World" shall be the old world; when up from the mighty East shall spring a new strong nation that will put to flight these ancient aggressors; when the New Dawn or New Light appears there as well as here; when the wide (long sleeping) eyes of the Orient shall awake; when the pulsing tides of this great wonderful human destiny shall reach their shores again, and the new lands along the sea shall be peopled with a new race that will drive these barbarous (un)Christian nations from the face of the earth; then will the Christ-spirit visit the spirits in prison, those who were disobedient in the days of the Great Republic of the Earth that had an opportunity to lead the people of the earth in ways of peace, but did not.

Prof. Evans and his wife took full charge of the funeral arrangements and relieved the bereaved husband of that painful duty. Mr. and Mrs. Mozart had been happily married for the past 32 years, and after years of hard work had accumulated a comfortable fortune, and had retired from active business just a few months prior to Mrs. Mozart's transition. DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storyettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest:"

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

SPIRITUALISM OF FORTY YEARS AGO.

Manifestations Occurring in the Earlier Days.

Farmer John Langdon came from old Puritanical stock. He was a descendant of John Langdon of revolutionary fame. He lived four miles south of Erie, Pa., at a flag station, in early days known as Langdon's Station.

One summer day in 1862, his eldest daughter was sitting at a chamber window of the large, old-fashioned farm house, reading the life of Mary, Queen of Scotland. She heard a rapping near her, and at first supposed it was some of her younger brothers or sisters playing a joke, but upon looking about she found no one present. Upon resuming her reading, however, the tapping upon the cover of her book would commence.

Becoming nervous, she went down stairs and related her experiences to her mother. When both returned, the phenomenon was repeated, and they became alarmed and made a hasty retreat, and upon being joined by the grandmother, they returned again to the attack. The old lady had been reading a few months previous an account of the Rochester rappings, when she declared it to be spiritual rappings.

They commenced asking questions, when the spirit influence claimed to be that of the queen, whose life the girl was reading. From that time on the manifestations increased, the two older daughters being able to produce all sorts of crude phenomena, such as table tippings, rappings, etc. Quite a sensation was created in that quaint, old-fashioned farming community for two or three years.

Old Doctor Heath lived at Corry, Pa., about thirty miles southeast of Erie. He had for many years been a Methodist preacher; but suddenly developed into a trance, clairvoyant, clairaudient and inspirational medium, and was lecturing periodically through northwestern Pennsylvania. He was invited to go to Langdon's, and finally arrangements were made for his making regular monthly visits there.

During one of his seances, at the close of a lecture, the third daughter of farmer Langdon was controlled by a spirit giving the name of Katy.

When I arrived there in the Spring of 1865, to take charge of the telegraph station, this third daughter was a full-fledged and full-developed medium, while the two older daughters had lost their power to even produce rappings or other form of phenomena.

The spirit guide was a French half-breed squaw; at least she claimed it, but her medium described her as having little of the Indian blood in appearance, being small, slim, and of a French cast of countenance.

Katy, however, was one of the family. Almost daily for a year that I boarded with farmer Langdon, I had interviews with Katy in some form. To make a long story short, from that time to the present, 39 years, Katy and I have been good friends. She materializes almost every time I attend a materializing seance, upon which occasions I sometimes take her by the hand and introduce her to those present.

Since The Great Psychological Crime has caused so much comment, there were certain phases of the phenomena experienced at Langdon's, that may be of interest to the student of occult science, and to which I desire to refer at some length.

When Katy commenced controlling this medium she could not speak English, and the family were nearly a year in teaching her.

While Katy was the medium's regular guide, several other spirits often controlled her, among them an Indian preacher whom we called Wahwolloway. Another was this same grandmother who had in the meantime passed into spirit life.

Another peculiar phase was the presence of a spirit who would give no name; was always smiling, and always told lies. The peculiarity of his lies was that they were always harmless, and based on some truth.

For instance, one day I was in Erie, about three o'clock in the afternoon, and while passing a music store saw a guitar in the window that struck my fancy, and I bought it, leaving it there until train time, about 5:30 p. m.

About the hour I was buying the guitar, this "black-eyed fellow," as we called the spirit, by his request, appeared to the medium at Langdon's, and told her I was in Erie buying a piano. They knew I was not buying a piano, but the medium's mother said, "I guess Ed must be buying some kind of musical instrument."

These white lies, as I will call them, were not told for the purpose of deception, but more for the fun of keeping us guessing from day to day as to what coming event he was giving us a left-handed warning of, as they were of almost daily occurrence.

Another peculiar phase of the phenomena was the periodical visits of the spirit of a Frenchman. His story was, that during the French-Indian war, he and a party of Frenchmen were retreating from a point in New York state, near Buffalo, to Pittsburg, Pa. Upon reaching the Langdon farm, which was at that time heavily timbered, they were so hotly pursued by the Indians that he buried a pot of gold near a spring between two large trees.

They retreated to French Creek, built a raft, and floated down to Pittsburg, when pressing business called him back to France where he died before having an opportunity to return and dig up his gold.

Upon taking possession of the medium he would urge us boys to go with him and help him find the gold. To please him we would arm ourselves with picks and shovels and go to the place indicated. The land had been cleared off, the ground ploughed, and where there had been a spring was only a swampy, sloping piece of ground covered with an orchard in place of a forest. Only two old rotting stumps were left. While controlling the medium he would walk over the ground trying to locate some particular spot, the most likely to prove the hiding-place of his treasure.

During the summer at different times we dug a trench, probably ten feet long and three feet wide to the depth of one or two feet. The ground was hard clay mixed with gravel, and boy-like, we would soon become discouraged and stop work.

There was something peculiar in his manner. Pondering over the subject in after years, I have come to the conclusion that he was an earth-bound spirit, or in a state the Catholics would term purgatory. He was slow of speech, dignified, and there was something in his manner that indicated a species of insanity. He may have buried money, and may not, but he seemed to be under the delusion that he had, and that his future progression depended upon its being found.

On the other hand, the lying spirit whom we called the "little black-eyed spirit," was just the reverse. He was always smiling and ready for a joke. Katy was a typical, hight-hearted, babbling squaw, always laughing and always ready to help cheer up and cause one to forget sorrows and disappointments.

I was raised at the romantic and dreamy old orthodox town of Warren, Pa., sixty miles southeast of Erie. Spiritualism in those days was an unknown factor. My father, visiting me at Langdon's during that year, became interested in the subject, and arranged for Dr. Heath to deliver a lecture at Warren soon afterwards, causing much discussion among orthodox circles.

The old doctor, farmer Langdon and his wife, have long since passed into spirit life. About three years ago I had an interesting interview with all three through the mediumship of a speaking dial. The medium married an old-line Presbyterian, and to please him she gave up mediumship. They moved to Michigan and her husband is to-day one of the prominent men of that state.

Her mediumistic power, however, has left her. I often visit them at their home, spending several days, when we talk over old times, when Katy also makes known her presence in various ways, although she no longer controls her former medium.

Oh, ye preachers—oh, ye priests—oh, ye professors of psychology and men of science, forty years ago, that farmer's wife knew more of psychology, of the future existence of man, than all of you put together.

Poor old Doctor Heath, because he transcended them in power and knowledge, they called him crazy.

The priesthood circulated the same stories about Christ until they caused his own mother to believe it, and having greater power they went still further and crucified him upon the cross.

If a man is to achieve ultimate success he must be willing to forego immediate enjoyment.—Rev. J. F. Peters.

OUR LIVES ARE ALL DUAL.

Our lives are all dual—an outer, an inner,
The motives of saints—the deeds of the sinner,

No soul has yet seen, the soul of another,
No friend though the dearest—nor father, nor mother.

Through all of the years, 'tis but symbols we're using,
And signs of the soul sometimes are confusing.

Not strange then, that shadows of misunderstanding,
Envelop our days, and are sternly commanding

The reasons for acts that are truly intended
To serve but the best—and by conscience commended.

Nor wonder it is, that we grow faint and weary,
Nor wonder, indeed, that the world seems so dreary,

When hopes that were fairest are flowers soonest faded,
And aims that were highest are stamped as degraded.

We hunger and thirst for the pride and the pleasure,
The outer world holds as the rarest of treasure.

We cry for life's playthings, its toys and its bubbles,
And when we possess them, bewail them as troubles.

O, set in our souls is a light that is burning,
A light that will lead to the power of discerning

The secret of life, and its harmonic forces—
The inner and outer, in alternate courses.

A school of the spirit, well classed, and well graded,
Where none of the lessons are lost or evaded,

This earth-life presents us, and bids us accept them,
Nor can we refuse them, nor can we reject them.

Through sorrows and trials we pass to life's center,
Where Peace that is perfect invites us to enter.

As victors we gaze through the pathways we've taken,
The shrine we have reached, is forever unshaken.

Rejoicing in strength, and in courage untiring,
We welcome each day, with a joy all-inspiring;

And take up its tasks, and its multiform duties,
And turn them to blessings, and eternal beauties.

Chicago, Ill. ELLA DARE.

Transition of Mrs. E. H. Mozart—A Modern Funeral Service.

Mrs. E. H. Mozart, a Spiritualist well known throughout the United States and Europe, passed to the higher life, March 1. The funeral services held over her remains at her late residence, 1424 McAllister street, San Francisco, Cal., on Friday, March 4, were beautiful in the extreme. The elegant lavender-covered copper casket was placed in the Gold Room of her late elegant mansion, where her remains were viewed by many hundreds of her friends. Exquisite flowers in great profusion, among which purple and white predominated, were in evidence everywhere, and all the usual signs of mourning were replaced by beautiful symbols of immortality. A canopy of purple lace, surmounted by a dove, covered the casket, the pall bearers wearing white ties and lavender gloves. The services were conducted by Prof. Fred P. Evans who had been a personal friend of the family for nineteen years. He was ably assisted by Madam Montague and Mrs. Lillie. Prof. Evans, after paying a touching tribute to his departed friend, gave a masterful and scientific exposition of the principles of Spiritualism, explaining the mysteries of so-called death and of spirit return and communion.

"Flee as a Bird" was then sweetly sung by Miss Broderick. Madame Montague delivered a beautiful address, after which Mr. Ogilrie sang "Abide With Me." Mrs. Lillie closed with a touching address that brought tears to the eyes of her hearers as well as to herself. "Nearer, My God," by Mr. Ogilrie concluded the home ceremonies, Prof. Hoffman presiding at the organ. About fifty friends proceeded

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

MISSIONARIES' NOTICE.—All mail for E. W. and C. A. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, should be addressed for the present as follows: No. 725 West Jackson street, Bloomington, Ill.

John L. Milnor, of Marshalltown, Iowa, desires the address of Charley Wynans, the medium.

The Englewood Spiritual Union held a social and camp fire in Hopkins' Hall, 528 West 63rd street, on Saturday evening, March 26. There was music, messages and refreshments."

H. Hanson, of the Soldiers' Home, Cal., writes to us, picturing the agony of a "Starving Soul," and portraying the horrible condition of those who lead an intemperate life.

The Progressive Spiritual Society held anniversary services of Modern Spiritualism, on Sunday, March 27, at 183 E. North avenue, near Burling street, at 2:30 and 8 p. m. Speaking by D. W. McKenna and others; messages by Mrs. Howes, Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom and Mrs. Hilbert, pastor of the church. The society will give a card party at 204 Burling street (near Center) on Tuesday, March 29, at 8 p. m. All are cordially invited to come and have an enjoyable social time. Prizes given to the best players.

Mrs. C. Schwahn will hold consecration services at No. 523 Belmont avenue at 3 p. m., on April 3.

Mrs. A. Sexsmith writes: "The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission will hold special anniversary services at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue., on Sunday, April 3. A special feature of the afternoon will be the Spiritualist christening of five children. In the evening Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond will deliver the anniversary address. An extended vocal and instrumental program has been arranged. We cordially invite all Spiritualists, skeptics and investigators on this occasion."

R. N. Kerr writes from Glenlock, Kansas: "A Scott Bledsoe, president of the Kansas State Spiritual Association, gave us a splendid address at Glenlock Hall, on Feb. 29. We hope to have him and his excellent wife, Mrs. Bledsoe, with us again."

Theodore Frank writes from Louisville, Ky.: "Spiritualism, a Science, a Philosophy and a Religion, was the subject of a discourse by Mrs. Annie Throndsen, speaker of the Church of Spirit Communion, Louisville, Ky., to a large attendance at last Sunday's service. Her lectures have aroused interest in and about Louisville, also across the river, as we now have several members recently joined our society from New Albany, Ind."

In Boston is Annie Abbott, the psychological marvel. At one of her performances there ten men held on to a billiard cue, with another man seated on top of it, and yet she lifted it from the floor by simply placing her hand against it. A juvenile in the audience was singled out and requested to stand in the aisle, and after instructions from Miss Abbott to look steadily at her and concentrate his attention on the idea that he could not be lifted from the floor, an athletic-looking man failed to budge him.

The Havana Post, Cuba, has the following: "Havana has two interesting visitors at the present time in Mr. B. B. Hill, the inventor of the rubber stamp, and now of the B. B. Hill Manufacturing Company, of Philadelphia. Mr. Hill is accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, who is a very interesting and cultured lady who has traveled all over the civilized world. She is very much interested in Havana, and says that it reminds her very much of Italy. The narrow streets, the churches, the architecture, the different shades of color, all appear like some of the ancient cities of Italy. Mrs. Cadwallader and Mr. Hill were received by President Palma yesterday."

Mrs. Rozetta Gott writes that "this year has opened with pleasure for the Wellington, (O.) Spiritualists. Mrs. Baird of Elyria enrolled us on her list, and since then we have had many treats in lectures, tests, etc. We have also secured a charter. We have had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Jenney and Mrs. Schauss, and those who have not heard them must count it as a loss. Mrs. Baird and Mrs. Curran illumined our paths with light, also that noble worker, Mr. H. D. Barrott, whose lectures were pearl and gold."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

VICTOR VOGEL'S ORCHESTRA AND BAND.—First-class music furnished on all occasions. Office and residence, 4217 Champlain avenue, Chicago, Ill. Telephone Oakland 1111. Mr. Vogel is a well-known Spiritualist of Chicago and a natural born musician. His orchestra will be most excellent at dances and entertainments given by Spiritualists, and will add much to the interest of the occasion. As a special feature of his musical work, he introduces many original novelties—imitations of birds, etc.

Albert Goldman writes from London, England, to Wm. Richmond, of this city: "I thank you very much for your great kindness in sending me Mrs. Richmond's luminous discourse, Can a Soul Die? Also a copy of The Progressive Thinker containing a second one, Spiritual or Psychic Phenomena. I can only say they are very welcome, and I appreciate very highly your goodness in sending them to me. This Progressive Thinker is a wonderful one. Is it not strange that in London there is no place where this periodical literature is kept?"

M. E. Hazzard writes: "Spiritual services that are held every Sunday evening at the home of Mrs. M. B. Hill, 320 Flournoy street, are well attended and much interest is taken in them, and there is great good being done. There are Wednesday evening circles for development, and circles Friday afternoon. All are helpful and commendable. Mrs. T. B. Maben gives beautiful and helpful messages from the realms unseen."

C. E. Heills writes from San Francisco, Cal.: In looking over list of books I find that I have nearly all of them, and if I could not replace them, I would not part with them at any price. I am more than pleased with the independent policy of your paper, and would not be without it, and will have it as long as I can raise a dollar."

Each Sunday morning at the same time throughout the country, which is 10 o'clock Boston time, there is concentration of thought with the view to influencing the minds of those who are indifferent or slightly inclined to the belief that vivisection is wrong. It is the theory of theosophists that sympathetic thought may be stirred in persons by concentraton of thought on the part of the theosophists along the lines on which it is desired that the persons shall think. In accordance with this theory, also the theory that all life is sacred, theosophists in this part of the country set their minds for ten minutes each week in opposition to the practice of vivisection. This will continue every Sunday morning for an indefinite time, or until it is felt that the cause has been won.—Boston Journal.

Mrs. E. A. Magoon writes from Worcester, Mass.: "The late symposium that created so much effort and interest, imparting a more intelligent conception of spiritual mediumship, will no doubt be fruitful of much good and lasting results. There is another subject of general interest and importance. It involves a crime of no small magnitude. I allude to the crime of legalizing murder, or capital punishment. Who is to bear the blame for the cruel and barbarous custom? When is there going to be enough civilized and enlightened people to abolish the heathenish practice?"

The Alliance (Ohio) Daily Leader says: "Mr. Harry J. Moore, of Chicago, was greeted with intelligent and appreciative audiences yesterday, both morning and evening at the Independent church. Mr. Moore lectured last evening on the 'Communion of Saints,' and for over an hour held the undivided attention of the large audience. Some of the ideas brought out and made comprehensive during his discourse were as follows: Mr. Moore took the position that what is called special providence could be more intelligibly understood if viewed from the standpoint of spirit impression than it could be if viewed as one having been impressed by God of the impending danger. A spirit could impress one not to go upon a train and thereby become the means of saving a life, but if God would impress a person and not the rest of the passengers who got aboard the train that was afterward wrecked with great loss of life he would become partial and he would then immediately lose that dignity that must characterize the Deity. Another thought brought out during the lecture was that bodies of supposed dead people should be kept until the only infallible proof of death, which is mortification, puts in its appearance before the bodies are disposed of, and then Mr. Moore suggested that providing the deceased had been willing, that their bodies should be cremated."

Rolla Stubbs writes from Long Lake, Minn.: "Lake Minnetonka Spiritualist Society is to dedicate its temple Sunday, April 10. It is to be dedicated by Miss Whittle and Mrs. Sauer of St. Paul, missionaries for the State Spiritualist Society. We expect other mediums and friends will attend the dedication. Regular trains leave Union depot for Markville over the short line to Hutcheson, at 5 p. m. We expect the regular Sunday train will be put on by that time; leave Union depot at 10 a. m. Sunday. Anyone coming, ask for round-trip ticket to Markville, 50 cents; ten rides, $2.25, good for the summer season. Ten can ride one way on a ticket, or five, round trip, and come cheaper."

Two districts in Ulster, Ireland are in a state of great excitement owing to the supposed supernatural visitations. In the house of a farmer named Thompson, who lives near Carrickmore, County Tyrone, some extraordinary happenings are alleged to have occurred. On several nights stones and bricks have been hurled through the windows and churns, milk pans, and other utensils have disappeared from the dairy, though the door has been locked and strict watch has been kept both by the Thompson family and their neighbors. In a district called Qulica, in County Cavan, unearthly noises heard at night for weeks past have reduced the inhabitants to a state of terror. No one will stir out after dark.

Harry J. Moore is now located at 5900 La Salle street, Chicago. Mr. Moore may be addressed at any time in care of this office and his mail will be forwarded to him wherever he may be.

Mrs. Grace C. Middagh writes from Camden, N. Y.: "The Progressive Thinker is looked forward to in our home every week, with the joy of a coming, real, living angel of Truth. Bound volumes upon psychic subjects, many times, present so many theories of different phases of the truth, which, after reading, always leaves the impression of wishing I could know how nearly true certain theories are—then, more often than not, in comes our Progressive Thinker, relating some real experience, answering all those very questions upon which I had so much desired more light. In this way alone the paper is proving to be an educator to me, (as well as my family) broadening my views and thoughts upon all the questions of most vital interest of the day."

That hypnotism is recognized by both the legal and the medical professions was the conclusion arrived at by the Medico-Legal Society at its meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York. Dr. J. Thornton Sibley read a paper on "The Philosophy of Hypnotism." He contended that the subject of hypnotism was acted on through suggestion of the hypnotizer. He gave a history of hypnotism under its various titles of mesmerism and clairvoyancy. Therapeutics, he maintained, was aided by hypnotism. He had practiced hypnotism himself for the last ten years, and found that it had been beneficial to his patients. Anybody, he said, can resist hypnotism with a mental effort, made at resistance. Suggestion was the base of all hypnotic power, and suggestion need not be of voice alone, but by gesture or even look. Many people, he declared, made themselves ill from autosuggestion. In hypnotism the objective mind is under subjection, while the subjective mind remains active.

H. E. Martin, of Grand Rapids, Mich., writes: "Beginning with the first Sunday in February, Mrs. Jennie Martin and Mrs. Addie Baldwin have been speaking alternately for the Grand Rapids Spiritual Society, and each has spoken one Sunday in March. Dr. O. W. Knowles speaks on the 20th of March; he is a clairaudient and a clairvoyant, and can give very good messages and tests from the platform. He has earned his honors. Mrs. Jennie Martin is a psychometrist, sensing the soul and intellectual nature of people and gives her readings and messages from the platform. She senses people's thoughts and feelings especially when directed to her; and by the aid of a controlling spirit having the same psychometric sense, she can read the character of a person. Mrs. Addie Baldwin can give poetry and has the promise of becoming a good speaker and public singer."

Charles A. Kiehl writes from Williamsport, Pa.: "Brother G. H. Brooks, of Wheaton, Ill has just closed an engagement with the first Church of Spiritualism that was productive of much good. In addition to his talents as a speaker and medium, we found in Mr. Brooks those characteristics which lead people toward a more favorable opinion of Spiritualism. We were much impressed by his warm words of praise for the workers in the cause of Modern Spiritualism, as well as his efforts to create a greater interest in the spiritual press, and the earnest manner in which he advocated lyceum work. Spiritualists realize the importance of a proper spiritual training for the young. The lyceum is a bright promise for the future welfare of our cause, and greater activity should be manifested in this indispensable branch of every well-regulated society that aims to do the greatest possible amount of good. We are at all times happy to greet, and sorry to part with those who strive for the advancement of every effort to further the cause of Modern Spiritualism, which means a priceless helpfulness to all humanity."

Mrs. M. B. Lang writes: "The lecture given at Harmony Circle hall, Sunday evening, March 13, through our inspired pastor and message-bearer, Mr. Chas. S. Hulbert, was very able. The subject being 'God,' it was proven to the audience that God always was and always will be the spirit of Man. Mr. Hulbert's developing circles held at his home, 54, Morgan street, are well attended, and all who go there are well repaid. Our vice-president, Mrs. M. E. Lane, of 215 Virginia street, was at Akron again last Thursday, Mar. 17. She was kept very busy through the day giving readings, and held a large circle in the evening. She has made arrangements to go there once in two weeks for the next three months to hold meetings and give tests at the home of Mrs. N. W. Flint, who is an earnest worker in spreading the light of Spiritual truths. There is a broad field of work at Akron and the surrounding towns. The people are ready and anxious to investigate in this work."

The Journal of Sandusky, Ohio, says: "Harrison D. Barrett, of Boston, now filling his eleventh term as president of the National Spiritualists Association of the United States and Canada, delivered his first lectures at the Spiritual Science hall, Sandusky, Sunday afternoon and evening. Mr. Barrett says that the national association is composed of 21 state associations, the societies in the United States numbering about 300. The estimated membership of all the organizations in the United States and Canada is 250,000. Michigan has more legally organized societies than any other state. Ohio has only 25 societies. The association is now recognized as a religious body, the same as all sects of the Christian faith. It has a licensed ministry and is building churches throughout the country. Over 110 structures are now owned and 20 of these were erected during the past five years. There are at present 325 ministers. There are about 10,000 mediums."

C. W. Leadbeater has been lecturing in St. Louis, Mo. Speaking of life after death, he says: "We usually give far too much thought to death, but the teaching of Theosophy enables us to view it in its true proportions, simply as a passage from one stage of life to another stage. The old classical saying, 'Mors janua vitae' (death is the gate of life'), is literally true, for that is exactly what it is—a gate into a fuller and higher life. We must realize that on the other side of the grave, as well as on this, the same great eternal law of divine justice prevails, and that we can trust as implicitly there as here to the action of that law with regard both to ourselves and to those whom we love. If we believe at all in a God, who is a loving Father (and no one who has the sight of the higher planes of nature can for an instant doubt this), we must realize that a fate which, like death comes to all alike, cannot have in it aught of evil for any, and that whether we are in this world or the next we must be equally safe in his hands."

C. H. Figuers writes: "The East End Spiritual Society, 1749 Superior street, Cleveland, Ohio, will hold its anniversary exercises commemorative of the fifty-sixth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism in its hall, Sunday, April 3, 1904. It was intended to hold them on the 27th of March, but sickness of our musical director compelled a change in the date. We have arranged a fine program—good speakers, good mediums, fine music, with elevator service. The ladies of the Pearl Children's Lyceum, assisted by the ladies of the West Side Progressive Lyceum, will serve light refreshments. The afternoon will be given up to the lyceum work as the Pearl Children's Lyceum, 1186 Pearl street, is under the protecting care of the East End Society. The West Side Progressive Children's Lyceum having been invited, will join in the afternoon's entertainment. A small admission fee will be charged; the proceeds going to both lyceums equally after expenses are paid. The Pearl Lyceum is the youngest in the city, but will compare favorably in every respect with the other lyceums. We cordially invite the public to come and see what we are teaching the children, and see whether it is good or not. Our children come from homes that are strangers to Spiritualism, but their parents say that they learn nothing but good there. Let us build up and not tear down in future. What a good thing it would be if each one would be content to do their very best and let others do the same."

Scribe writes: "As there is no organized society at McKeesport, Pa., the management of the meeting has fallen on the shoulders of Mrs. C. Lawton, whose ability is proven in the fact that for three years they have held regular meetings. Mr. and Mrs. Briggs have been invited to unite their forces with them and look favorably on the proposition. The McKeesport Daily News says: 'The closing meetings of the McKeesport Spiritualists in Haber hall, were held Sunday. The meetings were expected to be the last held in this city, but arrangements have been made for the use of the hall in the postoffice building and services will be conducted there next Sunday evening by Mrs. Megogney and Mrs. Dr. Sophia, both of Pittsburg, who conducted the opening meetings in Haber's hall and took part in the closing services there. The meeting last Sunday afternoon was addressed by Dr. Briggs and Mr. Welsh, president of the Beaver Falls society, in the absence of Dr. Day, who was ill. Eleven mediums were present during the day. In the evening the hall was filled and many were turned away. The McIlroy orchestra furnished music during the services and the Americus Male Quartette rendered a number of selections. During the evening an address was made by Mr. McClure.'"

Mrs. Emma M. Nutt-Moore writes from Muncie, Ind.: "Harrison D. Barrett, President of the N. S. A., lectured in the court house, the 16th and 17th of March. An interested audience greeted him. The Independent Society of Spiritualists holds services in G. A. R. hall. It has had Dr. Hewitt of Chicago, and Mr. Mendenhall of Muncie, this season as their speakers. For the past two Sundays I have been serving the society as speaker and medium. I have the months of May and June open. I would be pleased to hear from societies wishing a speaker and medium for these months. Address me as follows, No. 321 East Jackson street, Muncie, Indiana."

John C. Hemmeter writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "True Spiritualism is vindicated, notwithstanding the tricky element it has in its ranks. Saturday evening, March 12, a basket surprise party was held, composed of a number of Spiritualists at the residence of Sister Lena Wolff, No. 177 Auburn street, Cleveland, Ohio, the purpose of which was to congratulate her upon her emerging from her divers court proceedings with flying colors; and at that, unassisted (except by a few lay members); notwithstanding the N. S. A. and the O. S. A., including a number of mediums in this city were requested to lend an assisting hand by opening their purse-strings, and even at the latter's request, at a meeting held at the writer's office, by representatives of the divers societies located in this city, your correspondent was requested to draw up twelve or more subscription lists, and deliver to the several members to solicit funds to defend her suit, and more particularly our cult, but not one farthing was received by reason of said subscription lists, except that invisible gas called air, and when in motion, wind. As your space is limited to correspondents I must proceed to the point: Mrs. Wolff was known in her last court (circuit, composed of three judges) trial as plaintiff in error vs. the State of Ohio, defendant in error, and was a proceedings in error to reverse the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas and the Police Court of this city. The judgment in the Police court was a judgment of conviction, and that was affirmed by the Common Pleas Court. Her prosecution before the police court was under taken under our Revised Statutes, Sec. 7017-4, and that section, so far as applicable to her case reads, 'Whoever shall represent himself to be an astrologer, a fortune teller, clairvoyant or a palmister, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor,' etc. The presiding Judge (Marvin) in delivering the court's syllabus, amongst other matters stated: 'This case has some curious features about it. It invoves, among other things, the question what is meant by 'represent' and what is meant by a 'fortune teller.' It certainly was not the intention of the legislature to include every one who represented himself to be a spirit medium, else that would have been included in words. Spirit communications are held very sacred by some most excellent people. Judgment is reversed and the police court as well. 'The proceedings will be dismissed.'"

C. Walter Lyin writes from Oakland, Cal.: "It has been raining here for the last four or five weeks almost constantly. No danger of a dry season in Northern California, and we are almost at the point of praying for a respite. Down at Los Angeles they prayed in the churches for rain several weeks ago and got a sprinkle. Up here we were 'wicked,' apparently, and forgot to pray, and have had almost a deluge. Warm weather, however, and prospects good for a prosperous year."

Lida A. Rowo writes from Findlay, O.: "We engaged Mr. Frank T. Ripley to speak for us the month of February, and we were so pleased with his work we engaged him for the month of March, and the hall is crowded so there is not even standing-room, and many have to be turned away. We are trying to procure a larger hall so as to accommodate everybody. Mr. Ripley's lectures are very interesting and instructive while his messages are fine. He is doing a good work here. We are arranging to hold anniversary services, and expect to celebrate the 56th Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism in a way that will do credit to our little church, and bring back to the minds of all those tiny little spirit raps that were heard at Hydesville, N. Y., so many years ago, and brought such comfort and blessings to so many. Mr. Ripley is to deliver the anniversary address. All are invited to attend from all little surrounding towns.

Theodore Franck secretary of the Church of Spirit Communion, writes discouragingly of certain aspects of Spiritualism in Louisville, Ky. He concludes his communication as follows: "Finally, a few faithful workers were assembled by a Mrs. Annie Throndsen, formerly of Toronto, Canada, and courageously she ventured to exalt our grand cause so long subjected to the ridicule of the public and the ministry. This last effort has resulted in one of the most prosperous societies that ever existed in our city."

Mrs. A. Sexsmith writes: "The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission held special services on Sunday evening, March 20, at Star Lodge Hall. A special program was arranged for the occasion, it being necessary to occupy the large hall to accommodate the crowd, as the attendance was close to 300. The lecture by Brother Thos. S. Warner was brimful of spiritual food, and was delivered in his usual masterful manner. After the lecture he was ordained a Spiritualist pastor by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association. The ordination was very impressive and was all that could be desired from a spiritual standpoint. The new pastor was congratulated by all the officers and workers present of the state association and the Mission. The president, officers and members of the Mission are proud of Brother Warner, and are desirous that he continue in the grand work in the future which he so ably accomplished in the past. The Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission celebrated in a fitting manner its first prize maskball, on Saturday evening, March 19, at Star Lodge Hall. The upper and lower halls were filled with 700 Spiritualists who enjoyed themselves hugely. The costumes were very fine, and the prizes were of a high and valuable character, and were appreciated by all who won them. The entertainment feature was well arranged and the speakers and mediums were at their best. Some very fine vocal and instrumental selections were rendered. Great credit is due our worthy president and the committee who arranged the whole affair, it being a grand success both in a social and financial way."

Lawson Bradley writes from Bloomington, Ill.: "Our good missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, have been with us and held five good meetings—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. Friday evening they organized a society. We started out with forty members, all very enthusiastic. Sunday morning and evening, they held two more meetings, and it has not been our good fortune to listen to anything so good before. They are surely very fine. We hope to increase our membership much more. We have elected Mr. J. G. Erdman as president, and he is a very d ,ent worker for the cause, and we as members will help him to the best of our ability. We held our first regular meeting to-day. Brother Wm. Shafer read one of Mrs. Richmond's short discourses, which was very fine. Brother and Sister Sprague have gone to Decatur, Ill., to organize a society there. We hope to have them with us soon for more meetings. This city, like many others, has had its share of frauds and people who profess to be able to do almost everything; that is the worst thing Spiritualism has to contend with. We hope to be able to have the genuine mediums hereafter."

Otto E. Kropp writes: "The next meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists League will be held at the residence of Mrs. M. A. Burland, 3019 Vernon avenue, on the evening of Monday, April 4, 1904, at 8 o'clock."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will celebrate the anniversary of Spiritualism on April 3rd. Dr. Geo. B. Warne will lecture. We will have a fine programme and good music. Come and let's make it a regular love feast. Mrs. Klein will be on hand to give us messages from our friends on the other side. Meeting, at 7:30 p. m., 323 East 55th street."

Mrs. M. Henry, secretary, writes: "On Saturday evening, March 19, The Ladies' Auxiliary connected with the Universal Occult Society, held its third social under its state charter, at the residence of the president, Mrs. Davenport, 3138 Rhodes avenue. About forty-five were in attendance. Messages, tests and palm readings were given by good mediums. Refreshments were served. All appeared to enjoy the evening. Our next social will be held at Mrs. Davenport's on Saturday evening, April 2. All are welcome. We now have our constitution and by-laws, and would be pleased to welcome the ladies as members of our auxiliary."

Arthur S. Prentice writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "Among the many Spiritualist societies that are engaged in promulgating the grand truths of spirit communion, not the least is the little church on Allen street in Buffalo, N. Y., which is so ably presided over by Dr. F. O. Matthews, the pastor and medium. So earnest and excellent has been his work that from a congregation of a score two years ago, at nearly every meeting our church is filled to overflowing, and so eager are the people to learn the beautiful truths of our grand religion that we shall soon have to enlarge our present church or get a new one. Many of our people came for the first time out of curiosity, but were so much interested that they have dropped the old ideas and have accepted the indisputable facts which the mediumship of Dr. Matthews has given them. Long may our good pastor be permitted to administer to his people and may the grand teachings of Spiritualism become widespread until every human being shall know of and accept this natural religion. A Buffalo paper says: 'An enjoyable musical entertainment was held at Rev. Dr. Matthews' chapel on Allen street last evening, consisting of songs and recitations. The entertainment was a complete success. The proceeds are to help defray expenses of the church.'"

Agnes Tuttle writes from Berlin Heights, Ohio: "I send a few extracts from a letter received by me from Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, who with her husband, has been spending the winter in Cuba, thinking your many readers may be interested in these estimable workers in the Spiritualistic field. 'Carvet, Cuba, March 9.—Tomorrow we leave for Havana, where we will remain one week, sailing on the 19th, homeward bound, via St. Louis. We are delighted with the climate, and have built a little winter home, surrounding it with young trees, palms, lemon, grape fruit and orange, which will welcome us on our return next year. We have organized a society in this small town, with twenty active members. We have elected officers and have christened it 'The First Spiritual church.' I have lectured every Sunday except two since leaving home, to large and enthusiastic audiences, many American tourists listening for the first time to a lecture on Spiritualism. The natives are inclined to be cruel. There is much work to be done along the lines of humane education. Oxen are driven with long, sharp prods, and it is no uncommon sight to see horses with one ear. A fly lays an egg in the ear which hatches out a grub; that eats into the flesh, causing the poor beast untold agony, and often disfigurement. I could not sleep nights until I found a remedy; and I think you as well as your good mother, Emma Rood Tuttle, will be glad to learn that we relieved the suffering of many with the simple remedy of sweet oil. I lecture in Toledo, Ohio, every Sunday in April, and will soon greet my friends and co-workers in Uncle Sam's own country.'"

Dr. Ballard writes: "Mrs. A. E. Palmer, last Sunday night, gave the second of course of three lectures on The New Creation, at the Church of Higher Forces, Indiana avenue and 35th street. Each and every one became willing captives to the subject, and the charming mannerisms of the talented little lady, with the astronomical delineations, held the close attention of the audience for a quarter of an hour. The lady is distined to become very popular, so those who wish to get a seat had better not tarry by the wayside. Our services commence at 8 o'clock p. m. Our reliable and gifted little psychic, Mrs. Grace Aitken, gives spirit messages every Sunday after the lecture. A progressive euchre party, consisting of members and friends of our church, will be entertained at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Aitken, on Saturday evening, April 2. Although I am not in a position to say who will speak for us next Sunday, yet I can assure our friends the rostrum will be occupied by an interesting speaker."

W. N. Walker writes from Middleport, N. Y.: "Recently I participated in a most remarkable performance of spirit power. We attended an exhibition given by a frail-looking young lady and manager. Six powerful built men were invited to come to the platform, and assist in the exhibition, myself among the number, and all skeptics as to her power. Taking an ordinary wooden rod, about six feet long, and two inches in diameter, the manager raised it about five feet from the floor, the rod being level with the same. The young lady then placed her open palm against the end of the rod. We were then requested to lower her end of the rod until the same reached the floor, if possible. Three men bore down on the rod next to the young lady, and three placed their shoulders under the other end of it. Then began a most energetic exhibition of human strength on the part of the men, but to no avail—the rod was as unyielding as a piece of masonry. A chair was then raised by her manager, the front side of which she touched with the ends of her fingers. Three men were requested to place the same on the floor. Placing my hands on the back of chair while the same remained suspended in midair, I was lifted off the floor."

Aug Recht writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "The Society of Spiritual Truth holds its regular services every Sunday afternoon at Croshy Hall, Brooklyn. This month fine speakers and test mediums have been heard from its rostrum. On Sunday, Mar. 20, Dr. Wyman lectured and Mrs. Henderson of Newark, N. J., assisted Mr. Rasmussen in giving spirit messages."

Will C. Hodge sends us a photograph of the new Spiritualist Temple at San Diego, Cal. It is indeed fine, and no wonder the Spiritualists there enthuse over it.

H. F. Coates writes: "A large and enthusiastic audience greeted Mr. T. W. Sherk at Kenwood Hall, Sunday evening, March 20. His subject, 'The Future Life' could not help but instruct and interest all. Mr. Sherk will occupy the rostrum Sunday evening, April 3, with an Easter address. In the afternoon Mr. H. F. Arnold will address us. The church of the spirit communion is making the greatest effort to give the people who are seeking for truth that which will satisfy them. Our attendance never was better."

CHARLES BROCKWAY, platform test medium, lately from various points in Michigan, where he created great excitement among the Spiritualists, some sustaining him; others trying to suppress him, and some calling him the greatest medium of the age. He is so regarded by Mr. Lant, of Detroit, Mich. Now that he is in Chicago, he will hold a meeting next Sunday evening at Kimball Hall, corner of Wabash avenue and Jackson boulevard, when Spiritualists can pass judgment upon him, in regard to his merits. Admission free. Test him with questions securely sealed.

Rev. T. S. Warner will lecture Sunday evening, April 10, for the Rising Sun Society.

Mrs. Catharine McFarlin, a most excellent and efficient worker in the ranks of Spiritualism, has been employed during March with the Spiritualist society of Battle Creek, Mich. She would like to correspond with any society wishing a speaker for the coming months. She will also answer calls for holding parlor seances or public meetings during midweek any time when not engaged with the societies' work. She is also open for camp engagements, both for lectures and entertainments. She can furnish the best of reference. Letters will reach her addressed to 56 Willow street, Battle Creek Mich.

Mrs. M. A. Burland, Light of Truth church, writes: "The meetings at 47th and Cottage Grove avenue are growing in number, and they will be held there during the summer months. Tests given at each service. All good mediums welcome. Bring your lunch to conference, 3 p. m., and stay, as there is always a social time between services, and the pastor is there to interest you. Violet Club social every second and fourth Wednesday evening; good lunch and music, and many mediums, at the home, No. 3019 Vernon avenue, second flat."

John A. Hoover writes: "I am an invalid, seventy odd years old, and have been a devotee to the spiritual cult for fifty years. The Spiritual Universe and the Spiritual Telegraph, were among the first papers I took, spreading light on our heaven-born philosophy; since then I have taken many of the leading spiritual papers, both German and English, and never torn one nor kept a copy on hand, but sent them on to do mission work among the Gentiles; I dare say that I spend hundreds of dollars in this way for postage."

The Sandusky (Ohio) Register has the following: "A large and intelligent audience which completely filled Spiritual Science hall, greeted Frank T. Ripley last evening upon his return visit. His spirit guide delivered an instructive and entertaining lecture on 'Mediumship,' which was followed by a number of spirit messages, some full of comfort and consolation to the bereaved mother who had been separated from her child, while others produced smiles, as they brought up recollections of days long ago, when gray-haired veterans of the civil war went gaily to the front. The satisfaction which was apparent as the audience slowly filed out showed that Spiritualism has gained many adherents in this city during the past winter. Mr. Ripley will give some more messages from the other shore after the concert at the same hall this evening."

Robert Schmuss, secretary of the Psychic Research Society, Rockford, Ill., advises officers of the Illinois State Association, that Dr. J. H. Reynolds, who crowded Grand Opera House of that city, on Sunday evening to witness tricks done by himself and band of mediums, is a "first-class fakir" from the stand point of genuine Spiritualism. Western cities of this and neighboring states will probably be visited by him, perhaps under an other name. Spiritualists should rouse themselves to action because many communities believe such fellows represent all there is to Spiritualism. A Rockford daily said of Reynolds: "Fully 500 persons were turned away from the Grand Sunday evening, who were unable to obtain seats for Dr. J. H. Reynolds and his company of 'mediums.' It has been a long time since a lecture or entertainment has attracted the interest of this advertised 'open light seance' and before the box office opened at 7 o'clock no less than 200 persons were in line. The crowd gradually increased until 8 o'clock when Fire Marshal Thomas ordered the doors to be closed to prevent crowding in the aisles. Every seat in the house had been sold. Dr. Reynolds gave an interesting entertainment in magic. He opened with a slate-writing trick in which a 'message' was obtained from William Shakspeare. The slate was passed down to the audience for an examination and later an evident believer in Spiritualism was seen passing out of the door with the slate carefully tucked under one arm. A look at the message proved that the handwriting of the bard has greatly improved and that he is now using first-rate 20th century English. Later Dr. Reynolds performed a number of seeming impossible feats while within a cabinet. A committee consisting of Hon. Harry Woolsey, Harry Norris, Will Prentice and John Oberg was selected by the audience to see that the 'medium' was tied hands and feet and securely gagged. They reported the work well done, and yet bells were rung and harps were played by an invisible power. Dr. Reynolds courted the closest investigation but the committee was unable to expose the tricks. Dr. Reynolds himself does not pretend to have assistance from the spirit world but many in the audience seemed to take his work seriously and believe in the presence of spirits. As an entertainment it was very good but as a lecture or demonstration in psychic phenomena it was nil. It was a good proof of the value or newspaper advertising, however, for no other means of exploiting the entertainment was used."

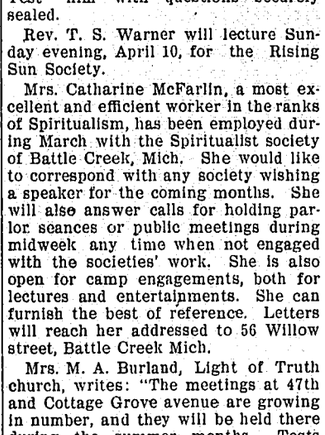
HOW I GREW TALL

A Startling Story Which Will Interest All Who Are Short.

The Height of Either Sex Can Quickly Be Increased From Two to Five Inches. These Marvelous Results Can Be Accomplished at Home Without the Knowledge of Your Most Intimate Friends.

The Free Book Tells You All About It.



MR. R. LEO MINGES.

Inventors, Scientists and physicians have for years been trying to find some method whereby the height of an individual could be increased and up to the last few years have met with failure. It remained for a comparatively young man, Mr. R. Leo Minges by name, to discover what so many others had failed to do.

Mr. Minges resides in Rochester, N. Y., and has devoted the best part of his life in studying and experimenting on the Cartilage, and his great efforts have at last been crowned with success. A large company, composed of Rochester's leading citizens, has been formed for the purpose of placing Mr. Minges' discovery and inventions before the public, so that now it is possible for any lady or gentleman who is short to increase her or his height from two to five inches. These results are absolutely guaranteed.

Mr. Minges has successfully used his method on himself, and has grown from a short, stunted boy to a handsome, robust man of six feet one inch in height. Thousands of people living in all parts of the world are using his method with equally as startling results. Let us send you the absolute proof of the above statements. We have just issued a beautiful illustrated book entitled "The Secrets of How to Grow Tall" which contains information that will surprise you. Ten thousand of these remarkable books will be given away absolutely free of charge in order to introduce them. If you fail to receive a copy you will always regret it. This great book tells how Mr. Minges made his wonderful discovery. It tells you how you can increase your height and build up the entire system. It contains the pictures and statements of many who have used this method. After you receive this book you will thank us the longest day you live for having placed within your reach this great opportunity.

Remember, a postal card will bring it to your very door, all charges prepaid. All correspondence strictly confidential and sent in plain envelopes. If you wish a free copy of this book and the proof of our claims, write today. Address THE CARTILAGE CO., Dept. 242F, Rochester, N. Y.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Geo. Adkin, South Dakota: Q. I live much alone and the scenes of my past life rush in on my memory like a flood. They are so vivid they seem realities of the present. During sleep it is the same with dreams.

A. This correspondent as he writes, has almost reached the age assigned to man, and has from an active life withdrawn as he says living "much alone." It is usual in the decline of life for the past to become more vividly remembered than passing events. The plastic mind was more susceptible to impressions, and now the thoughts not being occupied on the present revert to the past. If the mind is kept actively engaged in events of the day, if it continues to grow and acquire, it will not have occasion for retrospection.

When most men retire from the business in which they have engaged all their lives, they have no thoughts of anything else, and the past furnishes the only material. Their mental development is narrow and one-sided, and outside of their business they are mental dwarfs. This falling into the retrospection of age may be and should be avoided. The mind should be interested and engaged in work of some kind, and new ideas and new projects taken up, so that the hour will be too full to allow of reversion to things of the past.

Never was there a more harmful idea than that generally entertained, that the object of living is to gain a competency, and then retire into inactivity and enjoyment. The gaining of a competency is carried on at such high pressure and hot haste, that the individual becomes unfitted for enjoyment when the retiring point is reached. There is no present or future for such, only the past in which to revel. Men who stay in the harness of business, even the most exacting, live longer than those who gain a competency and retire. Probably they are happier. Of those who retire, it may be said of nine-tenths of them, "died early of ennui." Better it is to take the race with less pressure, go slower, and stop at times by the way as a picnic excursion, to rest, recuperate, and enjoy companionship and the scenery.

P. F. A.: Q. Please state through The Progressive Thinker the religious belief of the Justices of the United States Supreme Coutr?

A. The Congressional Directory which gives their biographies, does not say a word about their religious belief or affiliations. Evidently as the material for such biographies is usually furnished by the persons interested, they are not anxious to shout from the house-top their belief. Hence the question is difficult to answer. From sources that are probably reliable, the following statement has been compiled: Chief Justice Fuller, Episcopalian; Assistant Justice Harlan, Presbyterian; Brewer, Congregationalist; White and McKenna, Catholic; Holmes, raised a Unitarian, now independent; Brown is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Church of the Covenant, the Presbyterian church attended by President Harrison; Peckham is an Episcopalian, and Day's father is reported to have been a Methodist preacher. He was reared a Methodist.

Hollander: Q. Are there any papers devoted to Spiritualism printed in the Dutch language? How many in France?

A. Twenty spiritual magazines, weekly, fortnightly and monthlies, are published in France. These are edited by the best talent and have eminent men and women on the list of contributors.

In Holland Spiritualism has made rapid strides. There are three journals published in that country. "The Op de Greuzen Van Twee Werelden," (on the threshold of two worlds) has been for twenty-seven years under the management of that eminent literary person, Mme. Elise Von Colcor. The "Weekblad Gewijd Aan de Studie Von Het Bovenzinlijke, (weekly journal dedicated to the study of the higher life) edited by Dr. C. de Jong. It is a weekly, six-page folio. Lastly, the "Het Toekomstig Leven" (The Life to Come), fortnightly, 16 small folio pages.

From these we learn that circles meet every week in Utrecht, Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague, and able lectures are given.

Peter Wickstrom: Q. Would it not be a good idea to send a copy of The Progressive Thinker to every minister in the United States? Is there any book or pamphlet containing the most striking facts of spiritual manifestations that could be distributed for missionary purposes?

A. There has not been any such book or pamphlet published. As for the project of sending The Progressive Thinker to all clergymen, it would be one of the most effective schemes to propagate the new philosophy of life. If there was a fund, such as the Humane Society furnishes the publisher of "Our Dumb Animals," which enables him to send a copy of every number to every editor in the United States, Canada and Mexico, and to all prominent ministers of the gospel, who would be able to calculate the influence that would be thus excited? All cannot be supplied, but those who favor this idea might send a copy to one or more ministers, and thus do what they can for the work.

A. Rosland: Q. As a reader of The Progressive Thinker, I have a few questions to ask. Is there any law determining how much a developing medium may charge for developing another medium? If one has engaged a developing medium and quits for another, will he become insane or obsessed? Has the developing medium power to call back the controlling spirit and keep it away from one seeking development?

A. These questions tell a story of "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain." A person anxious to become a medium meets with a "developing medium," who promises for a good round sum, to "develop him into a great medium." The developer does not make good his promise and the subject transfers his allegiance to another. Then the first threatens to make him crazy, and send a spirit to "obsess" him and to keep away the spirits he would converse with.

A more villainous scheme never was concocted to extort money from innocent credulity. That "developing medium" should be placed behind the bars of a penitentiary until reformed, if possible to reform one so utterly lost as to play upon the dearest and most sacred affections for sordid purposes.

Of course the price a medium may charge is not fixed by any law. If such service can be rendered it is above price, and should no more be sold than the sunshine. But here arises the objection. The claim that anyone has the power to "develop" mediumship in another is not true. That anyone by mediumship can bring spirits to "obsess" another, or has power over spirits to keep them away, is not only untrue, but an infamous lie, manufactured and employed to hold the victim in the slavery of fear and extort his money. Persons making such claims and in the name of Spiritualism extorting exorbitant fees for promises they know they cannot perform, are not mediums—they are ghouls. They should be shunned as the most loathsome and slimy creatures are passed by.

Sextus: Q. Are lynchings increasing in number?

A. The number of lynchings has remained with remarkable regularity, nearly the same from year to year, and this, notwithstanding the increase in population, which if considered, makes the ratio much less. The year 1903 shows a great decrease from the year preceding, 90 cases being reported against 135 for 1901. The following table has been compiled for the years since 1885, and are practically correct:

1885—134	1886—138	1887—122
1888—142	1889—176	1890—127
1891—192	1892—235	1893—200
1894—190	1895—171	1896—131
1897—166	1898—127	1899—107
1901—135	1902— 96	1903— 90

During 1902 and 1903 there were no lynchings, in the states of New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, or the New England States. The crimes for which the penalty was inflicted were first murder, and second assault. Although the negroes are less than one-tenth of the population, more negroes suffered than whites.

NEW ORLEANS.

Spiritualism and Other Matters of Interest.

Sunday, Nov. 1, found me speaking for the first time to the Spiritualist Association of this city to a constantly increasing audience and after nearly five months lecturing and giving spiritual messages each Sunday and Wednesday evenings, I find a greater interest manifested than at any previous time.

New Orleans is a historic city and many places of interest to be seen. November 1, the day set apart in New Orleans as sacred to the dead, the windows in Royal street are aglow with wonderful beaded wreaths and flowers, wax and paper flowers, enriched with various mottoes so that at All Saints' time they may rival one another in the beauty, the variety, and the skill of their productions, for unique among the cemeteries of the United States are those of New Orleans. Owing to the dampness of the soil which long ago caused the authorities to agree that burial beneath the earth was unsanitary and impracticable, the custom here of burying above the ground has brought to the assistance of nature all the graces which money and art can combine in producing to make fair and beautiful the resting places of the so-called dead, and so everywhere the cemeteries breathe the lesson that all still live, that there is no death, what seems so is transition.

The tombs are built of brick or marble or granite and consist generally of the vaults with a crypt below for the reception of bones. The vaults are carefully cemented to prevent the exhalation of decaying animal matter. Sometimes, as in the old St. Louis cemeteries, the tombs are built in tiers along walls of extraordinary thickness; these walls surround the cemeteries and are called ovens. As years pass on and deaths multiply in a family the vaults are needed for the reception of other bodies; the slabs are then removed from the tombs, the old coffins broken up and burned, and the remains of the dead deposited in the crypt. In this manner a long series of burials may take place in a single tomb. The custom here of decorating these graves on All Saints day with the most beautiful flowers both natural and otherwise is a beautiful one, but somehow we could not help thinking that cremation would be the far better way to dispose of the dead bodies, and to scatter flowers along life's pathway would be more appreciative but such is life and we have to make the best of it.

As this is a Catholic city, or nearly so, there is a great chance for improvement along many lines, and through the law of evolution it will come.

We visited St. Roch's cemetery and shrine where it is claimed many have been healed of their spiritual and physical infirmities, many wonderful cures have been said to have been performed at this shrine and a large pile of crutches were left behind to show the efficacy of their faith and hope.

We also visited the Army of Tennessee monument to Albert Sidney Johnston. At the entrance to the vault stands a marble statue of an orderly calling the roll, the burial vault in the heart of the mound contains a tablet to the memory of General Johnston on which is inscribed Dimitry's famous epitaph, said to be one of the finest mortuary inscriptions in the English language. Within the mound, along with many of the soldiers he led, lies the body of General P. G. T. Beauregard, the great Confederate chieftain.

As during the past two years I have spent a considerable portion of my time in the South, I feel that I am better qualified to judge of the true condition of the Southern people; and as personally I have visited the tombs of the illustrious dead of both armies I have arrived at this conclusion that we as a people learn the lessons of life through sad experiences, and I shall hope that with increased knowledge which is power we shall settle all our differences in the future through arbitration, and when the roll call sounds for us that our name shall be inscribed on the right side of the ledger.

So many places of interest I hardly know where to commence or leave off, as this city is composed of many foreigners, with different habits and customs, but all seem to be law-abiding citizens and enjoy themselves in their own way.

The great carnival or Mardi Gras was considered a great success and for one week was given up to the festivities of the occasion—thousands flocked here from all portions of the country to see the grand parades, attend the balls and other places of amusement; the floats were simply beautiful and expressed much and were well worth seeing—but among all the places of interest I have visited, too numerous to mention, nothing has interested us so much as the cause of Spiritualism. But few workers here seem to feel any interest in the public work, but there are a few who are as the salt of the earth, and are doing all they can to advance the cause, and the crowds who have come out to listen to our philosophy and receive a spiritual message, have cheered the hearts of the faithful. A law here preventing mediums from advertising has been a hindrance in many ways, but it has also had the effect of keeping out some of the professional ones who have in the past caused our cause to be greatly misjudged, but we hope in time things will adjust themselves and right come uppermost and justice done.

We are now making preparations to celebrate the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism and anticipate a pleasant time. I shall expect to return to Detroit in the near future. The weather here during the entire season has been delightful, flowers in bloom all winter and not one day this season but we could look out upon the Square and see every seat occupied. This is really the land of sunshine and flowers; and I shall be loth to turn my back upon these beautiful scenes, but duties call me and I must respond.

I have written this long article in answer to many letters of inquiry regarding the city, its climate, and our cause in general, hoping that as this is my second article of the season, Brother Francis will kindly publish.

REV. NELLIE S. BAADE.

A PROPOSITION FROM W. W. ABER.

To the Editor: "A gentleman from Los Angeles, Cal., Robert Hale, has offered $1,000 to any medium who will bring to view a genuine materialized spirit.

Since you have called the attention of Spiritualists to this fact I communicated it to Mr. W. W. Aber, and he authorized me to say through the columns of your live and efficient paper, that he invites Mr. Hale to come to Kansas City, Mo., (3422 E. 10th street) with the money, and remain ten days or longer (if necessary.) He will allow him to rent a room and prepare it as he likes with a cabinet which excludes the light, in which Mr. Aber is to go, subject to the most scrutinizing personal examination by a committee approved by both parties concerned.

If, at the first, second or third seance a genuine materialized spirit appears outside the cabinet, male or female, Mr. Aber is to receive one thousand dollars, and he will allow Mr. Hale to deduct therefrom all his expenses incurred on his trip to and from Kansas City, back to Los Angeles.

Conditions are simply means for the accomplishment of purposes. The means required for materialization are honest intentions on the part of all concerned; a harmonious circle of eight or ten, equal or nearly equal males and females, an earnest desire for truth, a kind and gentle disposition towards all, and an earnest desire for honest endeavor. Light must be excluded from the seance room except sufficient for a full, clear and deliberate view of the materialized forms.

In transfiguration, the spirit can be touched, and it manifests the character of the one it claims to be. It is the medium transformed; but in true materialization, the medium remains in the cabinet while the spirit is outside. The visible substance is a combination of the magnetic aura of the circle focalized in the cabinet, together with the elements from the atmosphere and those drawn from the medium, so manipulated by the spirit chemist as to be made visible to mortal sight. The spirit cannot be touched by mortal hands, and is instantaneously dissipated by the light of day.

This explanation is necessary to show how indispensable the requisite conditions are. Mr. Aber is not willing to break up the conditions established in Kansas City; and as Mr. Hale says nothing about details, nor who are to prescribe conditions, such uncertainties are very unsatisfactory.

Now Mr. Hale has an opportunity to make an exhaustive investigation. Let him come. He will be received with due courtesy and assured fair treatment. E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

J. T. McColgan, M. D., a prominent physician, and a firm believer in materialization, recommends Mr. Aber. He says:

"Let me kindly suggest a plan to Mr. Hale by which he can save nine hundred dollars and get better results than by attracting all the fake mediums in the country to Los Angeles, in the hope of beating him out his money. Let him slip off from home, not telling anyone where he is going and visit Kansas City incognito; attend Mr. Aber's seances for one week—not as a fraud hunter, but as an honest searcher for truth. Let no one know anything whatever concerning his antecedents or his dead relatives or friends, and if some of his spirit friends do not come to him that he can unmistakably identify and call him by his given and surname, and unasked give him stronger tests of their identity than he could frame, he will have a different experience to mine under similar conditions. I am not personally interested in Mr. Aber, but cite him because he is nearer to Los Angeles than any other psychic I have tested thoroughly and found genuine. I have seen numbers of people there from all parts of the country and never saw one failure to get satisfactory manifestations."

We do not believe immortality because we have proved it, but we forever try to prove it because we believe it.—Martineau.

RUNNING COMMENTS.

Something for Spiritualists to Consider.

The purification of Spiritualism depends upon the fidelity of the laity. Mediums cannot with prudence openly aid in that Herculean task. They invite misunderstanding of their motives and are charged with professional jealousy. The greater the percentage of honest mediums so much smaller will be the manifestations of envy. Genuine workers know no rivals, for they welcome real demonstrations through any fellow workers. They glory in the triumph of the truth instead of in that of the individual.

A medium writes me: "If you say a word against their nefarious work you are condemned and blacklisted over the country by them and by many so-called Spiritualists—letters are sent ahead of us to look out for and not admit us to any of their seances. So you see if you want to maintain any standing in a society where you know fraud is perpetrated you have to keep still and let the tares grow with the wheat."

All of the statement of the writer is true and beyond question. Secrecy, cunning impudence and ignorance are the chief weapons of the tricksters. They excite prejudice against any medium they wish to blast, and do not scruple at falsehood to attain their end. The gang is misleading many well-meaning Spiritualists into doing their dirty work for them. The awakening time is sure to come and vengeance will be visited upon the offenders whose cry is only give us a living and the devil may take care of the truth.

"You will be all right when you have gotten into the inner circle—your success will be assured." So said a well-known medium and late camp-meeting official to a new worker still in the early days of mediumship, and who believes that her work is a sacred calling. "So you really mean there is an inner circle for mediums?" queried the auditor, "Certainly there is," was the answer, and the first speaker's record qualifies him to testify on that point.

A friend writes: "Beaver Falls (Pa.) has passed through an experience this winter which has been the means of the society closing—one was a trumpet medium; the other a materializing medium from Allegheny. Illinois is not the only state overrun with fakirs." There is noted a rapid and remarkable increase in the number of trumpet mediums. Just connect with that incident the fact that the demand for materialization is on the decline—like some of South Water street's eggs, it is becoming stale. The Tin Horn phase is not necessarily a spiritual inflow, or overflow. Chicago has a materializing medium, who, in private is said to hold death ends all—does not believe in life beyond the grave.

Chicago Spiritualists are just now having their attention called to a new, or else a relocated, "supply house," whose quite tasty card reads: "Radium—Medium's Paraphernalia—Crowns, Belts, Hands, Heads, Veils and Full-size Figures all illuminated with the new Radium light. Will appear, gradually float about room and disappear. All work confidential." Here is an opportunity to realize the melancholy aspirations of childhood; everyone can now become an angel and with the angels stand, a crown upon his forehead and a harp within his hand. At the same time he may become an angel to somebody else. No wings, but only a pocket-book required.

A letter before me reads: "You no doubt read Mr. Kidd's article in The Progressive Thinker praising up the McCoy-Chase combination going under the name of the Baldwins, from Cleveland, Ohio, who have had many exposures—yet some think them honest." Had supposed the "Baldwins" were professional showmen and at last accounts "he" was hunting for a competent female partner who would taboo all thoughts of marriage and confine herself strictly to business. A woman named McCoy, with a male partner, were features of the Island Lake (Mich.) camp the season before the last one until the first-named ran up against an examining committee of ladies and as a result no show was given and injured innocence in petticoats departed in high dudgeon. Last season the same name bobbed up at the Chesterfield camp and passed the official committee. Remember a great deal of gauze can be compressed into small compass. If your materializing medium is a woman have a lady physician assist in the preliminary examination.

Here is another quotation, "Yes, test hunters for platform workers have existed and I have known of some of the so-called test mediums using them, and if reported correct, missionaries for the N. S. A. are not exempt from said criticism." If the writer can furnish any proof of such work by the missionaries named, I will promise him that it shall be brought to the attention of the official board of the N. S. A., and an investigation made. Fakirs and falsifiers are twin offspring of selfish natures. Message mediums are not alone to blame for existing conditions, serious though they are. The greed of laymen for messages seems insatiable. How many would be content with just the output of genuine power? Who is as willing to pay the circle fee when he gets nothing as when he receives something? Why crowd our instruments to desperation? What can you expect from a sponge after once wrung dry? It must have a chance to reabsorb. The quality of the supply is often dependent upon the character of the demand. Be willing to pay the medium whether something or nothing, comes to yourself. GEO. B. WARNE.

WHAT IS LIFE?

And Is Life Worth Living?

The answer to the first will be the answer to the second question, we think.

Life inheres in every atom; no subdivision can be made that will leave any particle, however infinitesimal, without life. All is Energy (only another name for God), ready for expression, but is inoperative until impulsed to express. By expression I mean showing itself in action for achievement. The whole history of the known universe is based upon this premise, and the demonstrations of that we call nature sustain the premise.

Nature is understood as comprising all that offers itself in cosmos, and every demonstration of energy is a demonstration of nature.

Another fact connected with the above is that every atom has intelligence—exactly in accordance with its needs.

Achievement is by energy in action toward a given point; that point reached the energy either holds itself to its attained purpose for the prolongation of its usefulness there or through disintegration prepares the way for a change in usefulness. Nothing rests in absolute inactivity. In the alembic of the infinite, change is eternally going on.

The solid granite crust of our globe has never been in perfect rest. Its combined atoms have gone and are doing their work, their chemical combination, not through or by an outside intelligence, but by the principles of life or being inherent in every particle, produce constant activity which in time will change the structural compound. As it is, it is giving off every hour the results of its inherent potentialities, for no one touches a piece of granite or steps upon it but draws from its unrecognized life something of that life; no earth lies upon it that is not impregnated with its outgoings, its aural force. All plants within reach of it partake of its principles, and even the lichens which cover it draw life force from it. The air coming in contact with it is also affected chemically by it; and this is so little thought of, so little studied, but an intelligent investigation of the silent forces of nature, a seeker after the underlying reasons of things, will find these statements true; and if true of granite, it is true of all aggregations of force by whatever names they be known, or of whatever construction, even to the keystone of the cosmic arch, man himself.

This that we call life is "Full manifested everywhere;

But templed man, in you."

Then from the analytical point of view, as shown by the granite and the comprehensive glimpse at all manifestations, can we not glean enough to bring answer to the question, Is Life Worth Living?

To begin with, it must be lived. We cannot avoid it. We cannot evade it, cannot annihilate it. We must be because we are.

But you argue the question of change. Yes, change does come, but the inference from known facts is that individual life never ceases; that the crystallization known as man, the highest type of intelligent energy, never knows any change that destroys the individualization; that ascends the scale of existence but to find that change of relation only increases power of usefulness, widens fields of expression, opens out still further vistas of opportunities and inducements to seek for more and still more, until they are justified in saying man is infinite. Good reason, then, has he for saying he is the highest expression of Deity, and this does make Life Worth the Living.

ALL FOR JESUS—DO WE MEAN IT?

A Recitation by Arzella C. Clay, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

"All for Jesus! All for Jesus! All my being's ransomed powers,
All my thoughts and words and doings, all my days and all my hours."
Thus, within a curtained window, sang a woman's voice so sweet,
While without, upon the pavement of the cold deserted street,
All unconscious in the darkness, drenched by slowly falling rain,
One (once quite as pure and tender) had succumbed to cold and pain.

Homeless, friendless, without shelter, she had wandered all the day,
Till at last in sheer exhaustion prone upon the ground she lay.
There a late pedestrian found her, stooping close her features scanned,
In the dim light turned upon her from the lantern in his hand;
'Twas a face of wondrous beauty, marred, 'tis true, by want and shame,
But the stranger bending o'er her looked in pity, not in blame.

Some one singing! Clearly, sweetly, comes the voice above the storm,
"All for Jesus!" Stooping quickly, see! he lifts the dripping form;
Up the steps he swiftly bears her, pausing scarce to think before
'Neath his touch the bell's loud summons brings the singer to the door.
"Madam, see! I found her lying fainting on the pavement near,
And just then I heard you singing so"—said he—"I brought her here."
But alas! no ray of pity shines within those starry eyes,
As the stranger pleads, "In mercy, let me in before she dies!"
"No," she said, "you cannot enter, up the street another square, Round the corner stands a refuge—they'll receive her—take her there."
Has he heard aright, he wonders, waiting just a moment more,
Yes, she draws her silken garments round her, bows, and—shuts the door!

Shocked, amazed, the kindly stranger to the refuge wends his way,
And within its peaceful shelter soon his helpless burden lay.
Here kind women gather round her, loving hands work with a will,
But just once she moves her eyelids—shivers—gasps—and then is still.
And they stand with solemn faces silently around the bed,
While the matron softly whispers, "'Twas too late, sir, she is dead."

Yet awhile the stranger lingers, gazing on that lovely face;
Of her past, death's icy fingers have not left a single trace;
Not one mark or sin or sorrow stains the whiteness of her brow,
Whatsoe'er her life's dark secret, none can ever read it now,
But his thoughts go all unbidden to the home adown the street,
Where securely rests the singer with the voice so clear and sweet;
And the matron heard him murmur, "'Tis indeed a bitter fate!
Had she meant what she was singing would it then have been too late?"

Oh, my sisters! warmly sheltered, in your homes ablaze with light,
Know you not that souls are dying, near your door perhaps to-night?
Know you not that all around you lives go out in sin and shame,—
Lives that you, perchance, might rescue by one action in "His name."
"All for Jesus!" listen, sisters: He who died upon the tree,
Says to us, "As you have done it unto these, 'twas unto me."

TREATMENT BY HYPNOTISM AND SUGGESTION; or Psycho-Therapeutics. By C. Lloyd Tuckey, M. D., Aberd. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Price, $3.

This is the fourth edition, revised and enlarged, 376 pages 8vo, of a most valuable and standard work, by an acknowledged authority and expert in the science of healing by hypnotism and suggestion. The method of treatment by suggestion is clearly and exhaustively considered, and illustrated by descriptions of numerous actual cases in the author's personal experience. The work will be found a valuable auxiliary to physicians in ameliorating and curing the mental and physical ills of their patients, and is worthy of most careful study not only by physicians, who should be thoroughly informed in the nature and methods of curative hypnotism or suggestion, but also by all students of hypnotism who desire to thoroughly understand the subject. It is a valuable mine of information to all who consult its pages.

If people knew what the future had in store for them the chief charm of existence would be lost.

Remember, please, that it costs ten cents to get a personal check cashed at a bank in Chicago. If you send a personal check, add ten cents to the amount sent.

Remember, please, that we have only two books which we send out now for 25 cents each. We cannot allow you to select any other book or books in their place.

Remember, please, that you are not entitled to any of the Premium Books unless you send in with your order a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker.

Remember, please, that the safest way to make a remittance is to secure a postal order.

Remember, please, that these books are used exclusively as premiums, the editor desiring no profits, his sole object being to do a HUMANITARIAN WORK ALONG SPIRITUALISTIC, PSYCHICAL AND ETHICAL LINES, hence they are not for sale to the trade.

Remember, please, that mistakes and trouble may be avoided by dealing direct with this office, instead of through a news agent.

Remember, please, that all of our Premium Books are neatly and substantially bound in cloth, and are an ornament to any library.

Read our Premium Offer, AND DO NOT WRITE TO US FOR ANY OTHER TERMS. You must send $1 for The Progressive Thinker when you desire one or more premium books. Please bear this in mind.

Every person who sends in a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker can have until further notice, the following books for 25 cents each: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," by Hudson Tuttle, and "Seers of the Ages, or, Spiritualism Past and Present," by Dr. J. M. Peebles. Both exceedingly valuable, and though widely different, each one fills an exceedingly important niche in the literature of Spiritualism.

If you order only one book, and that one neither of the books mentioned above, the price is 50 cents.

If you order two books, and neither of them the above mentioned, the price is 90 cents.

We have TEN Premium Books only, and you can select them as follows:

Any three of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.10.

Any four of the ten premium Books you may order, price $1.50.

Any five of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $1.80.

Any six of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.10.

Any seven of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.35.

Any eight of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.65.

Any nine of the ten Premium Books you may order, price $2.90.

Lastly, all of these TEN valuable Premium Books here announced are sent out, all postage prepaid, for $3.10, something never before equalled in this country or Europe. Our principal aim is to send them out as nearly as possible at actual cost price.

TEN REMARKABLE BOOKS FOR $3.10.

1—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 1.

2—The Encyclopedia of Death, and life in the Spirit World, Vol. 2.

3—The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3.

4—Art Magic, or Mundane, Sub-Mundane and Super-Mundane Spiritism.

5—Ghost Land, Spiritualism, Occultism.

6—The Next World Interviewed.

7—The Occult Life of Jesus.

8—A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands.

9—The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science.

10—Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these ten premium books is about ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.10, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an oportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

CLUBS! CLUBS!. CLUBS! CLUBS!

To Clubs of ten or more we offer the following terms to each one: The Progressive Thinker one year, and ONE of the following books, $1.15: "The Religion of Man and Ethics of Science"; "Seers of the Ages, or Spiritualism Past and Present"; "A Wanderer in the Spirit Lands"; "The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World," Vol. 3. The one who gets up the Club will be entitled to the paper one year free, and any two of the books he may select among our list of premiums.

Charles Dawbarn on the Center of Creation.

THE CENTER OF CREATION.

Part Third.

The scientist now recognizes that every form is built up of units. Everything that happens is the action of a unit. Man of to-day is learning that even his thoughts are molecular, and can travel through space. The mysterious protoplasm is a collection of units, working intelligently together for a common purpose. So are our bodies, and every organ in them. We next recall as another fact that personality is merely a form, through which intelligence is telling its tale to our sense. Yet further, every form is always composed of a number of units that can be torn apart. So every personality is in its essence an uncertainty. It may stand like a pyramid, inside and outside our time life, but one day it drops apart, and the personality vanishes.

The human personality may grow hoary with age, or break up in its youth. It may march, with its units a little differently arranged, through the gateway of death, and build its home across the divide. It may boast its own immortality, and call it an eternal truth, but it is only eternal as a city is eternal, for every form is an aggregation of units, each perfectly independent. The city will remain a city only so long as new inhabitants are attracted to it, but it is built up of forms, some mere bricks, others in human shape.

Those who have cared to watch recent recorded scientific revelations must have noted the curious case of Miss Beauchamp, reported for the English and American Society for Psychical Research by a learned physician and specialist of Boston, Mass. The whole account is marvelous in every recorded detail, but the one point to note herein is the appearance of "Sally," who claimed to be a portion of Miss B. at her birth, but had been unable to come to the surface and express herself in earth life until released by the nervous shock experienced by Miss B. It happened in that case that this hidden self was a rather wicked part of the mortal lassie, who was thus the gainer by its suppression. But it might as easily have been a real good sliver off the original block. If the reader realizes that a personality can be thus broken up, he will perceive that that means that a personality cannot be eternal, and possibly may not be very lasting. Spirit Return teaches us that the personality usually or often outlasts death, but presently, if the spirit be progressive, changes until any direct talk with a mortal becomes impossible.

The writer claims as sufficiently demonstrated that the personality, of which we are so proud, is nothing but a collection of eternal and indestructible units, each of which is the only real being worth talking about as neighbor to neighbor throughout eternity. The bull's-eye may have been hit by Nature when shooting at her target, and man may have as a consequence, popped out. That only makes him the best collection of units that has yet appeared—so far as we know.

We will not dispute the Wallace contention that manhood is possibly very scarce as a celestial commodity, and that he needed very peculiar conditions before he could make his appearance, but that is as far as we care to go in that direction. Intelligence is just as much present in every other speck of Cosmos, and therefore Nature is hitting other bull's-eyes in her own way, and producing other personalities with which, in all probability, we could no more exchange thought than we can with the ant.

It is perfectly useless discussing the kind of personality outwrought by Intelligence under those other conditions. If we recognize, as proved by Mr. Wallace, that it cannot possibly resemble man, that is the end of it for us. But, all the same, these facts present us with a great thought.

There are many manifestations of intelligence, and one may influence another, even if the personality be absent. A man may pride himself on his intelligence, but if he associates with a number of others, the united intelligence is not that of his own, but something better or worse, as the case may be. And the intelligence of a city or nation is not the personal intelligence of the single citizen. It does and approves acts the single citizen would not do or approve. The influence of a great intelligence of this kind may be unseen, but it is tremendous all the same. Now when we remember that every unit in space is also an intelligence, it seems startling. When we gaze at the myriad stars forming our Milky Way, and realize their vast distance, it seems as if their presence or absence would amount to little for us. But when we remember that even the most distant has energy enough to print itself on the photographic plate we can realize that the total influx of energy must be enormous And when we further remember that intelligence is always associated with energy, and that it could only reach us combined with substance, we recognize that the combined influence upon earth life must be beyond mathematical computation. And if we further reflect that each one of those distant globes has and exerts intelligence in proportion to its mass, we realize yet more that the inflow of such Cosmic influence upon our little earth is, and must be enormous. But all the same, as we have seen, the personalities wielding such intelligence may not be able to exchange a single thought with us, any more than with the white ant, our neighbor.

The truth as the result of such studies seems to be that man must not allow himself to become disheartened by finding himself alone in the universe, as a man; or feel badly because he himself has no assured personality on which a Celestial Life Assurance Company would take much of a risk.

Still man realizes that, in some way he cannot comprehend, the united intelligence of his units is building up a grander and grander manhood. That manhood exists for him as a personality. Whatever the ultimate fate of that personality, he knows it outlasts the grave. Even if chips fly from the block at birth, or at death, it seems certain they all become once again a united whole, somewhere and at some time in the eternal history.

The personality we may meet hereafter may be fuller and grander than that of our loved one here, but we shall not cry for it to be diminished that we may recognize it. We shall accept that, and every other change that comes to us as a law of Nature. And if manhood, here and hereafter, is to stand alone so long as its personality lasts, there are enough of us, Brother Wallace included, to make our bull's-eye a Garden of Eden, and without a snake in it. Give us time enough for that and we won't complain when the unit gathering breaks up—if it does.

(The End.)

STOMACH TROUBLES CURED

If you suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean Help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Mustard Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the cause, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a full two weeks' treatment to any sufferer desiring to give it a trial. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you? It Is Free. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 29 Main St., Battle Creek, Mich.

PRAYING TO THE GOD OF WAR TO BUTCHER THE OTHER FELLOW.

A "sinner" who had been wrestling with his sins at the penitent form of a revival meeting, startled the assembly by jumping high in the air and shouting, "Hurrah for God!"

Alexeieff, the Russian commander in the Far East, is a rival of the jumping convert. In order of the day recently issued to the Russian troops, the military leader speaks of God as having always upheld the arms of Russia, and concludes his little sermon to the army with a characteristically military utterance: "God be with us—hurrah!" or its Russian equivalent.

The same old prayer! Surely if God took any notice at all of such blatant hypocrisies, He would be desperately tired of the whole miserable, cowardly business. Hasn't Russia millions enough of poor wretches, to offer as "food for cannon" without imploring the assistance of an unseen helper?

A more honorable prayer was that of a Scotch sailor, who was faced on one occasion by a huge polar bear. Opening his knife, his only weapon, and grasping firmly, he thought a prayer might help him, so he hurriedly uttered the following words:

Oh! Lord, I dinna' trouble ye often, but ye see me, an' ye see this bear. Oh! Lord, if ye winna' help me, dinna' help the bear; and if ye'll help neither ane nor the ither, stan' by an' see fair play, for this'll be a maist awfu' fecht. Amen.

The Israelites are reported to have found "Jah" useful in their blood-spilling, land-stealing campaigns. He worked in their favor with hailstones and thunder; stopped the "sun;" breathed poison on Sennacherib; made walls fall on armies, and turned on floods.

But there was a distinction with a difference in those days. Jah was not the only god prayed to. He was one of the crowd; he had to uphold his dignity; or Dagon, or Baal, or some other divinity would claim the victory.

Now, however, things are changed, and warring nations generally pray to the same God! Which is extremely awkward for the Deity.

Boers prayed to the same God as the British, but were defeated. Some one had to win, and the most capable army did it. It was prayer plus power; then why pray at all, for the forces of prayer being equal, it was the power which decided the struggle.

Now, here we find Russian playing the same game. "O, God, bless us, curse the Japs. We are right, they are wrong. Direct our bullets, explode our shells, sharpen our bayonets, repair our warships. God—help us! Hurrah for God!"

Is not all this business contemptible? Is it not a survival of the times of grossest savagery, when men called in the princes of the power of the air to aid them scalp each other? Surely Russia is barbarous to do such things.

The papers tell us that "many Russian politicians, among them men whose penetration and energy have often been admired in Western Europe, have addressed themselves to the Far East crisis after a pilgrimage to the shrine of the Virgin of Kazan or the wonder-working St. Seraphim. And more than one general bound for the seat of war has, before starting, been blessed with the highly venerated icon of some Russian saint, in the miraculous efficacy of which he has the profoundest belief.

"Russian officers and soldiers under orders for the front attend a service before they leave, to pray for the untimate success of their arms. Special prayers are read; the one most generally used is, "Blessed be God, holy and immortal. Have mercy upon us. Our cause is a just one; therefore, let us all pray to the Lord that He may strengthen our arms in order that we may gain a victory over our enemies,, with all their wiles."

"The service is not a lengthy one, rarely lasting more than twenty minutes. Frequently, before setting out for the Far East, Russian priests sprinkle the soldiers with holy water, and many believe that the rite renders them invulnerable, or at least goes far to protect them from bullets."

Oh! barbarous to call upon the Father of the Prince of Peace—or is it the Prince himself?—to commit wholesale murder! For surely it is nought else—"who can fight against God?"

Icons? Holy water? Virgins? Saints? Humbug! England smiles at the credulity of the Russian —— and does exactly the same when she is going to war.

Is it not time that the Father of Love was left out of this brutal sport?

Has not the day come when men should say as they take off their coats to fight, "Oh! God, we know we are breaking Thy laws of love, we know we are forgetting Thy noblest teachings, we know we cannot expect Thee to approve of our brutish conduct, but we are going to give the other lot a hiding—if we can. Oh! Father, you taught us by the example of earth's best, by long suffering, by the stripes of tyranny, that this war is the most insensate folly, that this bloodshed is rabid madness, that this cut-throat scramble for wealth is raging lunacy; but, Father, we are bent on fighting, and will fight. We do ask your help—we know we cannot expect it—"Thou art Love," but we have no time for that just now—we mean to fight, and win—if we can.

It will be long before the Archbishop of Canterbury utters a prayer like that. SPIRIT VOICES

On the Morning of May 12, 1899.

Awakened from sleep, I heard a spirit voice, not speaking directly to me, but to other spirits who evidently held different views on the subject of reincarnation which they were discussing. This voice in clear tones took the lead thus;

"Souls are not repotted as some wiseacres put it, nor are they remodeled like old clothes; they are eternal form systems and continue to exist eternally, but, some human souls are not improved through earth life as the immanent law requires, owing to lack of congenial system reciprocity, which bars out the legal supplies needed for soul and general improvement. This condition of individual defects cannot otherwise be made good, than by the needed experiences and the quality of substance in such grades of correspondence as the immanent law calls for this condition.

"These natural facts not being understood by mortals, are not complied with in too many human lives. This then is the cause that necessitates the return of such individual souls to don another earth form through which these deficiencies can be made good and the soul thus rendered strong for its endless progressive pursuits and enjoyments.

"Individual evolution is only possible step by step in the regular order of gradations. When any grades of needed experiences are missed, the step must be retraced as above said, so that the march onward can be pursued in the legal order, nor is this rated as retrogression. It is all governed by the strict rules of progression.

"These processes frequently appear paradoxical, yet are they truly progressive and the watchword is ever onward, nor is there any loss to the individual entity. What has been acquired on one tour is to the individual's credit, and marked on his individual chart of being and all farther knowledge gained is added to this, nor is there ever a change of sex or individual self-hood. The real self or ego survives all changes and endures forever, unaltered in aught but acquired wisdom, strength and perfect individual form. This is truth."

Then another spake thus: "So be it then, but observation teaches and verifies this, that there are really millions of mortals out of system harmony so to say, thus not really in harmony with their people and things, yet possessed strong will and persuasive ability through which they seek to enlist the sympathy of others to aid them in ways and things where individual efforts can prevail to accomplish what is sought for. Is such help beneficial and permanent? Please explain."

The other answered: "No; such help is not permanent, and it is lack of comprehension of the nature of the cause or causes by the parties pro and con. The records show clearly that those who in such wise seek help and those who give it sympathetically, are persons of such diverse desires and motives, that in most cases such incongenial sympathetic associations interlock them conditionally, so that in a measure they partake of each other's natures and faults, etc., and therefore share the penalties for misconduct; and it is always shown in the records that those showing kindness to those in fault, are weaker in system strength and will power mostly, and become therefore, the sufferers for the real culprits who by their will power and cunning have gained a mastery over them while enlisting their sympathies. This is absolutely wrong, and although it is rectified later on, it is a waste of time in life's pursuits and a detriment to individual progression. If this were rightly understood, much time and trouble could be economized. Millions of mortals are crying for help, yet are not willing to learn and comply with rules of life and conduct that would insure the needed help.

"Too many mortals are depleted in minds and bodies by reason of nurturing hate toward other persons and things. This is sickness and the cure for it is a change of thoughts and motives, so that the healing balm can be inducted into the mind and mechanism. The mental or divine healer can assist such persons in this change of mind, by a change of vibratory currents directed upon them to pass through the mind and body; but persons so assisted, must have faith in such a healer and follow closely the advice that is given, otherwise permanent help is impossible. Jesus himself could do his mighty works only in keeping with this rule or law, wherefore he said so often, "If you believe" and "Thy faith hath made thee whole." Faith serves as a means to attach the outgoing soul fibres to other souls through whom strength and healing balm can be drawn from the central system or God, if you will. This insures health and is a success, as long as those superior soul relations are not broken by a relapse into former bad habits, in whch case, former ailments would also return and are, in all such cases the individual's own to suffer out. This is justice.

Evidence of Spiritual Unfoldment.

A Minister Rending Asunder the Shackles That Bound in a Church.

Spiritualism and Liberalism go hand in hand in disseminating truths that finally seek expression in the orthodox fold, and the result is a mental, moral and spiritual eruption that causes no end of excitement, and which ultimates finally in great good. Mr. Fisher is a magnificent specimen of manhood, bright in intellect, eloquent as a speaker, and well rounded out spiritually, and he will walk from that darkness of a heathen pulpit into the full light, joy and gladness of the freethought rostrum.

LIBERAL THOUGHT IS PREACHED AND PANDEMONIUM RULES—AN EMINENT MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL KNOCKED OUT BY THREATS WORSE THAN THAT OF THE PUGILISTS—"GOD IS NOT A SUPREME BEING IN SOME SHROUDED PARTS OF THE UNIVERSE, RULING EVERYTHING, WE MUST GET AWAY FROM THAT DOGMA—GOD IS A SPIRIT WITHOUT FORM OR PARTS, AND THEN THE PIOUS MEMBERS RAISED HELL, AS PRESENTED BY THE CLEVELAND LEADER.

A tempestuous pastorate, of less than five months, came to a dramatic end at the Franklin Avenue Congregational Church, yesterday morning, when Rev. J. Alford Fisher attempted to preach his farewell sermon.

Rev. Mr. Fisher, whose subject was "Liberty," had fairly entered upon his discourse and had repeated some of the utterances that had led the church deacons to request his resignation a few days ago, when Deacon Thomas Henderson arose and requested the pastor to cease talking. Previous to this, the words of Rev. Mr. Fisher had moved about half of the audience—his friends—to applaud him.

A Sensational Scene.

This precipitated the scene that followed. There was applause, mingled with hisses and cat-calls; part of the audience arose, some attempted to leave the church, others rushed forward to the pulpit. Members of the congregation became engaged in wrangles over the situation; some deplored it, others supported the minister; some shook his hand and gave words of encouragement, others denounced him.

Amid the confusion Rev. Mr. Fisher stood the victim of mingled emotions. He waved his hand and sought to restore order. At length he compelled quiet, and brought the service to a close, while many were still asking him to go on with his sermon.

Rev. Mr. Fisher is not orthodox. He does not claim to be. His defense is modernism. His congregation learned this several Sundays ago. At once he had opposition from the orthodox members of his church. They could not listen to a man who believed that God did not exist, in person and in fact, as a supreme being. One who did not believe in the Bible in toto and literally was not to be countenanced in the little brick church at the corner of Franklin and Waverly avenues. The members began to talk. The deacons shook their heads. At first there was an awakening, then meetings, then action. There was, however, a division of sentiment. The new preacher found friends and followers. The friends argued, then pleaded. Ill feeling sprang up. The opposition, being in the majority, finally took action. Rev. Dr. Fisher, who came among them last November, was asked to resign. The situation was laid before him. His resignation was tendered last week.

Liberty," His Topic.

As a farewell sermon the minister announced that on Sunday morning he would discuss "Liberty." The subject was strikingly significant. There was a good attendance at the morning service in consequence, about 300 persons being present.

There was a general feeling of suppressed anxiety and expectancy.

Rev. Mr. Fisher conducted the opening sermon as usual. The choir sang, the congregation repeated the Lord's prayer, the collection was taken, the Scripture lesson read, prayer offered, and the text announced. The text was Second Corinthians iii. 17—"Where the spirit of God is there is liberty." After the reading of the text there was a solo and the minister began his sermon. There was a rustle among the congregation. The people sat up straighter.

"Liberty" was the first word of the sermon by the pastor, "liberty—that beautiful child of the ages," Rev. Mr. Fisher continued. "It is the spirit of everything; it is the man. God is not a supreme being, in some shrouded parts of the universe, ruling everything. We must get away from the dogma. God is a spirit, without body, form or parts. We must worship him in the spirit and in truth. The child of the twentieth century has pictured God as some being in a remote part of the universe, thinking, ruling, watching.

"In the Christian world there is not liberty. If a man does not follow and conform to the shibboleth of the church, he is not recognized and is restrained, and enslaved. 'Man's inhumanity to man' has made countless thousands of slaves. We know what political liberty costs. Blood flowed as water in the civil war. He who binds the body in slavery is not to be compared to the man who shackles the mind and says you must think as he thinks, and say as he says. I would rather be the humblest peasant and live in squalor, but think for myself, than to be the highest potentate in the church and be a slave to its doctrines.

His Views on the Bible.

"Many of our orthodox friends swear by the Bible. They read it and believe it from cover to cover, every word, every punctuation. There was a religion long before the Bible was written. Christ never wrote a line nor a word of the Bible. He had nothing to do with it. Its adherents say you must believe every word in the book or you will be damned. As for myself, I would rather be damned.

At this point the suppressed feeling began to take form and there was no restraint. People fidgeted in their seats.

"What I want is liberty," the minister shouted. "You can talk about your LL. D.'s, etc., but what I like best is the plain m-a-n, man. I say to the church, 'Prove you have the truth before you compel me to utter your shibboleth.' I am sure I would be damned if I believed in some of the doctrines of Luther, Wesley, and Knox. The quicker some of the men that are now in the church get out of it the better it will be for the church."

At this there was applause by the friends of the preacher. As soon as the commotion had subsided William Faragher, the sexton of the church, accompanied by his wife and Mrs. Hall, who was sitting in a rear seat, arose. The women picked up their wraps and walked out of the church. The audience were disturbed and were looking back. There was a considerable movement and it looked as if others would walk out, but no more did. Mr. Faragher hesitated but a moment and walked to the front of the church. There he held a conversation with Deacon Henderson, in which he requested the deacon to make a protest in behalf of the members. This conversation directed attention to that portion of the church. The minister stopped in his sermon and, facing the two men, asked:

"Is there any trouble, gentlemen?"

Mr. Henderson arose to his feet.

"In behalf of the manly men and the decent women of this church," he began, "I want to protest against the sayings of this man."

Excitement Was Intense.

"Sit down, sit down!" shouted Deacon John McKay, from across the room.

"Sit down!" shouted a red-faced man.

"I will not," Mr. Henderson answered. "This man," pointing at Rev. Mr. Fisher, "came here as a lie and a fraud. He came upon his good looks." Poor fellow, I am sorry for him. He should be in an insane asylum. He was asked to leave this church because he is not a man. He has no mind; he is unkind and unbearable. He stands here and insults the men who built this little church."

"Sit down, sit down, keep still!" were the shouts hurled at Mr. Henderson. But he continued, and pointing his finger at the minister said: "You are a disgrace; a disgrace to the membership of this church."

"Now let us show liberty and a kind spirit," said the minister, speaking for the first time. Facing the congregation, with his arms folded and looking Mr. Henderson in the eye, he had heard the charges of the deacon.

"I believe that under the circumstances it would be wiser to here end this sermon, which appears to be so offensive to some. I take it there will be no services to-night."

"There will not," said Mr. Henderson.

"Brethren, I will not attempt to continue the sermon, but I would be glad to meet you all before I leave." The minister stopped.

"Go on, go on," came the appeal from various parts of the church.

"No, no; stop, stop!" shouted the opposition.

"Go on, go on!"

A part of the congregation arose. Some pressed forward, others walked toward the door, but they did not pass out. Members became involved in heated arguments. The situation was intense and feeling was high.

The Minister Speaks.

"Brethren," and the voice of the minister rang out above the tumult. "I want to meet you before you leave. I want to shake your hands and give you god-speed. I want to meet my friends. I wish they would come forward. Deacon Henderson said I am a lie and a fraud, and that I imposed myself upon this church. I want to say that I came here upon the recommendation of good men, and those recommendations were accepted and I was accepted. I was recommended by President Bradley, of Grinnell; President Northup, of the University of Minnesota; Rev. Dr. Cox, of Bethany Church, New York; by Rev. Dr. Creegan, head of the American Missionary Board; Rev. Dr. Peniman, of the Ravenswood Congregational church, Chicago; Rev. Dr. Morgan Wood is my friend. He recommended me, and there are scores of others."

"You are too far ahead of them; that's the trouble with you," shouted some one from the middle of the church.

"Morgan Wood is an advanced thinker and preacher," said another.

With this the disturbance came to an end, as did also the services. For several minutes Rev. Mr. Fisher remained at the pulpit shaking the hands of his friends, and receiving their congratulations and assurances of support. The opposition were at the rear of the church. Conversation and argument took the place of shouting and hissing. Ten minutes later the church was emptied and closed. Rev. Mr. Fisher went to his home. He pleaded with his friends to make little of the incident.

Rev. J. Alford Fisher was born and reared in Philadelphia, Pa., and comes from one of the old families of that city. He was taught the Heidelburg catechism in the old Reformed Church. When sixteen years of age he was forced, against his will, into the ministry. He attended the Pennsylvania State Normal School, and became a teacher. Later he attended Colgate University, at Hamilton, N. Y., and the Chicago University, of Chicago. Although he began preaching when sixteen years of age, his first charge was at Dwight, Ill., in 1888.

He immediately attracted attention, and went to Plymouth Church, of Omaha, Neb. In 1896 he succeeded Rev. Dr. Scudder in one of the prominent Brooklyn, N. Y., churches, where, with the exception of one year during the illness of his wife, he remained until he was given the Cleveland charge last November.

"I would not accept another pastorate," he said to a Leader reporter yesterday, "although I could not get one now, after this has occurred; but I do not want a pulpit. I shall now enter the lecture field.

"My household goods are partially packed, and we shall move to Oberlin at once. I will make that my home, and educate my children in Oberlin College."

Rev. Mr. Fisher has prepared four lectures. They are: "Looking for a Man," "Liars, Sweet and Bitter," "Power of a Smile or Laugh and the World Laughs With You," and "Tramps, Cranks, and Dudes." He will lecture under the management of the Ridpath Lecture Bureau, of Chicago.

SPIRITUALISM AND JOSEPH SMITH.

A Letter From the Editor-at-Large to the Kansas City Star.

Editor Kansas City Star:—I presume you will allow the other side to present its views on a question which deeply affects at least three millions of believers in the doctrines of Spiritualism.

Mr. Stead may be somewhat erratic, but his honesty and courage in attacking what he believes to be wrong, and defense of what he has come to take as truth cannot be questioned. His fearlessness has at times brought even imprisonment. Nor can the brilliancy of his thought or the prescience with which he has forecast the future be otherwise than given the high praise he merits. In a daring moment he investigated spiritual phenomena, and found that his hand was moved to write without his thought or control. It wrote messages purporting to come from "Julia," a spirit, who in this life had been dear to him. This spirit gave answers unknown to him, and told him of events he know nothing of. The article in the Star gives an explanation of this as follows:

"Had Mr. Setad been of a scientific turn of mind he would have known that the phenomenon he described was familiar to psychologists as 'automatic writing' and that his 'spirit' was superfluous. The explanation is merely that the subject is in a semi-hypnotic condition in which parts of the brain manifest an activity independent of the general consciousness. In some unexplained way the rebellious brain cells are able to conduct themselves fairly rationally and dig up all sorts of forgotten ideas and impressions. Mr. Stead had undoubtedly secured, years before, the information of which his hand availed itself in answering questions, but he had forgotten it."

This theory is another form of Dr. Hudson's "subconscious self," and Prof. Quackenbos' "transliminal" self. This theory is as yet only an hypothesis, a speculative guess. It is assumed to have been demonstrated, when there has not been an attempt at demonstration. It does not even meet the requirements of a "working hypothesis," for it fails to harmonize the facts which it attempts to unitize.

That there is an "unconscious self," beneath the everyday conscious, that is infinitely keener of memory, and understanding than the conscious mind, may serve as an explanation, but is against the decision of common sense. If it were true, the best self is for the most of the time dormant and useless, and it were better if this lower being were at the front. Mr. Stead is one of thousands who write in the same way. He is capable and his opinions on other matters are quoted far and wide, why is he incapable of arriving at a correct conclusion in his own case? He was not in a "semi-hypnotic condition," as this writer understands that state, but himself, perfectly conscious in all his senses.

Of course it is easy to explain phenomena by a combination of assumptions, as that tae "automatic writer," is a "semi-hypnotic," and writes only the ideas "undoubtedly secured years before," but that he has laid away such ideas is an unproven assertion, and until it is proven the theory is valueless, and it is a gross misrepresentation to say that it is "scientific."

The phenomenon called automatic writing, is not "familiar to psychologists." It was unknown until presented by Spiritualism, which gave it its name and forced it on the attention of the so-called psychologists. The investigation of these psychologists has been intensely partial and with the object to prove its non-spiritual origin by any means which gave the least prospect of success.

It must be acknowledged that thus far they cannot boast of having settled the question. If Mr. Stead were alone, we might conclude that he was mistaken. He is not alone. There are thousands of others, some of whom far exceed him in the messages written. For example, take Mrs. Underwood, author of a work standard among Spiritualists, "Automatic Writing." She is a highly cultured literary woman. Her husband an agnostic philosopher, lecturer and editor. She found by experiment she had this gift. She and her husband held seances, they two only being present. Her hand moved and wrote answers to questions on philosophic, religious and scientific subjects, most profound, gave messages from various spirits, in their characteristic style and exact handwriting, with dates, names, etc., which she could not have ever heard or in any way known. The book contains these answers, messages, and specimens of hand-writing, a close study of which must convince an impartial reader that their spiritual origin is the only tenable explanation.

As for the connection of automatic writing with Mormonism, it certainly has the merits of originality, and to those who have studied Spiritualism and made themselves acquainted with the life of Joseph Smith, it seems farfetched and unwarranted. The writer says:

"All of which is merely incidental to the modern explanation of the Book of Mormon. Briefly this is that Joseph Smith partially hypnotized himself by gazing into a crystal—which he called 'Urim and Thummin'—and that he dictated the book precisely as Mr. Stead wrote the answers to questions under the influence, as he supposed, of the spirit, 'Miss X.'"

Is there the least evidence that Smith ever used a "crystal" or was self-"hypnotized," or wrote "automatically?" There is none whatever. The most authentic statements have been made and substantiated as to his manner of writing.

According to the writer of the article under review, Smith was grossly illiterate and an epileptic, facts which as he admits, "have always made the explanation of the Book of Mormon rather difficult." But he adds: "Smith was epileptic and so easily liable to go into trances." And more, "the handwriting of some of the 'revelations' which he wrote himself suggests the characteristic type of the semi-hypnotized person."

Those who have investigated the trance state and epileptic, well know that the two are the antipodes of each other. Epilepsy is a strictly organic and functional ailment, and there is a total suspension of the intellectual processes, while the trance is one of intense activity. If Smith was an epileptic he could not have been in trance or even made approach to that state by self-hypnotism. I have been in intimate contact with the movement known as Modern Spiritualism almost from its advent. I have examined messages given automatically by a great number of persons, yet I have never recognized anything in these voluminous writings suggesting this "characteristic type of the semi-hypnotized person." What is it? It would be interesting to have a clear description. It would be an addition de novo to psychology. I have seen hundreds of these writings and compared them with the handwriting of the persons, from whom they professed to come as spirits, and in most instances, they were so alike as to be indistinguishable. Even to the spelling and use of capitals the similarity was preserved.

I have had many communications, articles for publication and volumes written by my own hand, which, whatever may have been the moving power, I am as certain, as of my existence, did not come from my sub-conscious self.

The claim of spiritual origin may be denied, but thus far it is the only explanation that explains.

PLEA FOR PURITY.

THE TRICKING ELEMENT IN OUR RANKS CONSIDERED.

One Way Pointed Out to Eradicate the Weeds That Have Taken Root in Our Cause.

James L. Dow, in No. 747 of The Progressive Thinker, brings to the front a very important subject in his article on fraudulent manifestations. His logic is excellent and the remedy which he offers would be very effective if applied. There is but one obstacle in the way, and that is that Spiritualists are a great deal like Christian Scientists—they will not apply the remedy.

There is no problem before Spiritualists at the present time more fraught with consequences than the elimination of fraud from our ranks. In fact, no religious organization of whatever name or nature has ever had a problem before it of such vital importance to its future welfare as the one we have now to consider.

When dealing with frauds it must be remembered that their most lucrative customers are those who are just beginning to investigate our phenomena, but who understand practically nothing of our philosophy. This makes it difficult to abolish dark circles by warning investigators not to patronize them, for, as a rule, they consider it all fraud when they begin to investigate, and later go to the opposite extreme and accept everything as genuine, or else retire disgusted.

If investigators would first study the philosophy of spirit-communion and then investigate as to its truth they would not hunger so much after the marvelous, and there would be far less chance for the frauds to wax fat.

But instead of this the ordinary investigator does not understand the first principles of mediumship. He wants astonishing phenomena, and he gets it—but not through spirit power. Spirit phenomena are far less sensational and far less certain than the imitation. THE INVESTIGATOR, WITH FEW EXCEPTIONS, NEVER SEES A SPIRITUALIST PAPER OR BOOK, AND—REGRETABLE FACT—SOME BECOME CONVINCED OF THE TRUTH OF THE PHENOMENA, BUT NEVER STUDY THE PHILOSOPHY, AND THESE ARE THE ONES WHO UPHOLD THE FRAUDS, and prevent the more philosophical Spiritualists from bringing to a succesful culmination their efforts to cleause our ranks of the derogatory fiends who, while they may occasionally make a gullible convert to our cause, yet drive away dozens for every one they bring.

The evils of fake mediumship have been made plain to every thinking mind, what we now need is concerted action and a systematic plan to drive once and forever these CRIMINALS from the path of earth's grandest religion.

Every medium, whether for physical or mental phases, should be obliged to undergo a strict examination by a committee of "fraud hunters" appointed by each state association, and approved by the N. S A. Let this committee be composed of Spiritualists of good standing, who have never posed as mediums for lucrative purposes, and who have by long investigation become well versed in the methods by which fraudulent manifestations are produced, and also in the conditions required for the production of genuine phenomena.

Then, let all true Spiritualists petition to the proper officials for the passage of laws to prevent any medium not endorsed by the N. S. A. from holding circles or meetings for the presentation of Spiritualistic phenomena, charging an admission fee therefor. Thus, and thus alone, can Spiritualism be made the perfect religion that it should be, for when the frauds can no longer charge for their work, they will soon cease to attach themselves to Spiritualism, while the genuine mediums will be far better paid for their work than is now the case.

Such an ordinance will also have a tendency to prevent undeveloped mediums from going before the public before they are amply qualified to give convincing manifestaitons, although they would be at liberty to give their services free and in that way grow proficient in the practice of their gifts. Thus the unsatisfactory mediums who obstruct rather than aid the advancement of the cause would be kept in their proper places instead of coming before the public before they are capable of giving convincing evidence. It would also prove to the world that Spiritualists are not upholding fraud, but that we are earnest in our desire to make Spiritualism an exemplary religion. But while Spiritualists endorse those who are afterward proven to be frauds, the skeptic cannot help but surmise that the remainder are also frauds.

Investigators, and old Spiritualists as well, will continue to patronize dark circles and materializing mediums of uncertain quality until we strike at the root of the evil and compel all mediums to be up to a certain standard before they make mediumship a business. Then Spiritualism will be what it should be—a respected, influential power in the realm of religion and morals, and science as well.

MATERIALIZATIONS.

David Haynes Gives His Experience as Follows with Helen V. Fairchild, Having First Carefully Examined all the Conditions and Finding No Loophole for Fraud.

At one of her seances, the medium standing at least eight feet from the cabinet, said:

"Mr. Wetherbee, your daughter is coming to see you," and immediately the curtains of the cabinet, that we had thoroughly examined a few minutes before, parted and a little girl, seemingly about eight years old, walked out in plain view of the circle, and it was light enough to read the common print of The Progressive Thinker. She walked to her aged father and mother and took a hand of each in her own, and talked with them of her home in earth life, which she had left forty years before, and told them of her brother who had gone to spirit life after she had. All she said to them was confirmed by Mr. Wetherbee to me after the circle.

The medium said to a man sitting at the right of me, "Senator Morrell, your daughters are here to see you." She led him to the center of the circle and the curtains parted and three young ladies walked out of the cabinet, and went up to their father, kissed him and he them, and the tears coursed down his cheeks as they talked of their once happy home on earth before consumption claimed them for its victims one after the other.

Mrs. Fairchild sat an empty chair in the midst of the circle and came to me and said: "Mr. Haynes (how did she know my name?), your little daughter is coming to you," and as I took the chair the curtains parted and the only little girl my wife and I ever had walked out in materialized form and came to me, putting her little hands in each of mine, and said, "Papa, I am very glad to come to you. This is different from anything we knew about when I went to spirit-life from Hartford by scarlet fever one Sunday morning when I was a little four-year-old girl. I am sorry for brother Charlie that he lost his health after he had worked his way through Yale College without any help, and had worked up to a good position as teacher in New York, and made many friends, and had a nice wife and little two-year-old girl, and life looked bright to him, and then to have the cough come on him and have to leave all his kind friends and give up his good position that he had worked so hard to gain, and have to take his wife and little girl and go 2,000 miles to Colorado Springs to save his life from consumption, and with little prospect of ever coming back in this life; it was hard for him; give my love to him when you write to him; tell him it will be all for the best. Give my love to Danie (the other brother that was a small boy and dangerously sick when she left mortal life, but had since she passed on grown to man's estate, and has been secretary in a bank here in Middletown for the last 20 years), and mamma," (Amanda, as she used to call her mother in her earth life.)

As I was clasping those little materialized hands in mine with all the love of a father for the only little daughter I ever had, she could hold the form no longer, and gradually settled down to the floor, dematerializing as she went, in plain sight of us all.

I would like to ask doubters of true materialization, who had a greater motive to learn if that was the truth, or all a fraud, than the father of that little girl, and do you think that being in my normal condition, and on the alert to detect any fraud that I would not have held on to those little hands had they been those of a confederate, and beside, how did that little form that stood before me, and whose counterpart had laid in its little grave over a hundred miles from Boston, where we then were for, 20 or more years, have those minute facts concerning that brother and what had transpired after I shook hands with him, as I then supposed, for the last time, in this life, a few days before I went from here to (Middletown) to Boston on business, and quite unexpectedly had that experience with the medium, Mrs. Fairchild, and when the little spirit form said, "Tell him it will be all for the best."

It is now susceptible of proof, as that young man, my son, has written me at least once a week from Colorado Springs for the past eighteen or twenty years, and I usually get his letters every Monday morning and write him every Sunday. This, longer than I intended narrative of facts, can be tested if desired, as his name is Charles W. Haines, and a foremost lawyer and a member of the Bar Association at Colorado Springs; office at rooms 64 and 65 Bank Block, and P. O. Box 46. I had several other very strong tests of the Truth that materialization is real in several of Mrs. Fairchild's circles, while in Boston years ago. She has been in New York, California and Australia, and her home is now in Denver, Col., and continues to demonstrate the truth to those really honest in seeking for it.

Thanking you for your efforts to spread the Truth and doing missionary work with The Progressive Thinkers as fast as I get time to read them, I remain ever,

Fraternally yours,

A Notable Defense

THE DARK SEANCE DEFENDED WITH CONSUMMATE SKILL.

Notable Examples Where Spirits Have Materialized, From Forty to Sixty Appearing in an Evening, and Writing Over Five Hundred Words in a Minute.

To the Editor:—An article appears in No. 747 of your enterprising and excellent paper, the purpose of which is to set forth the reason for the decline of spiritual organizations. The writer seems very anxious to see the cause of Spiritualism advancing, in which he has the sympathy of all Spiritualists.

He specifies four things necessary for its advance that must be maintained. The first is: "To teach and prove that mankind has an intelligent, conscious existence after the change called death." This being granted, the second is: "To teach and prove that those who have passed through that change can, and do communicate with those still in the flesh in an intelligent and reliable manner."

In regard to this he says: "They must satisfy the inquiring mind that they are honest." To whom "they" refers is not quite clear unless it be the mediums, as appears below, for he tells us:

"THERE ARE VERY FEW COMMUNITIES IN THIS COUNTRY THAT HAVE NOT BEEN VICTIMIZED BY FRAUDULENT AND UNPRINCIPLED MEDIUMS."

How fraud can injure truth, it is hard to conceive. It is said that hypocrisy is a compliment paid to truth; so fraud is a virtual confession of the genuine which it assimilates. He tells us that "Hundreds of fraudulent mediums all over the country have been exposed who were receiving the patronage and moral support of Spiritualists; and I am sorry to say that most of them have been exposed by outsiders." This is rather hard on the Spiritualists, that outsiders should have to come to the rescue and protect them from fraud.

It seems that the organized societies are perpetrating these frauds, or are particeps criminis in them; for he says: "A large number of mediums who are showing through the country under the auspices of the spiritual societies, at the different places where they hold their seances, are producing the phenomena by fraud."

If the phenomena can be produced by fraud, how can we tell the difference?

Again, the writer says:

"There is no sense or excuse for Spiritualists upholding and supporting fraudulent mediums, and thereby bringing disgrace upon the whole cause."

If there is no sense in it, and it is carried on to such an extent, then there is no sense in Spiritualists. There is no doubt of the honesty and sincerity of the writer; but it seems that his feelings are so wrought up to a pitch of indignation in his zeal for the cause, that his imagination has been called to his aid.

But his greatest grievance is: "These fraudulent mediums have so disgraced the cause that at the present day Spiritualists have no social standing among the better classes."

That is to say, because some persons claiming to be mediums have been proved to be frauds, "thousands who believe in the fundamental principles of Spiritualism are found connected with the various churches throughout the country, for the reason that they do not want to be socially ostracised by the better classes of the community."

Our friend wants the Spiritualists to have a better standing, and he thinks that concealing the truth for the sake of popularity is nothing wrong.

If Spiritualism were as popular as the churches the people would tumble over one another to get into its ranks; but this throng would be for popularity, and not for the sake of truth which is not to be served, nor is the cause advanced by popularity.

But it is the dark seance that fills the writer with indignation. In his opinion it is the bane of the spiritual cause. It is an old and accepted saying that "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil," and this sentiment is associated with all things done in darkness. He who objects to the dark seance must be able to tell all about light; as darkness being the absence of light, light must be necessary to the production of all spiritual phenomena.

Light is both a mechanical and a chemical force, and always acts on some form of matter. The photographer goes into a dark room to develop his plates, but that does not prove that photography is a fraud. Spiritual phenomena have their rise in the action of spiritual forces whose vibrations are infinitely more rapid than are those of light—too rapid for physical sight, and wherever light is, its vibrations being material, overcome the spiritual vibrations when coming in contact with them. At all events, except in rare cases, conditions made on the material side of life have not been sufficiently favorable nor strong enough to overcome the grosser material force of light. Because of the lack of knowledge on this subject, many false conceptions are entertained. He asks: "What has been the cause of Spiritualism getting this undesirable reputation?" He attributes it to dark seances.

He now asks: "Has not a large majority of cases where an attempt has been made to see whether the phenomena produced in the darkness were fraudulent or genuine, proven to be fraudulent? Has there been any, or many, of these cases proven genuine?

The answer is that all I have attended, which have been many, except one so-called materializing seance, and that was easily detected, were genuine manifestations, and so far as I know this is the experience of many Spiritualists with whom I have conversed on the subject. He says that:

"It is the next thing to impossible to get strictly test conditions in a dark seance."

On the contrary, it is the easiest thing in the world to get test conditions especially in materializations.

IF THE MEDIUM REFUSES ANY REASONABLE TEST YOU MAY BE SURE THERE IS TRICKERY ABOUT IT; AND NO HONEST INVESTIGATOR WILL GO ANY FARTHER WITH HIM; but if he willingly and cheerfully submits to any reasonable test, there is ample opportunity to put the matter beyond any possibility of fraud. The cabinet is open for free inspection; there is no place for concealment of masks or drapery; the medium is willing to be disrobed; there is no possible chance to get into or out of the cabinet without detection, and no possible entrance by anyone into the seance room without being noticed, and the room outside of the cabinet is light enough to plainly distinguish faces and forms in every part of it. The medium is sewed to the carpet, and to the curtain in the back part of the cabinet; his coat sleeves sewed to the knees of his pantaloons and his hands filled with soot, making it impossible for him to get out of the cabinet without breaking loose from his bonds which always remain unchanged. Other tests equally crucial may be applied.

And now come from the cabinet in rapid succession all the way from forty to seventy-five spirit forms, male and female; the latter arrayed in dazzling white, giving names, and are recognized by those to whom they come, and conversing with them; some write with a degree of rapidity of FIVE HUNDRED WORDS IN A MINUTE; write long messages on a typewriter, and do many other things equally marvelous. Portraits are painted in oil on canvas, with the most exquisite skill in from five to seven minutes, without brush or pencil, besides many in crayon recognized by the visitors.

In this brief review, it is not possible to note all the objections the writer sets forth. He leaves the impression that Spiritualism is liable to be swamped, or at least degraded below respectability by "being flooded with fraudulent mediums who are supported by Spiritualists." Much of the fraud has its rise on the spirit side of life. The only criterion one has is his reason; but we know so little about conditions for truthful communications, that we are often misled, which a better knowledge would correct. This cry of fraud leaves the impression that it is a very dangerous thing, and that Spiritualism is tainted with it; and therefore it can not be respectable.

AN EXPLANATION.

It Relates to the Members of the Fox Family.

To the Editor:—I will endeavor to explain the discrepancy between my statement in your issue of Jan. 9, and page 30, in the Missing Link, that our friend, Chas. S. Lamb, of Michigan, refers to in your issue of March 26. Mr. E. E. Lewis, an educated gentleman residing in Canandaigua, N. Y., heard of the phenomena occurring at Hydesville, he was impressed that it was a matter of sufficient importance to investigate, and accordingly went to Hydesville, reached there April 11, interviewed the mother, the father, the son and brother and many of the neighbors, had it signed by them, and early in May, 1848, Mrs. Ann Leah Fish visited Mrs. Little, his neighbor in Rochester, was surprised when Mr. Little brought in his house a proof sheet of the pamphlet of said statements, it being the first Mrs. Fish had heard of what was occurring at her parents' at Hydesville. This pamphlet was considered so correct, that it was copied in the Missing Link, except the paragraph which gave a positive clew to the ages of Margaret and Cathie, which we found Mr. Lamb admits is, or may be correct. Mrs. Underhill, like many fine ladies, tried very hard to conceal her age, and it is not likely she would give it more than it really was, and at one interview, without my asking, stated that she was 20 years older than Margaret, and then went on to explain why, that her father, was angry at her mother, for asserting her rights in family matters, and went away for about twenty years, sent money home by mail or messenger to support the family, and during this absence he became addicted to the excessive use of liquors; not a prostrate drunkard, but kept his system saturated with it. After being away some 19 or 20 years there was a reunion, and Margaret and Cathie were born after the reunion. The plate on Mrs. U.'s coffin did not give her age. The monument in Greenwood Cemetery, Lot No. 13,594, Sec. 172, Lawn Path, does not give any clew. The burial certificate says 72. Some months after her statement as regards age, talking with Margaret, without my saying what Leah had said, also stated there was about 20 years difference between herself Leah. It is not at all likely if Leah was only 10 or 16 years older, she would have said she was 20 years older. I remember her saying at this interview, "Neither my husband nor adopted daughter, Lillie, know exactly my age. I only give it to you approximately. The main object of this interview is to show how my sisters came by their intemperate habits." She thus said, "My impressions are that I shall depart for spirit realms long before you, and then you can publish what I give you, if you choose."

The exact age of Mrs. Underhill is of little importance, the valuable lesson given humanity by Dr. Franklin and Dr. Fay, and kindred spirits, though their instrumentality is of great importance, and millions so regard it. In the near future I will explain how I was chosen to hear the minute history of this family,

Yours fraternally,
TITUS MERRITT.

DISCONTENT.

A man in his carriage was riding along,
A gayly-dressed wife by his side;
In satins and laces she looked like a queen,
And he like a king in his pride.

A wood-sawyer stood on the street as they passed,
The carriage and couple he eyed,
And said, as he worked with his saw on a log,
"I wish I was rich and could ride."

The man in the carriage remarked to his wife,
"One thing I would give if I could—
I'd give my wealth for the strength and health
Of the man who is sawing the wood."

A pretty young maid, with a bundle of work,
Whose face as the morning was fair,
Went tripping along with a smile of delight,
While humming a love-breathing air.

She looked on the carriage, the lady she saw,
Arrayed in apparel so fine,
And said in a whisper, "I wish from my heart
Those satins and laces were mine."

The lady looked out on the maid with her work,
So fair in her calico dress,
And said, "I'd relinquish position and wealth
Her beauty and youth to possess."

Thus it is in the world, whatever our lot,
Our minds and our time we employ
In longing and sighing for what we have not,
Ungrateful for what we enjoy.

THE REVIVAL OF LEARNING

Did it Begin in Italy After the Fourteenth Century, and in England About the Year 1500.

"The Rise of English Culture," by the late Professor Edwin Johnson, M. A., a book of 637 pages, is now published by Williams and Norgate, London, and by Putnam's Sons, New York. The principal previous works of the author are "Antiqua Mater," 1887, "The Rise of Christendom," 1890, and "The Pauline Epistles," 1893.

"All the mass of references have been verified by a competent librarian," says the widow of Prof. Johnson in a letter to me, and she adds: "Whoever may differ from the conclusions cannot be other than astonished at the enormous amount of reading gone through by the author."

The scholarship and competency of the author cannot be questioned. He was the son of a Congregational clergyman. Being a studious and thoughtful boy and under influences of a Puritanical cast, he drifted, scarcely knowing how or why, toward the pulpit. One of his tutors in training him for the ministry was Dr. William Smith, Johnson won three scholarships and took his M. A. degree in classics at the London University. Years afterward the aged Dr. Smith wrote of him as one of the most distinguished pupils he ever had. One of his college friends writes: "Few men were so deeply loved and respected at college as Edwin Johnson; for while he was always an original and daring thinker, he never willingly wounded the susceptibilities of those who differed from him.

He became a pastor at Forest Hill, near London, in 1865, and later at Boston, Lincolnshire, in 1870, where he preached for nine years. In 1879 he was appointed Professor of Classical Literature by the council of his college in London. Henceforward he became a constant worker in the British Museum and other libraries. After eight years he was left free to devote his whole attention to literary pursuits. He then began his great work of research into the origin of Christianity. The first result of his inquiries appeared in his "Antiqua Mater," published anonymously. A copy of the book was sent to me by J. M. Wheeler, of the "Freethinker," who requested my judgment upon it. I answered, "Good as far as it goes." The unknown author was not yet "out of the woods." He soon became convinced that the actual writers of Church and Gospel histories were not ancient.

Canon Westcott had remarked of St. Jerome that he seemed to write in a sixteenth century" manner. Professor Johnson became convinced that nearly all of the writers belonged to that period.

"The Rise of Christendom" was treated by few with the consideration it deserved. The historian, Froude, read it with the closest interest, and asked the author to call upon him, which he did, and a correspondence between them followed. A few in America appreciated the work, and regarded it as one of the century.

"The Pauline Epistles," a later book, of 152 pages, has had a fair circulation. I have read it seventeen times, and "The Rise of Christendom," 510 pages, thirteen times.

And now I proceed to state some of the author's startling affirmations, Many of them have appeared in his prior publications. I give them as far as practicable in the exact language of the writer:

At what epoch was the chronological scale, Anno Domini, laid down? I point to the Era of Publication, about 1480 to 1520; it was not known to general scholars about 300 years ago.

I have not been able to ascertain when the important abbreviation A. D., or A. C., came into use, but it was hardly before the sixteenth century.

I fail to trace the principle of Justification by Faith beyond Luther; it is in fact the innovation of his time.

There was no talk of John Whitecliff and his connection with Bohemia until the eve of the great Schism, and no talk of either of the "Wiclifs" until the reign of Henry VIII. (1509-1547). The name allegorical and ideal, significant of a strong body of reformers in certain colleges and religious houses.

Hallam (177-1859) finds that in Italy the ignorance was very great in the middle of the fourteenth century, so that "a man, supposed to be learned, took Pluto and Cicero for poets."

Petrarch (alleged to be of the fourteenth century) was "the first real restorer of polite letters," the aspirant after pure Latin.

Hallam ought to have seen how slight were the grounds for crediting the existence of the writings of Petrarch long before Erasmus. Not a book from the library which Petrarch is said to have collected and to have left behind him, has come down to us.

The belief that classical learning revived in Italy toward the end of the fourteenth century is vague guesswork eked out by invention.

The Latin Bible texts show a gradual improvement in the acquisition of that language, and the best "historic compositions" of the monks all date from the late fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries.

Among the incredibilities copied by Hallam is the story of Italian universities founded in the fourteenth century and immediately dying out; of decrees for the establishment of professorships of Greek and Oriental tongues, which "remained a dead letter;" and the existence of some ten persons in Italy who could read Homer in the time of Petrarch.

There was no Greek in Western Europe during the Middle Ages. Our chief authority, L. Arctino, says, in an oft-quoted sentence, that Greek had been lost in Italy for 700 years; in other words, 700 to 1400.

The monks, according to the testimony of their own writers, were profoundly ignorant and indisposed to learning at the end of the fifteenth century.

That a solitary monk here and there took it into his head to write history, when there was no class of readers or listeners to appreciate it, is one of those absurdities which, well considered, leads to the detection of the whole system of fiction.

It is probable that the mass of Rabbinical writing which was brought to the Italian printing presses during the Revival of letters had been mainly the work of the preceding hundred years. The Rabbins had considerable knowledge of Latin and Greek.

The Rise of the Synagogue in Southern Europe preceded the Rise of Christianity. But the Jewish chronologers had no means of knowing the exact antiquities.

No Benedictine monastery ever possessed "thirteenth-century" monuments. That of Westminster, like all the rest, derives its sanctity from the belief that it is the sepulchre of saints and princes. Yet its Burial Register begins in 1606, and not until late in the fifteenth century did its Prior begin to trace its history from the foundation to the year 1380—a chronicle, not only most meagre, but fabulous from first to last, and filled with trifles that are of no service to the modern inquirer.

It is impossible to discern the state of the buildings at the accession of Henry VIII., 1509. Dean Stanley has to confess with a sigh that its inmates as tradition has invited us to believe.

gence of Christendom.

There was a time when the sole intellectual occupation of the monks appears to have consisted in the "Perennial Praise," or chanting the Psalter, and in the "Prayer without ceasing." To the end of the fifteenth century the Bible was known only in the form of short lessons, or detached books.

It is difficult to conceive how the Benedictine architecture could have come into being at anything like the early epoch commonly supposed. There are experts in architecture who are persuaded that we have nothing so enormously old in England or the West a stradition has invited us to believe.

Assuming, then, that the Order of St. Benedict could not have been founded before some time in the thirteenth century, we may also assume that the following age saw the beginning of the great missionary enterprise in Sicily, France, Spain, England and Germany. They acquired land, they built monasteries, and they helped to set up the Papal monarchy. The Pope was the grand Caliph of the Nazareans.

WM. HENRY BURR.

Henry B. Lord—One Man's Influence.

In answer to a phone call and a telegram, I left home Monday, March 21, to meet the friends of Henry B. Lord, of Genesee, N. Y., and celebrate his emancipation from the bondage of mortality. Mr. Lord will be 84 years old April 30, proximo. He has been almost alone in the free advocacy of Spiritualism in that thriving town of two to three thousand souls, where costly churches abound, and superstition reigns. A State Normal School gives to the village a special imporatance; but such schools are almost wholly dominated by the dogmas of theology, and the influence of creeds and their orthodox expounders. They are not, ostensibly, sectarian schools, but the ruling spirit nourishes and supports the ideals and authority that make for intolerance and proscription. One of the strongest factors in controlling and suppressing free thought and free speech, is the love of popularity, and cowardly cringing before the autocracy of deceased public opinion. There are, in all probability, hundreds of thousands of believers in the central truths of Spiritualism, who never mention it, lest they should evoke a frown or sneer from the vain pretenders and unreasoning devotees of the popular faith. But the influence of ONE MAN, whose life presents a noble example, and commands respect and confidence, makes a deep and permanent impression on the whole community.

Such a man was Henry B. Lord, of Genesee, N. Y. He was modest, earnest, kind, and sincere, and all who knew him honored his free, frank advocacy of Spiritualism, while most of them held aloof and doubted. Some time ago he read of a medium for slate-writing. He invited some critics, and stubborn skeptics, to test the medium. If they discovered any trick, or received no writing, or got unsatisfactory results, he would pay the bills. Accordingly a committee prepared two slates, marked and sealed them, putting on private stamps in such ways as made it impossible that the slates could be opened without disturbing the seals.

They were sent to the medium, and when they came back, Mr. Lord called together the committee, who examined them carefully and decided that they had not been opened. They opened them and found their questions answered, and messages and names written that had not been thought of or hinted at in any of their questions, and all were correct. It was Mr. Lord's time now. But he accepted it all without display, and skeptics ceased to ridicule, confessing it a mystery beyond their depth. This leaven is working quietly.

There was a large attendance at the funeral, and manifest a reverend sorrow that this good man was no more to share in the affairs of this outer life. His wise counsels and generous sympathy, and kindly nature, have passed behind the veil, but their impress lives in memory and will bless the community for many years. He leaves one daughter—Mrs. Coverdale—and one sister, who, though a good Baptist, draws comfort from her brother's faith.

While in Genesee, I was royally entertained at the attractive home of J. A. Newton, a prominent merchant, and the air of intelligent refinement was a charm that lingers in my consciousness like a morning dream in heaven. Two sons, and a daughter, at home, and one son and two daughters in New York and Yonkers, all engaged in professional studies or pursuits, while those at home are honoring the State School, and rapidly rising to make their mark upon the world. The day was lovely. The balmy breath of Spring sweetness, the landscape with prophecies of bloom and love; and the grave where we left the sacred dust, seemed like a hallowed shrine in a Garden of Paradise. Tenderly, tearfully, we turned away, knowing that the noble man whom we sought to honor was not reposing in that narrow bed, but buoyant and happy and radiant with love and rejoicing.

The Cause in Beaumont, Tex.

Various attempts to organize Spiritual societies here have resulted in failure in years gone by, but as a result of Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner's efficient work (Texas State Missionary), a society was formed and charter applied for, with about thirty members. Mrs. Kayner's work has been good. She held four meetings in the U. O. W. hall, and accomplished more with the people for Spiritualism than has ever been done in the city of Beaumont. Her lectures have drawn out many skeptics. It is now realized by all that Spiritualism is on a solid foundation in the Oil City.

John W. Ring, president of Texas State Association, was present and helped the organization on the 23d of February, at the palatial home of the true Spiritualist, Mrs. W. S. Akin, Lebrty avenue. Many friends gathered together and what is now known as the First Spiritualist Church of Beaumont was organized, followed by a social, and Mrs. L. S. Gardner, one of the oldest mediums in Texas, gave one of her materializing meetings, which proved pleasing to all. On the eve of Mrs. Kayner's work here, she received the charter and presented it to the society, and at the same time she introduced Dr. J. M. Temple, who followed Mrs. Kayner, as she had to go to some other place. All were loath to see Mrs. Kayner leave. She carried with her the best wishes and hopes of a speedy return.

LAKE HELEN, FLA.

Notes From Southern Cassadaga Camp.

The regular session of the Southern Cassadaga Camp closed on Sunday, March 20, and the last week now seems like a hurried dream. The last as well as the first Wednesday afternoon seance was tendered the Ladies' Auxiliary by Mrs. Minnie Brown, of Philadelphia, and although many had gone away, the attendance was much larger than at the beginning of the meeting, and all appreciated the kind services of our sister.

Mr. Colville's morning classes, as did all his work, continued in interest, and his generosity was unparalleled, for not only did he donate the funds received from his classes for the benefit of the association, but he also gave a percentage to them from every book sold, which was no small number.

Mrs. Coffman's work was on different lines, but she gave out good thoughts in her lectures and interested many in her mediumship.

The last Sunday was a red letter day and Mr. Colville's guides touched the high water mark of spiritual truth, and interested both old and young.

The afternoon service consisted of a symposium of the different speakers and the president and vice-president of the association. President Bond introduced former Vice-president Hilligoss, as president of the Southern Cassadaga Association.

One of the surprises of the afternoon was a great surprise to the writer, for Vice-president Bond, in the name of the management, presented her with a liberal sum of money, for services rendered, and she in turn handed half of it to President Hilligoss as an aid in the building of the new amusement pavilion soon to be erected.

The evening was devoted to the usual love feast in which many took part.

Friday afternoon the annual election of the Ladies Auxiliary occurred, which resulted in the election of Carrie E. S. Twing as president; Mrs. Eva Carrigue, of Pawtucket, R. I., and Mrs. M. E. Clark, of Elmira, N. Y., as vice-presidents; Mrs. Eliza Philbrook, of Lake Helen, secretary, and Mrs. Mary Mac Garvey, of Hamilton, Canada, as treasurer.

The Ladies' Auxiliary, with the earnest help of their brothers, have placed in the treasury of the main association the sum of five hundred dollars, and have on hand in property consisting of two sewing machines, tables and furnishings for bazaar over ninety dollars, and in money thirty-eight dollars.

We are thus explicit because a great many of your readers have more or less interest in the result of our work, as those who have given 10 cents, a collar, a doylie, or any kind of a gift, have helped to accumulate this fund. There has been but one evening when funds were solicited, but many of the campers have helped to earn it in the seance, the entertainment, or the social dance, and in drinking good lemonade at 5 cents a glass. Again we thank you all.

At the close of the election of officers the president voiced the suggestion of Mrs. H. S. Kellogg that the ladies have a rose garden that they might beautify the platform, and add to the beauty of the camp. Before the session closed over twelve dollars were contributed for rose bushes, and also the promise of all the fertilizer necessary for their rapid growth.

Saturday morning was the election of officers for the association, which resulted in the re-election of the old board. As it stands now Dr. Hilligoss, of Cincinnati, Ohio is president in place of Mr. Bond; E. W. Bond, of Willoughby, Ohio, vice-president; H. S. Twing, of Westfield, N. Y., secretary and treasurer; Mrs. J. D. Palmer, corresponding secretary; F. E. Bond, of DeLand, Fla., A. A. Butler, Bucksville, Ohio, H. M. Clark, East Jaffry, N. H., trustees.

The president's report showed that the present season had been the most successful of any in the history of the camp, for after paying off an old indebtedness of nearly five hundred dollars, and all the expenses of the season, there remains in the treasury a larger sum than ever before.

A very large amusement pavilion is contemplated, and an amount almost sufficient for its completion is subscribed, and plans are being drawn by a contractor, so we hope by the next camp season there will be plenty of room for suppers, dances, etc., and good rooms for the Ladies' Auxiliary to do their work in.

Hotel Webster (near the camp) reports the largest patronage of any season, and upon the grounds there has been at times all that could be cared for as the enlarged dining-room has been overflowing upon Sundays, and had a fine patronage during the week.

Mrs. Fisher the proprietress of the dining-room, gave a reception to over a hundred people on Monday evening. The guests spent the evening in the dance hall and partook of refreshments in the dining-room which were very nice. Mrs. Fisher is deservedly popular here.

A contractor told the writer this morning of six new cottages already proposed for occupancy next season.

The business prospects of Lake Helen bid fair to make us a great center of industry. The Bond Lumber Company, of which Vice-president Bond is a member, has completed a deal of the purchase of fine pine timber land to provide for the use of the great crate and box factory erected last year. This will necessitate the opening of branch railways to this center. The first one assured is to Lake Ashby, a beautiful sheet of water about 8 miles from the camp. It is a fine place for fishing and will awaken new interest in the lovers of that sport.

There is also a certainty of a plant for the manufacture of brick from Florida sand and lime being established here or in the near vicinity, with Frank E. Bond as president, and Robert Bond as secretary and treasurer. This brick is made by a German process, and has been thoroughly tested. It will make this the centre of three large industries—the starch factory, the crate and box factory, and the initial plant of the Sand Lime Brick Co., of which five plants are contemplated in the state by the same company.

We were all saddened by the passing out of Mrs. Fannie Root, on Wednesday last, and yet we ought not to have been for she longed for release. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. Her friends all desired to pay tribute to her as friend and sister. She had lived six winters in Florida and had lived in a most beautiful place among the roses. They were around her in life and in death also, for Dr. O. B. Webster and his wife with some help, made her grave a resting-place of beauty. No trace of earth showed, and we left the body where the mocking-birds were singing, knowing her spirit was free. On the evening of the 27th, by inviting twenty-two people, the same number she would have had in her family if at home, most beautiful flowers were given her in profusion and other gifts fitting the occasion. She has many friends here. There were speeches and delicious refreshments.

And now, dear readers, this is the last for this season from the Southern Cassadaga from this scribe.

THE ASTRO RELIGION.

As Elucidated by J. C. F. Grumbine.

A religion of the stars or a religion which has its foundation, symbolism and kabal in astrology is by no means a modern discovery or revelation. Modern science has done a good deal in confusing and mystifying the average intelligence by its technique, terminology and speculations, in short by its advocacy of the gospel of agnosticism and misunderstanding. True it has given us the university in place of the oracle at Delphos, high-sounding words and phraseology for the simple intuition of truth, physics for metaphysics, a learned atheism or hollow materialism for a revealed religion, astronomy for astrology and chemistry for alchemy. It has given us seventy-five known (?) elements for one unknown (?) element—spirit. It has given us evolution for understanding, progress for happiness, experience for wisdom and sensation of an infinite variety for peace. What a wonderful achievement, what a colossal pyramid of egotism, and all in the name of science!

Now comes Professor Graetz, of Germany, in an article on the Manchener Neuste Nachrichten, with a formidable array of facts to refute the atomic theory. He shows that the phenomena of radio active bodies and their emanations disprove the very existence of the molecule upon which the whole inductive structure of modern science from premise to conclusion has been built. The atom, therefore, becomes a fable. This is indeed amusing, if not pathetic to one who has neither been swept off of his feet by the dazzling claims of modern science or made dizzy or silly by the merry-go-round of an eat, drink and be merry life, which science ordained and created with its own sanction as the end of existence. It is tragical to one who recalls how many generations have been falsely educated to worship only at the altar of this obliging God! It is all too bad when you think of the millions of dollars wasted upon the youth who if living or dead must now unlearn what they learned at Oxford, Heidelberg and Harvard! Too bad—yes, wicked—when you think that our boasted Protestantism began the infidel, agnostic, atheistic revolt during the middle ages, when the three or four great universities at Prague, Genoa, Wittenberg, held the candle of illumination under a bushel to cherish a will-o'-the-wisp of human opinion, when Rosicrucianism, occultism, and mysticism were ridiculed very nearly out of existence, and when the so-called established religion came in vogue.

Well—the race of life is not to the fleet of foot, nor the clever of brain, nor the cunning of heart, but to the one who divines or understands. One should perhaps weep crocodile tears at the foolishness, egotism and brazen effrontery of church and state, and still cringe in pagan servitude before the august authority of the wiseacre universities that peddle the latest scientific novelties and discoveries just fresh from the laboratory, before a gaping crowd of callous youth, and who in all truth cannot be blamed for not knowing the truth when mankind would rather be scientific or subtle than wise.

Briefly the astro religion cannot be held responsible for human ignorance and perfidy. That the Chaldean, Babylonian and Egyptian hierarchies should know as much of the universe as the school of cardinals or the archbishop of Westminster or even Oxford or Harvard is hard for the modern antiquarians or archeologist to admit, but it is an unvarnished fact. That Ptolemy should have known all that Galileo, Copernicus and Newton discovered, and whose system (geocentric so-called) should have been superseded by the heliocentric, is but a trick of language, a play upon the words astrology and astronomy. That the ancients over two thousand years before Christ, knew the number, orbits and area of the planets, their distance from each other and from the earth, their diameter and radius is a fact which I can prove to any student of science open to conviction, a knowledge which they concealed in a kabala and symbology which the modern world has pooh-poohed.

The astro religion which was phallic only in a transitional stage, just as any conception of a god becomes human for the same reason, was symbological and allegorical. Its triune division was the natural sequence of the one spirit or life dualized for expression and manifestation as is shown in the relation of the sphere to its diameters, the soul to its male and female embodiments, the universe to its magnetic and electrical polarity, unity to division as is further illustrated by I equals ½ plus ½ first power, or I plus 1 plus 1 equals 3, or ½ equals 1 plus 2 equals 3. This problem is the problem which is qualitative rather than quantitative and lies at the core of a mystical interpretation of mathematics and of that branch of it called numbers. Of course superficially and actually one (1) is never greater than its parts, but is equal to them, yet if the odd and the even parts of anything compose the thing, the distinction being only a phenomenon of form by polarity but not a difference in essence, then duality plus oneness affords the mystic key to the meaning of those arithmetic processes such as addition, subtraction and multiplication which express but never increase or decrease the original integer, God—the one, indivisible, unchanging, eternal spirit.

The trinity therefore is an intuition of the law and nature of the one, both in esse and posse—in essence and form.

The Ancients perceived this and so applying the canon divided the universe into the empyreum, the ether, and the sublunary world or God, the universe and man. The upper triad or three steps corresponded to the lower triad as symbolized by the sun, the moon and the earth, or father, mother and son or daughter. The perfect number ten (10 the diameter of a sphere placed on the left side of the sphere, mark the steps of the Jewish Sephiroth as immortalized in the cabala, the 3 times 3 plus 1 equals 10, or the 3 plus 7 equals 10, or (1 plus 2) plus (3 plus 4) equals 10, the latter being the number of the trinity plus the seven planets, or the sublunary world (in the light or shadow of the empyreum) plus the ether as symbolizing the seven planets, according to the Egyptian system, viz., Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, the Sun, Venus, Mercury and the Moon. This cosmological scheme became the basis of the Jewish Thora or Law, and christology. Upon it all religions were woven as upon a loom and by it the inner world of reality or spirit, God, if you choose, was, is, and ever will be prefigured, multum in parvo. The holy oblation is a cosmic allegory, astrologically understood, of the body of God as spread out in space and the man exoterically and the soul esoterically are the measure of the universe, the body of God. This body, the universe, is the temple of the soul, the spirit of the living God. The basis therefore of all knowledge and understanding of science and religion is wisdom, implanted in the soul of man where God is. It is not in numbers or letters, in forms or symbols, save as they conceal the cabals of divine mysteries which can only be read by one who has the key. God giveth the key to the one who has gained the victory over the dweller on the threshhold.

IOWA NEWS.

Vivid Object Lesson at Council Bluffs.

In writing to The Progressive Thinker concerning the status of the New Philosophy here, in this growing city of 30,000 or more people, I will say, in the first place, that the First Spiritualist Society holds a regular Sunday afternoon meting in Justice Ouren's office, under the presidency of John Hammer. The gatherings are rather well attended. C. O. Kempster, the learned Englishman, has general charge of the exercises, and is assisted from time to time by various mediums and lecturers. A Thursday evening meeting is held weekly at Mrs. Martha Rudd's, on North 20th street, where we will observe the anniversary also, according to our custom including a supper spread.

It will be edifying to Spiritualists if I make a brief reference to a startling event that transpired lately, partly within the pale of our little organization. Henry W. Abbott, of Oakland, California lectured and gave delineations in Omaha and Council Bluffs recently. He finally wound up here, and became dangerously ill. His lectures here drew increased audiences, and a larger hall was thought of. Mr. Abbott was well attired, and apparently in good health and doing a satisfactory business. He clung rather closely to the scientific side of things, and claimed to have obtained more than one patent on chemical and mechanical devices. His remarks on the development and effects of color and light in different human temperaments, in connection with form, and his personal readings of individuals in his audiences were vivid and new. His research in nature coincided with Spiritualism and Theosophy. Some of his scientific demonstrations included the use of a vacuum cup and apparatus for condensing the sun's rays and showing their effects. He left these, as I am told, with Dr. A. O. Mudge, in this city. Mr. Kilmer, also of Council Bluffs, says they are worth $100,000.

Prof. Abbott was a fearless thinker, and loved nature as thoroughly as did Francis Bacon, who declared that each of her cracks and crannies is crammed with secrets. While he swung clear of old theology, and "gazed far back into the awful depths of eternity," and saw the unknown beyond the known; while he delighted his audiences, and carried them into realms of far mystic experience; still he may not have weighed the sayings of Socrates, that human beings care not for philosophy." Yet, Mr. Abbott continued to draw crowds here, while a few individuals clung closely to his side, and he seemed at times to be an avatar as well as later pathfinder. No other speaker was thought of when he was present, as I have also heard said of a once distinguished American.

But, alas! the picture changes. The Master of Ceremonies shifts the curtain, and we are all taught again that we live in a world of tragedy. The professor fell sick, and found a congenial resting place at Dr. Mudge's house, where he experienced the great change called death; on the 12th of March, after ten days' of illness, his malady being tuberculosis, his age 54.

Abbott's funeral occurred here on March 17th, from Lunkley's chapel; interment being in Walnut Hill Cemetery. The Spiritualists conducted the services, Mr. Kempster making an address and Mrs. Belle Hicks performing on the piano. Wilson Duncan, by request, sang, "Some Sweet Day, By and By." No relatives of the professor could be found by telegraph, and as he had no visible money at the time of his going, the funeral was at the expense of the public, in the main. The Lunkley undertaking establishment was unusually courteous. Only some incidental expenses in connection with the funeral was borne by the Spiritualist society here. This object lesson can not fail to teach its lesson to traveling speakers and scientific wanderers. He who teaches, said Epictetus, has no home, and only the sky for his roof. Years ago a Spiritualist lecturer declared in my hearing, as a result of his efforts on the road, that he could not further afford to lecture for an average remuneration of 40 cents a night. So closes this object lesson, which is generously held up by the writer hereof before the gaze of lecturers. Yet, Mr. Abbott lived as long as the eminent Margaret Sullivan, of Chicago, or Shakespeare, of England. Let us think of the good he did, and forget what other may have been his experience.

Prof. Abbott stated that his wife and only child were not living. His reported possessions on the Pacific coast are conjectural. The Spiritualist societies here are composed entirely of poor but industrious persons—a class that is free of commercialism and its strange infirmities. The truth still remains that genius is the offspring of poverty and labor, and that no favored son of fortune ever gave to the world an original idea.

A VERY IMPORTANT CALL IS MADE.

A GENEROUS OFFER, AND A CALL TO SPIRITUALISTS.

To the Spiritualists at Large:—A generous offer has been made by a prominent Spiritualist in this city to give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., for the benefit of aged and needy mediums, provided the Spiritualists at large will contribute another Thousand Dollars to the same relief fund by the first of June next. The N. S. A. is now paying out a large monthly sum in pensions to worthy mediums; the calls for aid increase and the fund is constantly being depleted. Let every generous soul who has not already done all possible for this worthy object, kindly send contributions, large or small, to the following address, each will be acknowledged with thanks. The generous man who makes the offer desires to be unnamed to the public.

MARRIAGE.

Religious Interference a Restraint of Marriage.

THE QUESTION OF MARRIAGE.

Critically Considered from a Religious Standpoint by the New York Sun.

We print to-day the form of an agreement proposed by a Roman Catholic Church at Pittsfield, in Massachusetts, which must be signed by any person not a Roman Catholic who desires to be married to an adherent of that faith and by one of its priests. The stipulation is that the marriage is to be indissoluble, except by death, and that children born of the union are to be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith.

We have also received from one of the editors of a forthcoming volume of the very learned and authoritative "Jewish Encyclopaedia" the proof-sheets of its article on "Intermarriages." Passing by the Biblical prohibitions of marriages of Jews and Gentiles, or idolatrous races, we come to the law and practice as concerns marriages of Jews and Christians—who are described as "not identified Gentiles, but regarded as proselytes of the gates.'" Such marriages were first prohibited by the Christian Emperor Constantius in the year 339, under penalty of death, afterward affirmed by church councils; but state interdictions, ceased with the removal of the disabilities of the Jews.

The present state of Jewish law on the subject seems to be somewhat in confusion. The "Great Sanhedrim," convened by Napoleon in 1807, made marriage between Jews and Christians valid when concluded in accordance with the civil law, but forbade their solemnization by Jewish rites. In 1844 the Rabbinical Conference of Brunswick declared that "the marriage of a Jew with a Christian woman or with any adherent of a monotheistic religion is not prohibited if the children are permitted by the state to be brought up in the Israelitish religion"; but a Jewish Synod at Leipsic, in 1869, opposed intermarriage as "injurious to the peace of the home and to the preservation of the Jewish faith." One representative of "Reformed Judaism" has contended that such intermarriages are under the prohibition of that school, but another is emphatic in maintaining that they are permissible.

In the countries where marriages between Jews and Christians are more frequent the statistics given in this cyclopaedia show them to be less than 10 per cent. In countries yet under mediaeval conditions they are still rarer. In New South Wales, however, according to the census for 1901, such intermarriages are nearly as many as those within the faith, or 686 to 781. We do not find any statistics for the United States, but general observation indicates that the "mixed marriages" are many here numerically, though apparently they have greatly diminished relatively since the beginning of the Jewish immigration, which has brought to us something like a million Jews within the last twenty years. As our Jewish population increases, by the addition of strictly Orthodox Jews almost wholly, there is observable an increasing tendency to preserve and emphasize the peculiarity of the race.

Meantime, as we have already pointed out, the Pan-Anglican Conference of Bishops of the Episcopal Church at Washington has uttered its admonition against marriages with Roman Catholics under the required agreement that children of the union shall be brought up in that faith. Even marriage with Protestants not of the Episcopal church is strenuously opposed by a school of the Episcopalians or by individuals prominent in it.

This brings us to the consideration of a letter from a correspondent printed in a neighboring column. He argues that all this religious interference is in restraint of marriage, and consequently against public policy and sound morals. "By what right," he asks, "does a church organization demand concessions from an individual who is no part of that organization and does not recognize its authority?" The legal validity of a marriage, however, is not at all affected by its having been contracted in the face of such religious prohibition. Nobody is compelled to render obedience to a church in the matter of marriage. If he obeys the laws of the state it is sufficient.

It cannot be denied, however, that in this country, with its constitutional principles of the complete separation of State and Church, there is an anomaly in the matter of marriage. For the purpose only of solemnizing marriages a priest or minister is made a civil magistrate; yet, in practice, he refuses to perform the ceremony unless the marriage is permitted by the rules of his church, even when the parties are eligible for marriage under the law of the State. In other words, a magisterial function whose performance is made obligatory in the case of magistrates generally is treated by the minister as merely discretionary with him, according to his religious conscience. This is an anomalous state of affairs.

The remedy would be in a requirement that the legal marriage should be before a wholly civil officer only. Thereafter the pair united could satisfy their consciences by getting the blessing of a church on their union. It is questionable if such change would not tend to give greater significance to the religious ceremony and additional solemnity to entrance into the estate of matrimony. The churches ought to be left free in the exercise of their religious conscience; but the State, all society, has an interest in marriage which is not less than that of those who enter into the relation.

The Church and Marriage.

To the Editor of the Sun—Sir: I am much interested in the subject of "mixed marriages" set forth editorially and by communication in the Sun.

Isn't it illegal and unconstitutional for any Church organization to put a restraint upon marriage, which is the very base and superstructure of all good government? Especially is this so in this country of ours, founded on religious liberty—the right to worship God according to our own consciences.

For example, a Catholic or a Protestant who does not marry according to the rules of his church, though in accordance with the laws of the country, is to all intents and purposes boycotted by the Church by direction of its authorities. Among sensitive persons, women particularly, no severer punishment could be inflicted than excommunication from the privileges of the Church in which they have been reared. At the same time, equally as painful must be the renunciation of that love which is the basic principle of the very best we have in government. Again, by what right does a Church organization demand concessions from the individual who is no part of that organization and does not recognize its authority?

We have laws against the restraint of trade; is it not more necessary to have laws against the restraint of marriage?

Men and women should be free to marry as they please and to rear their children as they may decide between them. It is no business of a Church organization to do more than lend its aid in a general way to the highest development of the family. When it seeks by punishment that brings suffering and disgrace to its members to compel submission to its rules, it becomes a conspiracy — a criminal conspiracy — and the whole power of the government should stand ready to defend the individual in his guaranteed rigats.

New York, Feb. 24.

"Mixed Marriages."

We have received from Pittsfield, in Massachusetts, the subjoined form of agreement, which all non-Catholic applicants for dispensation to contract marriage with members of the Catholic Church are required to sign:

I, the undersigned, not professing the Catholic faith, wishing to contract marriage with ———, a member of the Catholic Church, propose to do so with the understanding that the marriage bond thus contracted is indissoluble, except by death; and I hereby covenant and agree that after our marriage —— shall be permitted the free exercise of the religion according to —— belief, and that all children of either sex, born of our marriage, shall be baptized and educated in the faith and according to the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church. I furthermore promise that no other marriage ceremony than that by the Catholic priest shall take place.

THE TRUTH WANTED.

An Oregonian Finds Fault With the Contradictory Teachings of the Spiritualist Rostrum Workers, and Fully Endorses the Golden Rule.

To the Editor:

Why is Spiritualism under ban and without honor among the cultured, moral and thoughful multitudes of our land, and all lands?

I'm aware a variety of reasons are offered as solutions of the vexing problem confronting us. The army of frauds and tricksters living and fattening at the expense of credulous ignorance accounts in part only for the bad odor surrounding the cause.

I will [illegible] one other disorder that has [illegible] thousands of thoughtful investigators. I refer to the interminable variety of opinions held and volubly expressed by would-be Spiritualistic teachers, in the press and on the platform, as to essentials and non-essentials of true Spiritualism.

The majority of cultured, thoughtful persons in all civilized lands look upon physical death as a grim monster to be personally and individually encountered in the more or less distant future; and also that some sort of Spiritual preparation is necessary to successfully meet the coming foe. We invite them to absorb our printed wisdom and platform vaporings. They come to our proffered feasts hoping to receive at least a few crumbs of the bread of life, and lo! they are treated to a hodge-podge of wisdom and folly, truth and vain-glorying to nauseate the soul.

The people ask for bread and receive, instead, stones of all sizes, hues and angles.

To know that my spirit friends talk to me does not necessarily make me a Spiritualist. I may have this knowledge, and still be a grasping, swindling villain, a thief and robber, and when the mortal coil is shuffled off I will as surely land among my ilk in the slums and dungeons of spirit-life, as that water will find its level.

The sickening twaddle so often heard, that death always lands the passing spirit on a higher plane, is all damnable rot, and the Spiritualist who is hanging his life on that order of upliftment is leaning on a false support and piercing himself through with many sorows.

In this connection I wish to refer briefly to the valiant onslaught by E. W. Baldwin upon The Golden Rule, and all those who dare to criticise his opinions concerning the value of the same. Truly here we have a man with the courage to fight the gods. I think it is well understood by Spiritual (not carnal) thinkers, that The Golden Rule is an exalted natural law, growing out of our universal brotherhood, and for the government of the human brotherhood as one well ordered family. I am in harmony with the intent of this law when I am as careful of my neighbor's personal rights as I would have him careful of my good name and belongings.

Only the spiritually blind will fail to see that were all people governed by this natural law, locks, jails, bolts and bars would be things of the dark and barbarous past. But, says the kicker, this is all ideal—utopian moonshine! To the man who is looking for a chance to beat his neighbor it may seem so, But that many in all ages have ,without effort, kept the law, proves that it is not a false light, but a divine truth. The fact of its announcement as a rule for human intercourse and guidance by all the great leaders of mortal progression since history's dawn should be a notice to shortsighted mortals to take heed lest we stumble to our fall over, to us, are unpalatable truth.

J. RIGDON.

Salem, Oregon.

Our good brother should bear in mind that while there emanates from certain Spiritualistic rostrums ridiculous "vaporings," there are many other rostrums in our ranks whereon most beautiful, logical, philosophical and eloquent lectures are given, FAR SUPERIOR TO ANYTHING THAT EMANATES FROM THE PULPIT OF ANY OF THE CHURCHES. The speakers may differ in opinion; they may contradict each other, as they do on the subject of "re-incarnation," and yet the central truth they all advocate is grand and soul-elevating, and valuable beyond computation.

The worst blasphemy is that of profession without practice.

No condemnation of wrong is so effective as the condemnation of right.

The friends we can never lose are the ones we say we have lost in death.

Fish may be all right as brain food if a man isn't born a fool start with.

From the Spirit Realms.

Spirit Carlyle Petersilea.

While on Earth Mr. Petersilea was a medium for the transmission of important letters from those long in spirit life. Now, having become a freed spirit himself, he will convey his best thoughts through the mediumship of his devoted wife, and we are sure they will prove interesting to our readers.

Letter Number Four.

I would like to ask the readers of The Progressive Thinker, how anything could have been known of this higher life, without mediumship—and the unconscious trance medium at that?

Allow me to go back, in memory, to my early days in the city of Boston—and the city of Boston is a fair type of other cities.

In my early youth I had never heard of trance mediumship, and all persons with whom I came in contact, who believed in a life after death at all, believed just what they were taught at the various churches. These churches all differed on doctrinal points to be sure, yet all believed in a personal male God, seated in heaven on a throne, judging the quick and the dead, surrounded by angels clothed in white, singing praises, playing on harps of gold and wearing crowns of gold.

To be sure there were the Unitarians and Universalists. They differed but little from the others except in the matters of hell-fire and the devil. These they repudiated, but still held to the male God, the great white throne, the angels clothed in white, the harps and crowns; and the very first that I ever heard, or knew to the contrary was through the lips of an unconscious, trance medium; and that medium, when not in the trance state, believed devoutly as the churches did; and without this unconscious trance condition nothing could ever have been known of this higher life. It was mediumship, and unconscious trance mediumship which gave all the great truths concerning this life, to the lower world; and in the name of all that is good, do not seek to destroy that which has given light and truth to the world.

It seems to me that those who are trying to destroy mediumship are matricides, trying to murder the author of their being, for to mediumship belongs the honor of giving birth to all the light and truth you have concerning the higher life beyond that which I previously mentioned as being taught by the various churches; and now, as I am here in this higher life, I want to show you how it is accomplished. I will mention one instance in my own experience here. After I had written my last message through the hand of my wife, and she, after coming back to her normal selfhood, had read it, she, like many other trance mediums, could not understand how it was possible for us in the spirit life to have cathedrals, houses, arbors, and so forth, and to eat and drink; as I had written that my father had placed before me milk, grapes and bread, and Liszt had also placed before me cake and wine—or at least the lady who attended him had; and my wife, as she read it, exclaimed: "Oh, Carlyle! how can these things be—how can these things exist in thin air and we here on this earth not perceive them?"

Now, such would be the question that the most of the world would ask; and how, let me ask, could the world know unless it were for mediumship? Now it is impossible for my wife or others to know, unless by entrancing and controlling them we write or speak it to the world. My wife not being a speaker but a writer, my father and I by entrancing and controlling her will be, and are, able to write how our buildings are constructed and why it is that those within the mortal form are not able to perceive them.

Now it must be obvious to all, that spiritual beings cannot, and do not, dwell within the ether, or ethereal atmosphere, without that which is equivalent to buildings and homes—that we do not, like wild cattle or sheep, roam in herds or flocks within the ethereal atmosphere; in fact, the art of erecting beautiful temples and homes, originated with the angels and within the ether, before it was given down to man; and only as he perceived and became sensitive to spirit control, was he able to build such temples and homes on the earth; the higher giving to the lower and not the lower to the higher. A baby cannot teach its mother, but the mother must teach the child. A dog cannot teach his master, but the master can teach the dog. Man cannot teach the higher angels, but the angels can teach the man; and now I, together with the aid of those who are higher than myself, will try to write out, through the hand of my wife, how it is that we can erect cathedrals, halls, temples, homes, and magnificent buildings of all kinds, which are eternal and in the heavens, or ethereal zones and spheres that surround the earth; yea, even after those spheres are left behind—for the angels dwell not in the spheres that are near the earth and move with it—but after they reach an altitude where the earth does not attract and hold the spheres through the law of gravitation. All must be aware that such an altitude must at length be reached.

Of course I have never been there yet, my self, but there are angels who visit us and teach of those things.

Now, as an example, we will take the cathedral within which we found Franz Liszt; and that my wife and others may fully understand, I will say that this cathedral was far more beautiful—so much more beautiful that it even cannot be compared to the one that we visited in Cologne when we were travelling in Europe and I was in the mortal body—yet, in the main, it was something like it.

It will be impossible to go into all the details, but enough so that it can be understood by my wife and others.

A large company of spirits band together. They come out from homes which they have already erected. They are usually inspired or led on by a dominent spirit; one, or more, who desires to rule and take the lead; one, or more, whose mind is set in a certain channel or groove that seemingly nothing can change. Do not suppose for a moment that coming here into spirit life changes a very set and dominant mind at once; quite the contrary. Now popes, cardinals, bishops, and most of priests, remain for long periods of time, many of them, just where they were when they left the earth; they still want grand cathedrals; they still desire to be popes, cardinals, bishops, priests, and so on; and, so desiring, they do as they do on earth, collect about them a large concourse of spirits who are non-progressive and still believe as they did on earth. Now these spirits assemble together, all intent on erecting a great cathedral with all its show, glitter, and pomp. The dominant leader has in his mind about what he would like. He describes it to the people about him, and even projects the image of it into the ether from his mind, for the ether reflects like a mirror the thought image projected into it. Now when the people perceive this image, they give a great shout, and immediately every mind, in sympathy, projects a corresponding image toward the first outlines already there; and each mind adds new beauty and clothing to it, until it stands a beautiful, reflected thought image within the ethereal atmosphere—but this image, if left to itself, would at length slowly vanish. Skilled artisans must now be employed to make it permanent and solidly objective; and so all kinds of artisans and workmen are brought into requisition. They cannot build with wood and stone as on earth, but they must understand the chemical composition of such things, and they must form ethereal, chemical compounds, wherewith to clothe the thought image. The workmen must band together and form a compound resembling stone, for the base of the structure; but, of course, this is an ethereal, spiritual substance—nevertheless a substance, yet too fine for the mortal eye to perceive. Then there are marble workers and workers in wood. There are also architects with their architectural designs. There are carvers of images in wood, stone, and marble, all bringing some beautiful object, from their own mind, wherewith to embellish this grand cathedral; then come the artisans in bronze, silver and gold, and those who understand how to compound crystal; and lastly, the painters and jewelers, and the cathedral stands a thing of beauty, decorated with beautiful works of art, gilded and bejeweled within and without.

Now the musicians are called for, and some of the greatest and grandest join themselves to the other spirits, and bring their musical instruments, which are constructed in the same manner, but by a smaller band of spirits; then a grand organ is built, and when all the gardens and fountains are completed, the structure is as substantial and real to the spiritual sight and sense as are those of earth to the material sight and sense; and music is as real to us as the music of earth ever was; yea, far more real, for we are not clothed by the flesh.

Now, I have described to you, by utterly controlling my wife, just how these things are accomplished, telling you that which she, of herself, could not tell you; and I have told you the truth as far as I myself can comprehend it; and I think I understand it very well.

Now, when this beautiful building and the same with all others—is looked at through this beautifully colored, luminous atmosphere, or ether, you must all perceive that it is transcendently beautiful. And, pray, let me ask you, how this knowledge could be gained if it were not for mediumship?

Mediumship is the jewel in the crown of knowledge. Be careful that you do not tear it out and destroy it—you of earth who think you know more than the spirits or angels and can teach them what to do and how they ought to do it.

When in earth life, I often had inexperienced pupils, who came to me knowing nothing of music whatever; and many of them would commence by first informing me that they wanted to understand music and become as perfect in the art as I was; they had heard me play and thought it must be a very simple thing to learn, as it appeared to be no effort to me. And then they would proceed to instruct me just how they wanted me to teach them, and just what I should do in the matter. They did not want to commence with the a, b, c, of music, but that I should show them, at once, just how I played those beautiful sonatas they had heard me perform.

"Oh, it must be so easy—for you do not seem to make anything of it at all."

I generally listened to them until they got through; then I usually said: "Well, which is to be the pupil, you or I? If you understand music, and can tell me all about it, and how I ought to instruct my pupils, I will become your pupil. But, if, as you say, you know nothing of music and have come here for me to teach you, then, as I do understand it, you must become my pupil, and allow me to instruct you in the right method whereby you may become perfected in the art of playing."

Now, when those of earth undertake to tell the spirits and angels—the arisen ones, the higher ones, those who do know about the spiritual life through experience—just how and by what methods they shall instruct those yet within the mortal form who do not know, they are reversing the natural order of things, and putting themselves in the position that some of my pupils did, when they commenced by telling me how and by what methods I should instruct them.

The higher must teach the lower and not the lower the higher.

I wish to say a few more words regarding the thought images projected into the ether. You, in earth life, prepare a sensitive plate and take the reflected image of an object or a sitter; then, you, by the aid of chemicals, fasten the reflection upon the plate. The ether is like the sensitive plate. A thought image is projected into it, and reflected by it, and then spiritual beings do as you do, set the image through their knowedge of chemistry, or the chemical properties required for that purpose. One is no more wonderful than the other, when once understood.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
OR
Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by, its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?

Do you wish to develop Mediumship?

Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

TRIUMPH OF SPIRITUALISM

True Mediumship Versus Fraud—Compensation for Mediums.

The few advocates of Modern Spiritualism in the early days of its life were looked upon as lunatics; were despised for their faith; and few people of respectability could be found who were willing to examine into the facts connected with the alleged phenomena, for fear of the reproach of the unbelieving community. Since that period of time it has extended with a rapidity unprecedented in the annals of the world, until it has become a power in society. People whose education and genius have fitted them for occupying the highest stations in life, have sacrificed all positions of earthly aggrandizement for the sake of this great truth.

The day for raising the cry of humbug or delusion has passed away; and the application of these terms to this subject rebounds upon its enemies and covers them with shame. The theories that educated men have sent forth to account for the phenomena have only rendered their authors ridiculous in the minds of intelligent people. It is very strange if they believe evil spirits can come to do evil on this earth, that good spirits will not be permitted to come to effect good purposes. We believe both these propositions.

In view of the rapid spread of our cause and the heterogeneous character of its adherents, it would be impossible to give an adequate idea of the mass of evidence in favor of genuine Spiritualism and reliable mediumship. Various phases of deception, fraud and fanaticism from time to time have appeared, but these things should be no cause for alarm. The truth shines out with greater luster by contrast. The sifting process exerts a healthful influence on the dissemination of the highest and purest forms of Spiritualism.

Thousands of mediums have been continually tested by skeptics, and a vast majority of those who investigate become converts. It is natural to expect that some deception, real or apparent, must exist in such vast operations. But if the whole thing were deception, as is alleged by ignorant opponents, then millions of intelligent people are guilty of the worst species of fraud. And who are these deceivers? Our sisters, brothers, mothers, fathers, children and most intimate friends and kindred. What can be the purpose of such wide-spread deception? Of the thousands of mediums in this country, how many have made money by it? The evidence goes to show that comparative few made a living, while many have lost money, friends, reputation and worldly advantages of all kinds — setting aside all possibility of gain.

Then, is vice or fraud so intrinsically attractive that the best human beings would wilfully sacrifice their honor, fortune and friends to sustain an unpopular falsehood? It is of little use to detail facts—we can all see for ourselves. As a general rule mediums are poorly paid, and there is no chance for them to get rich.

The world suffers from a dearth of kindness, sympathy and friendship, which are foundation principles of prosperity. If as much effort were put forth to cultivate these that is exerted to get money, nearly everybody would be good, and there would be no poverty.

I want to give a little experience here in my line of work. For eighteen years I have been a writing medium and contributor of the Spiritualist press, freely giving my best labor to the world without pay. It gives me pleasure to do it, therefore I take great interest in it, and I have assurance that readers appreciate my literary work. I write by mental impressions, yet the work is not wholly impressional, for I depend on my knowledge of facts to some extent. For several years I have endured great psysical suffering, almost to the point of despair—a crippled invalid and indigent, living on a county stipend, scarcely sufficient for frugal living, and I have done some begging.

There is little danger of mediums retiring to live on the interest of their lecturing funds or fruits of labor, and their income taxes never trouble them. Some are sustained—others are not; some receive fair compensation, which is well, for they earn it in real service to humanity, tenfold more valuable than the ministry of theologians who receive high salaries for preaching error to the people.

Large cash prizes have been offered to tricksters who would give such test facts of intelligence as are revealed through mediums—such tests to be given under similar conditions to those employed by the mediums; or to simulate precisely the practices of genuine mediumship. But no successful competitors for such prizes have appeared.

The railing world at "the insanity of Spiritualists," the cry of " humbug and fraud," the denunciations of the pulpit, are all waxing feeble. The sneers of the press are subsiding; and the pity, which some good people have expressed for "the deluded Spiritualists," has been transmuted into admiration for the intellectual power displayed upon our rostrums. Those who seek to learn, listen with wonder and delight. The facts upon which spirit communion are clearly stated, and the philosophy deductible from the facts so clearly presented that a new world of thought unfolds before the seekers, for which their souls have long yearned to know, and for which theology forbids them to search.

Spiritualism is so many sided that it is an inexhaustible theme of discussion among those who have the ability to think for themselves. Its phenomena are or should be of the same interest and value to scientists as are the phenomena of the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdoms. Its science can be learned as exactly as the demonstrated facts of chemistry, geometry, astronomy. Its philosophy gives the only true explanation of life here and hereafter. Its religion takes us into the realm of duty, utility and relates us to our fellow-beings. In all these departments is an infinite variety of topics upon which thinking people can reflect for a lifetime and always find more truth to learn.

In all cases of well developed mediumship there is conclusive proof that there is added powers, increased knowledge, clearer conception of principles, a more divine philosophy and comprehension of higher and grander truths. While we know there are black sheep in the fold who dishonor the name of Spiritualism, we also know of the inestimable good it has done, the blessings it has wrought, the grand uplifting, helpful service it has been to countless thousands, and is destined yet to be to mankind through coming ages.

Think of the home circles throughout the land where once sundered family ties are again united through the boon of mediumship, where grief is assuaged, hearts are blessed and life made joyous in the realization of the presence of the "loved ones gone before."

An important feature of the Spiritual Movement is the admission of woman to an equal position with man, an experiment no longer doubtful. Some of our best speakers are those whom Paul denied the right to speak in church, and whom the church has almost universally excluded.

Many people are still looking and praying for the coming of a New Era, while millions are already enrolled under the banner and in the ranks of Spiritualism, which is The New Era. They are happier and better for having been introduced into practical knowledge of spirit communion, and know that life has become a more important reality by a knowledge of its intimate connection with the life hereafter.

Plea for an Aged Couple Who Have Lost Their Home.

To the Editor:—The Progressive Thinker has failed to make its appearance, and I am reminded that possibly my time is out, and if the paper is to be a weekly visitor the next year I must send in one dollar, which is dirt cheap for the amount of good reading matter it contains, and above everything else I do not want to be classed with those Spiritualists who are too stingy to pay one dollar for a paper that has the intrinsic value that yours has.

Daniel L. Hains and wife, of Franklin, Neb., stopped over at our house a week last Sunday and spent the day with us. They were returning from their visit from Ohio. They went away last August. About one month after they left their house was struck by lightning and burned to the ground, and 15 or 20 tents that belonged to the Spiritualists, for camp-meeting purposes.

Brother Hains and his wife are both veteran Spiritualists, both of Quaker origin. What can be said of one can be said of the other. I believe Mr. Hains is one of the most honorable men I ever knew. Through his and her efforts the Spiritualists have been able to have a camp in Franklin the last eight years. He has reached his 80th year, and she only a few years behind him. A mortgage of $300 was on the house, and it was insured for that amount. Of course that money went to cancel the mortgage. They have about four acres of ground with some fruit, but no house or money to build. There was a number of debts that he had made in his efforts to keep the camp going, and he gave his word he would see they were paid, which fell upon him to do; but it was necessary to put the mortgage on his home to do it. Now in their old age they are left without a home.

There is an effort on foot to build him a house. I think about $175 has been raised by his friends. I have been requested by the Spiritualists to write this letter, and if any one desires to help Brother Hains in any way, to rebuild his house, it will be thankfully received. Any aid may be sent direct to D. L. Hains, Franklin, Neb.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

A Tribute Given Through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, March 27, 1904.

Perhaps there could be no better opportunity than the present for paying our tribute to a life that has just gone out of earthly expression in London, England.

You as a people came to the appreciation of Emerson many years after his greatest work was done. Half a century from now the English-speaking world will appreciate Edwin Arnold.

Too great a man for the age in which he lived; too ripe a scholar in all essentials of real scholarship—although honored and decorated by the late Queen of England—the English-speaking nations do not know what they owe to Edwin Arnold.

The poems of the Orient, especially the "Light of Asia," opened up to England and America the first conception of the scholarship and religions of India. Other Oriental subjects have been interpreted by him, and it was because of these works that the character of the new thought concerning the Orient that has permeated the Occident has been possible.

There has never been a more liberalizing influence in the world than this meeting of the Orient and the Occident through the interpretation of a genius. Small scholars hesitate to call Sir Edwin Arnold great. We consider him the poet, the English poet of this age.

Not conceiving, as other interpreters did, the religions of the Orient as pagan, he, of course, encountered the opposition of ecclesiastical Great Britain, and of the missionaries sent from Great Britain and America into the Orient to teach the people there something besides the true interpretation of religion. Those missionaries did not Christianize the Orient one-tenth part as much as Edwin Arnold has Orientalized Christendom. To-day the voice of Buddha and the voice of Jesus are more nearly side by side than they have been in the history of the world. They will continue to grow nearer as time goes on and bigotry grows less, and the perception of the public grows in knowledge of the spirit of the true Oriental life.

Starting out with the achievement of great Oriental scholarship, he gave unto the interpretation of Buddhism a wonderful, luminous and poetic power. But as if to rebuke his theological critics, and to bear forward triumphantly his life and interpretations, he has given to the Christians a better interpretation of Christ in the "Light of the World," than any other poet, or any priest or theologian has ever given; and the essential spirit of the Christianity of Christ is that the story is made to be related by Mary Magdalen. The one essential principle of the Christianity of Christ is loving-kindness: "Neither do I condemn you." What Christians have failed to interpret of this spirit, he has interpreted in "The Light of the World," which is the life of Christ.

As we say: Fifty years from now people will be commemorating the birthday of Sir Edwin Arnold. This is because, to a certain extent, people are prepared for the soul-teachings because of this better interpretation of the religion of the Orient and the religion of Jesus; which was essentially derived from the Orient.

Human science is an uncertain guess.

Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism.

On Thursday, March 31, was celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism in every city and town where enough Spiritualists exist to hold services; and even in family circles the day was held sacred to the memory of the dawning of this new era. Each anniversary is now looked forward to by Spiritualists as the Christian world looks forward to Easter Sunday: as the celebration of the resurrection, or the dawning of a new light. The Progressive Thinker joins the world of spirits and Spiritualists in the highest expression of glad tidings of great joy for the "Dawning of the Morning When the Mists Have Cleared Away."

The Fakes and Barnacles in Our Ranks.

The fakes that have fastened themselves like barnacles on the ranks of Spiritualism are gradually being exposed in all sections of the country. "Peek-holes" in the ceiling over the cabinet and rostrum, the grabbing of "spirits," and other methods have laid bare their work. Of course they hate The Progressive Thinker with all the venom their tongues and vile natures can command, and during the entire time of the paper's existence they have heaped mountains of abuse upon it, and the result has been that The Progressive Thinker IS NOW THE MOST PROSPEROUS OF ANY OF THE SPIRITUALIST PAPERS PUBLISHED IN THIS COUNTRY OR EUROPE. ITS CIRCULATION IS BY FAR THE LARGEST, ITS SIZE THE GREATEST, AND ITS INFLUENCE IS KEENLY FELT IN OUR RANKS.

Whenever you hear any of these fake mediums abusing the editor and his paper, you may rest assured that there is rottenness in their nature and practices somewhere, and they should be avoided as so many reptiles.

We are the true and devoted friend of honest mediumship. Particularly are we the friend of those mediums who have worn themselves out in working for the cause, and we are untiring in our efforts to raise funds for them so that the remainder of their lives can be spent in peace and comfort. The N. S. A. will bear testimony to the great influence The Progressive Thinker has exerted in this direction.

This paper has been and is now sustained by a vast body of advanced spirits who see the barnacles in our ranks, and the bad influence they exert. Their wise counsel started the paper, and they have nobly sustained it for fifteen years.

Strange Conversions.

What is the incentive which leads the clergy, particularly Episcopalians, to abandon their pulpits, and cast their destiny with the Catholics? Years ago we knew a Baptist clergyman, while in a drunken debauch, send for a Catholic priest to baptize him, which was done, probably to the satisfaction of all concerned; but in these last days such conditions are rare, and doubtless did not influence Rev. Dr. De Costa, the latest acquisition we have noticed from the Episcopal to the Catholic faith.

O brother, why fumble and stumble and grumble through life? That is not the way to success.—Ananda.

A Remarkable Premium Book

"The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson." It is a most remarkable book, elegantly and substantially bound in cloth and printed on the best paper It fills an important niche in the Spiritualistic and Occult Library, and every Spiritualist should have it. Your library will not be complete without it. It will charm you to read it. It will enable you to answer all the arguments ever made against Spiritualism. It is rich with pertinent criticisms by the scholarly Mr. Jamieson, and philosophical replies by Mr. Hull, and can but interest both believers and disbelievers.

Should Be Kept in Mind.

When we read Gen. 3:8, of "the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden," and further on holding a tete-tete with Adam, Eve and the serpent, do we not at once conceive in the mind an ordinary man, an exact counterpart of Adam himself, clothed like him with the habiliments of mortality. Gen. 6, introduces God to Noah, and we find them face to face in conversation, a man with infinite power, though repentant, is before us, the hero of the flood. And the same in chapter 9. In chapter 11 we find this same man coming down "to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded," and then planning how to defeat them, confounding their language and scattering them abroad over all the earth, lest they became gods and usurp his throne.

In chapter 13 of Genesis, we find this same character, designated Lord, entering into a compact with Abram. In chapter 16:7, an "angel of the Lord," found Hagar and her child in the wilderness, bidding the fleeing second wife of Abram to return to her mistress. In chapter 18 the Lord appears to Abraham, whose name had been enlarged, in the form of "three men," and these "three men" representing the Lord, and further on in the chapter are called Lord. They fixed up that little matter with Sarah so she became a mother at ninety.

Passing to chapter 19 and it was "two angels" who represented the Lord to Lot, and finally rained brimstone on Sodom and Gomorrah.

The word angel seems synonymous with spirit. Peruse the Bible narratives, carefully throughout the volume, and is it not possible spirits are everywhere meant by the terms Lord, God, when not applied to idols? Certain it is, we hope that the Great Spirit of Nature, in whatever form it may be enthroned, was not guilty of all the peccadillos and gigantic crimes related in the Bible, as performed, else directed, by him. Indeed it would greatly lower our regard for spirits if we believed it was they who drowned the world, burnt Sodom and Gomorrah, hardened the heart of Pharaoh so he would not let the people go; stopped the sun in its course that the slaughter might go on; devised the scape-goat as a method to avoid the consequences of sin; as "Lord of hosts" instructed his servant:

"Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass."—I Sam. 13:3.

It was not even a good spirit that gave such directions but the same designated "the Lord God of Israel," Josh. 10:40, "So Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale and of the springs, and all their kings; he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the Lord God of Israel commanded."

It was a demon God that made such commands, for a very base devil only could have instructed Moses, Num. 31: 17, 18—

"Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him; but all the women-children, that have not known a man by lying with, keep alive for yourselves."

We question if there is a spirit in all the boundless universe, if clothed with infinite power, would debase himself by giving such a command. It was the infamous priests who professed to receive such commands from God who were alone responsible for the infamy. This proposition is strengthened when we learn, verse 35, that there were "Thirty and two thousand persons in all, of women that had not known man by lying with him." Verse 40: "The Lord's tribute was thirty and two persons," and these, verse 41, were delivered unto Eleazar the priest, as the Lord commanded Moses."

Read these facts, ye simpletons, who insist that "the Bible is inerrant," and that the Lord God of that book is the Supreme Ruler of the universe. We repeat: It was only the basest of demons, and those too mean for even the fabled hell at that, who could be the author of such damnable crimes against humanity.

While churchmen continue to maintain that every statement between the two lids of the Bible was inspired by God these facts, and hundreds like them, cannot be printed too often.

A Futile Effort.

The new pope has lately issued an encyclical to the heads of the Catholic hierarchy in America, wherein he declares the first duty of the church is "to win men back to a belief in God."

We are glad to assure his worship that in this country there is no quarrel between the true God and the people. The principal God adored by Catholics, and the one the pope wants all men to worship, it is claimed, was born of a virgin. Many of the American people are too well informed to believe that an immaculate maiden ever gave birth to a God, or even a human child. It is one of the impossibilities of nature, hence his holiness is wasting his talent when urging us to be reconciled to him. The God developed in planets and suns; in beasts and birds; in tree and flower; in sunshine, shade and storm; in the thunder's roar; the earthquake shock; and in the multitudinous operations of nature marked by change, receives the adoration of every thoughtful mind. It is the artificial gods, man made, and priestly imposed on us, against whom intelligence revolts, and no pope or priest can win us back to their love or even belief in them.

Modernized Methods of Creeds.

Through all the early years of Christianity, after its recognition by kingly power, its effort was to make converts to its faith by the exercise of force. Says Mosheim, authority no Christian can controvert, Part 2, Chapter 5, Section 3, of his Ecclesiastical History:

"About the commencement of the 13th century Innocent III. sent legates extraordinary into the southern provinces of France to extirpate heresy, in all its modifications, without being at all scrupulous in the adoption of such methods as might seem necessary to effect his salutary purpose. * * * These spirited champions inflicted capital punishment upon such of the heretics as they could not convert by reason and argument. From them the formidable and odious tribunal, called the Inquisition, derived its origin.

"From this period dates the commencement of the dreadful tribunal of the Inquisition, which in this and the following ages subdued such a prodigious multitude of heretics, part of whom were converted to the church by terror, and the rest committed to the flames without mercy."

Such were the instrumentalities of the church to gain a footing in its infancy, to which even Protestants have succeeded.

The Reformation in the 16th century, headed by Martin Luther, interrupted this forcible method of making recruits to the faith. It has been succeeded, both in the parent church and with the reformers, by taking advantage of the ignorance of infancy, to instill into its undeveloped mind the damnable creeds which unprejudiced intelligence everywhere repudiates. Sunday-schools to indoctrinate innocent childhood with the dogmas of the church have been found a more powerful instrumentality in making converts than was the stake, the fagot and the flame, for now the heretics, nearly all of them, have to outgrow the swaddling clothes of infancy and childhood before they can form any just conception of this life or the coming one, so strongly are ancient idol faiths interwoven with their mother's milk into their natures.

Another Idol Toppled Down.

And now another religious idol has fallen, smitten to the dust by the strong hand of the "higher criticism," applied with fearless irreverence.

As stated in the Chicago Record-Herald, "Pilgrim in Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress' was a religious cad," declared Dr. Albion W. Small, professor of sociology and dean of the graduate schools in the University of Chicago, before the conference of Baptist ministers at the university. Professor Small, who is a doctor of divinity, further stated that the character of Pilgrim, usually held up to youth as an ideal of Christianity, according to his belief, was not a type of Christianity at all.

"Pilgrim was simply living to save his own dear, little, selfish soul, and he never tried to help anyone else," declared Dr. Small. "The pulpit utterance that we hear so often about no man being able to be a Christian until he can stand on his own feet and work out his own salvation is one of the most unfortunate things ever said from the pulpit. This is the sort of man that Pilgrim was, and he was no hero.

"Times have changed in religious matters, and religion is now recognized as religion in all positions of life. We are squeamish in implying that anyone is not a Christian, and in the new democracy of religion actors and preachers form mergers to further their business.

"The theory of life after death savors less of truth to twentieth century people than it did to their predecessors. Moral standards are being substituted for ritualistic religion, and men are demanding a religion that shows results now rather than theories that have to do with a far-off condition. The church is bound to lose prestige in all particulars that assume it is an end in itself, and ministers—who must exist because every man must have a vocation—will go into the shops and mediate between the laborers and employers."

Real Worth Not Appreciated.

A Congregational church, in Cleveland, Ohio, does not appreciate educated thought. Last November, Rev. J. A. Fisher, formerly connected with the late Rev. Dr. Scudder, of Brooklyn, N. Y., accepted a call to the Cleveland pulpit. Two Sundays ago, during his discourse in which he referred to the recent archaeic discoveries, and the revelations of the higher critics, he incidentally mentioned the Bible as a church fetich. The whole pool of superstition was agitated its entire depth. A deacon arose, and declared the preacher had gained his place in the church by false pretenses, because he claimed to be a minister of the gospel. The excitement became intense. The pulpit was vacated. In great confusion the congregation arrayed itself in factions; one side sustained the pulpit, the other the deacon.

A fetich is something made the object of superstitious worship. Received as the inspired "Word of God," how far short does the Bible become in the hands of orthodox churchmen what the dominie claimed it is. To write or speak disparagingly of the holy book, or its barbarous teaching as revealed in the Old Testament, is deemed by many, little short of blasphemy.

Coming to Their Senses.

For ages has the sordid nightmare of a literal hell frozen or burned to a state of paralysis the mind of man. No greater curse could have come upon the human race than that of a belief in a "lake of fire" for the punishment of the evil-doers after death. It made maniacs and built our asylums. It has made strife between nations, between kindred and instituted a godhead of tyranny and hate, auger and revenge; made demons of some and whimpering cowards of others. But that could not always last. The human brain is beginning to work, and man is awaking to a sense of independence and reason, as is exhibited in the case following, taken from the secular press of this city:

"Hell, Here and Hereafter."

Such was the subject of the sermon by the Rev. Frederick C. Priest at the Church of the Redeemer.

"'Tell men of hell,' said a noted revivalist to a large gathering of Christian ministers and workers recently held in this city.

"Very well, I will tell men of hell. Hell, figuratively speaking, exists in this world in many places, in many lives, under many conditions. In a similar sense hell probably exists in the immortal world.

"But hell, literally understood as a place or state of endless misery and torture in the immortal world, understood as it is commonly understood through popular preaching, we have no good reason to believe exists or can exist in the immortal world. It exists and can exist only in the imagination. It is the creation of heathenism and is the most horrible and accursed lie engrafted by ignorant or designing theologians and others upon the fair religion taught by Jesus Christ."

A Letter From India.

Writing from Dhun Castle, Byculla, Bombay, India, to the editor, lately received, J. A. Balfour, Esq., a distinguished author, and a near relative of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, says:

"We had a very bad period of plague last cold weather, the mortality running very high, equal to 400 a day during the height of the epidemic. This, of course, is chiefly among the native population. The Europeans are not much affected, though several died last season. We have now our monsoon, or rainy season, which will shortly close. Then the cold weather begins, and with it the plague steadily increases until it reaches its height, then gradually subsiding until May or June, when it relaxes again until the heat of summer is passed. Its course occupies from six to seven months. At present the deaths from this scourge number about 14 or 15 per day in this city alone. The mortality during the height of the epidemic is about 20,000 per week! We seem to have got quite used to it.

"I see your President is trying to stamp out lynching, that fearful, damnable blot on the fair fame of your country. Such a thing would never occur on British soil. May he succeed. Twenty centuries have not succeeded in stamping out man's inhumanity to man. Where is our boasted Western civilization? Ah, where? The echoes of these revolting scenes come to us even here. May your President succeed in this good and noble work. What are the Christian pulpits doing? They send missionaries here to convert the heathen, but the heathen do not do this foul thing! May America wipe this shameful record from her good name."

Much to Commend In All Religions.

President Hall, of Union Seminary, an institution of learning where Protestant preachers are made, says:

"Christian missionaries must learn to approach the ethnic religions of India with a more generous appreciation of their merits."

Not of India only, but in all these countries where Islamism prevails greater appreciation should be awarded. Travelers invariably report favorably on the morals of Mohammedans. Intemperance is unknown among them. A clergyman of our acquaintance who journeyed through Egypt and Palestine some forty years ago, returned and reported to his church in our hearing, that for many days in succession while on shipboard on the Mediterranean, or while journeying by land, almost exclusively companioned by Mohammedans, he saw no intemperance, no gambling, no licentiousness, heard no profanity, but five times a day, on sea or land, the worshipers of Allah fell upon their knees, and declared "Allah is Allah, there is no God but Allah, and Mahomet is his prophet." He greatly admired these people, and on his return home always spoke of them with great warmth.

If Christians would hunt among Mohammedans, Brahmans, Parsees, Buddhists, or devotees of Confucius for their real virtues, instead of magnifying their disbelief in a virgin-born God into a great vice, they would find much to commend.

Figures Don't Lie.

A census of church attendance, by the Church News Association, was taken in New York on the 15th ult. Arrangements for the census had been taken in advance, and no doubt the clergy did their level best to have full attendance on that day. All denominations, including the Catholics, engaged in the rivalry. The results showed nearly one-fourth of the population were churchgoers. Had not the numbers been increased by extra effort and rivalry, each sect making as good a display as possible to advance its own interests, what would have been the result? Probably not one-half as many as reported. Women in all the churches predominated, constituting nearly three-fourths of the attendance in Catholic churches, and exceeding two-thirds in Protestant churches.

Strange as it may seem, the foreign-born greatly outnumbered the native-born.

The New York Sun, in concluding its report of this census, which it gave at length, said:

"The statistics, as a whole, are a repeated demonstration of the fact that in New York, as in London, more than three-fourths of the population are neglectful of public religious worship."

And yet this one-fourth of the population are ambitious to control the politics, the education and the destiny of the nation, and make all the world subject to their views.

Dr. Quackenbos Brought to Judgment

Is Spiritualism a Maniac-Making Religion?

Reply of Hudson Tuttle, Editor-at-Large, Nat'l Spiritualists Asso'c'n.

Editor New York Herald:—The article by John D. Quackenbos in the Sunday Herald, of March 13, wherein he denounces Spiritualism as "Devil worship," is so vindictive and unjust in its assertions, so slanderously untrue, that a reply is demanded to set the matter right before the world. It would take entirely too much space to examine Mr. Quackenbos' assertions in detail, and I shall take up only the most salient points.

First, of the name, he says "Spiritism," for the purpose of stigmatizing the movement which has been known from the first as Spiritualism, and is so called by all Spiritualists. The National Spiritualists Association is not a Spiritist organization. The name is chosen because it is in direct opposition to materialism, and best expresses the spirituality which every Spiritualist accepts as an ideal to be realized in the conduct of life.

It is not fair to prejudice a cause under discussion by giving it an opprobrious name, a name which its adherents regret as misrepresenting. It is the method of attack of a shyster, rather than a man of science.

Mr. Quackenbos admits the possibility of spirit influence. He introduces Mrs. Spencer as a type of mediumship. She is a wonderful sensitive expecially for the expression of music. She most earnestly believes she is controlled by spirit friends. There are thousands like her, having had similar experiences, and they all believe, even think they know that spirits communicate with them.

"Not so!" exclaims Mr. Quackenbos. "Now, while psychology admits the possibility of communication with spiritual personalities, it offers a very different modus communicandi. It has advanced the doctrine that "different consciousnesses, or different aggregates of states of consciousness, may combine and interpenetrate, somewhat analogously to what theologians mean by the communion of souls." Every educated person is aware that a given transliminal self may communicate automatically with other human transliminal selfs by what is known as telepathy."

In plain words we can read the thoughts of others.

"Transliminal" is a term with a sonorous scientific sound, so freshly coined, that it is not in the Century Dictionary. We have to guess at the meaning, and suppose it is equivalent to the older terms "subliminal self," and "sub-conscious self," which have been paraded before the public, as though they were full explanations of spiritual phenomena although the existence of such states of consciousness or unconsciousness, has not been proven, and is entirely speculative.

This "transliminal" not only accounts for mediumship, and other psychic manifestations, but for many of the strange actions of animals, says Mr. Quackenbos. Telepathy is by no means confined to man.

"Recent experiments have proved moths and other insects to be capable of thought transference so far reaching as to impress their fellows miles away with a knowledge of their existence and whereabouts."

But this is as nothing to the story he repeats of the sixteen-thousand-acre park Austin Corbin established in the mountains of New Hampshire and stocked with various species of deer. Mr. Quackenbos says that Corbin was told that the extinct carnivore would return and destroy the deer. Now it is reported that a family of pumas have taken up their abode in the park.

How is this explainable? An ordinary man, an ignorant hunter, would say that there was nothing extraordinary in a puma being found in those mountain fastnesses, nor that finding herds of deer, it stayed where food was plentiful.

Mr. Quackenbos is a psychologist, and ordinary explanation does not satisfy him. He forgets an axiom of science, to always take the lesser cause if consonant with the facts, rather than the greater. He says:

"I suggest the theory of a telepathic communication—the radiation of subtle waves of cognizance from the mass of fear entertained for their traditional enemies by a community of four thousand animals of the deer tribe—to fugitive panthers in the Alleghenies, or in remote areas of the Green and Adirondack mountains."

Just think of it! A puma in the Adirondacks catching the thought waves of fear from the deer in Corbin's park in New Hampshire! It has been supposed that hounds followed the track by smell. Oh, no, smell is superfluous—says Mr. Quackenbos; it's the hound's "transliminal" that enables him to follow. Well, what of this "transliminal," if the track is cold? A hound might stand a few feet from a dozen if they were concealed and have no intimation of their presence.

His reasoning reminds me of advice given me by a darkey who had come North from Virginia where he had been a useful servant in caring for dogs and horses at fox hunts. I remarked that there had not been a fox on the farm for years, and doubted if there remained one in the county.

"I can tell you how to have foxes enough here," he replied.

"How?" I asked, interested.

"Jest git a lot of hounds, and have a meet once a month, and chase over the fields like wrath, and there'll be foxes to burn! Allus see plenty of foxes after a hunt!"

The poor fellow was ignorant of the law, but he was sure of the fact, and Mr. Quackenbos could have explained that, getting together a lot of horses, hounds and excited men and women, and racing over the field would put all into the "transliminal" state, send off waves, which would flow into the "transliminal" of all the foxes, near and far, and they would never have a moment's rest till they found themselves within the limitations of my farm!

Now so far is this thought transference from being general, that when it is indicated the circumstance is regarded worthy of mention. In the continuous contact of people with each other in the business of life, even when to know the real thoughts of each other is of vital consequence, how rarely are the victims of misplaced confidence saved by thought reading? It is possible, it may occur, but it is rare. Parents have sought for lost children for years, and not a "thought wave" came to relieve their anxiety. They have met such children grown out of recollection, without recognizing them.

After saying that man has a physical, every-day life, he adds, what may be taken as his definition of "transliminal," "and a subjective, transliminal (across the threshold), or supernormal, in which he is capable of acting independently of a physical environment and at a distance from his physical body, in which, as the image of God, he intuitively apprehends, possesses supernormal information and power, reigns supreme over functions of body and motions of mind and is obnoxious to the touch of other and higher spiritual agencies that have access to him in the transliminal world alone."

The Spiritualist would translate this sentence into simpler form. He would say that man has a physical body, and a spiritual, and the spiritual is able at times to take cognizance of spiritual beings, and exercise its spiritual powers and perceptions. As St. Paul says, there is a natural body and a spiritual body.

If this "transliminal," is as "the image of God" with man, are the "transliminals" of "the moth," and "great cat," also images of God?

Such is the pitiable theory advanced to take the place of spirit influence, which Mr. Quackenbos grants as possible!

It is not of moment how he explains the phenomena, for his is only one of scores of others which have come and gone since the advent of Spiritualism. It is his libelous charges that demand attention. Prof. Myers, a member of the same Psychical Research Society, a man without a peer in his department of investigation, after years of study, unreservedly endorsed what Mr. Quackenbos condemns. Prof. Alfred R. Wallace, Sir William Crookes, and scores of others, equally eminent, endorsed the genuineness of Spiritualism. Mr. Quackenbos has a right to his opinion, but he has no right to libel those who chance to disagree from him. I quote:

"Further, to the skirts of Spiritism is pinned a revolting religion comparable to the devil worship of the Eastern Hemisphere. It thrusts a female principle into the Godhead. It flouts the divinity of Christ, interpreting Jesus as a healing medium and losing sight of Him in a throng of benevolent daimons. Its teachings regarding marriage are subversive of all respect for the sacredness of sex, and free love is its ideal of social happiness."

I know not what "Spiritism" teaches, but I know that when these charges are made against Spiritualism they are false in every word. They are assertions, supported only by opinion, and not the least attempt is made to substantiate them. They stand as an infamous libel on the fair name of millions of men and women, many in the front ranks of art, literature, science and statesmanship; an infamous slander on the National Spiritualist Association, which composed of delegates from state associations, a body of men and women the peer of any organization, is endeavoring to sustain and extend the cause.

The accusation of pinning a "revolting religion" of the "Eastern Hemisphere" to the skirts of Spiritualism is obscure, but probably refers to theosophy, which Spiritualism repudiates, and which has been its bitterest enemy.

About the "female principle" to be thrust into the Godhead, after fifty years of closest connection with the Spiritual movement, I confess that I never head of it before.

Of Jesus Christ, Spiritualism takes almost exactly the same view as the Unitarians.

Of the charge that it annuls the sacredness of marriage, it has been stock in trade of opposers for half a century, and although repeatedly shown to be false is constantly reiterated. In the books which are considered standard by Spiritualists as the works of Davis, Edmunds, Brittan, Hardinge, Dr. Crowell, Hull, Peebles, and others, there is not one word in opposition to marriage, but always it is sustained, and purity in its relations inculcated.

In the five great papers in the United States in its support, the three in England, the two in Australia, the twenty-five in France, the five in Germany, the three in Holland, the four in Italy, year by year the highest, purest, most spiritual morality is advocated. I briefly quote from "Religion of Man and Ethics of Science," a book which has sold many editions, and voices the belief of Spiritualists.

"Love is not free, nor can it be."....

"The highest form of marriage, as taught and exacted by the Christian church, endures until death. Vastly higher and purer is the ideal which extends this union into the infinite future where every stain of earthly passions shall perish, and soul be drawn to soul by the holiest love." P. 312.

There are not as many divorces among Spiritualists as among those who do not profess its belief. Queen Victoria was so fully persuaded that Prince Albert was with her, although dead, that she held herself sacred to him. In this devotion she met the hearty approval of all Spiritualists. If the teachings of this "demon religion" is so terrible, it should appear in demonic lives of its receivers. There should be an increasing ratio of criminals. The charge has been made and I collected the reports of nearly all the penitentiaries and prisons of this country and Canada and found that in all the vast army of criminals therein confined, not a single one was set down as a Spiritualist!

Of cases reported, nearly 90 per cent had in early life been under religious influences. And yet we are not so unjust and uncharitable as to hold religion responsible. For the startling charge that Spiritualism is a "maniac-making religion," the character of its believers are in evidence. If it is, then they should exhibit a much larger percentage of insane than non-believers. Mediums as a class should show marked mental aberration.

Is this a fact? Is there more insanity among Spiritualists than among churchmembers or the world at large?

Dr. Eugene Crowell, at the time president of the Edison Light Company of New York, secured reports of fifty-eight of the leading asylums for the insane in the United States. Of the 23,328 inmates the cause assigned for 59 was Spiritualism, and for 412 to religious excitement.

Dr. Nichols, Superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane, at Washington, D. C., in which nearly a thousand patients are inmates, said: "I see a paragraph attributed to Dr. Forbes Winslow, is going the rounds of the newspapers, stating that there are ten thousand lunatics in the United States who were made insane by Spiritualism. My observation leads me to suppose that there may be one per cent of truth in that statement."

From these accurate statistics, religion is responsible for seven times as many cases of insanity as Spiritualism, and yet we generously say that it is not a "maniacal religion," because people, possibly on the verge of insanity from other causes are affected.

As for the assertion that "Spiritism (Spiritualism) is the foe to all moral, intellectual and material progress," it is erroneous to falsehood. Colonel Stanford, of California, was a life-long Spiritualist. He claimed that he was assisted by spirit influence and advice in his vast undertakings. He accumulated one of the largest fortunes on the Pacific Coast. By direct spirit advice he founded the university which bears the name of his son in spirit life. Mrs. Stanford was with him in his work, and after his death completed the plan they had mutually agreed upon. His Spiritualism was not a "foe" to his material progress, and wealth was never put to better use.

A column might be readily filled with the names of men and women, leaders in the walks of literature, Science and the affairs of the world, beginning with Sir William Crookes, Wallace, Weber, Fichte, Wm. and Mary Howitt, Flammarion, Hiram Powers, Alex Aksakof, Prof. James, who have become believers in the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism.

The bravery of Mr. Quackenbos, to oppose this army of thinkers who are at least his equals in patience of research, honesty of purpose and clearness of reasoning, with his unsupported opinion, and the language of a zealot, rather than the calm impartiality of science of which he professes to be an advocate, is a manifestation in psychology which we commend to his earnest consideration.

There is not a moral precept that Spiritualism does not advocate, not one it conflicts with, or ignores. Its ideal character is the angel unselfish even to "doing all for others." They who accept it and make it a part of their lives cannot otherwise than make for righteousness.

If Mr. Quackenbos' assumption be true it only accounts for the psychical phenomena. The equally important, known as physical, as rappings, moving of physical objects, appearances, etc., remain unexplained. Even the psychical portion is explained too well, for if the "transliminal" is able to receive impressions from others in the body, why not from spiritual beings? Mr. Quackenbos grants this as a logical conclusion.

A medium receives communications purporting to come from spirit friends. Spiritualists say he is able to do so because sensitive to such influence. Mr. Quackenbos says it is through and by means of the "transliminal." There is the same causes, the same effects. There is only a difference in name. We eliminate the equation to its simplest terms and there remains, Transliminal— Impressibility— Mediumship.

TEXTS CREDITED TO THE SAVIOR.

German Professor Has Collected Sayings Not Found in Gospels—Inherent Evidence That They Were Uttered By Christ to His Disciples.

Professor Harnack, a widely-known and liberal professor of theology in the University of Berlin, Germany, has made a collection of the sayings of Christ that are not contained in the New Testament, but which he maintains must be genuine on the strength of internal evidence. Some of these sayings are:

"It is more blessed to give than to receive," although it is not in the gospel it is noted by St. Paul as having been said by Christ.

"He is guilty who troubles the spirit of his brother." This is from fragments of the gospel to the Hebrews, quoted by St. Jerome:

"You should never be joyful save when you behold your brother in love."

"The seeker shall not rest until he finds, and when he finds he shall be astonished."

"I shall choose out the good. Those are the good whom my father in heaven has given me."

"In that which I find you therein shall ye be judged."

Speaking to one who was at work on the Sabbath:

"If thou knowest what thou doest thou are blessed; if thou knowest it not then are thou accursed and keepest not the law."

"Who is near me is near the father; who is far from me is far from the kingdom."

"Hast thou seen thy brother? Then has thou seen God."

Professor Harnack comes to the conclusion that these sentences are so varied and cover so large a field in ethics and religion that there is no reason to suppose that the four gospels contain anything like a complete account of Christ's sayings or teachings on any one branch of morals or religion. That much of what he said and did is forever lost to the world he is quite certain. He believes that at the time the four evangelists lived there was an immense amount of material to choose from which is now lost, and this being so, the extraordinary similarity of all four accounts raises suspicions which it is exceedingly difficult to allay.

NOTICE OF ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The seventh annual convention of the New York State Association of Spiritualists will be held on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, June 3, 4, and 5, at Empire Hall, corner North Salina and West Genesee streets, in the city of Syracuse, N. Y. There will be good speakers and phenomenal mediums; choice music under the direction of the Syracuse society. A list of speakers and mediums will be published later. All earnestly and cordially invited to attend. Individual membership, $1 per year. HERBERT L. WHITNEY, Secretary.

Modern Spiritualism

A Lecture Delivered by Mrs. H. P. Russegue, Springfield, Mass.

I have taken for my subject this afternoon: What are the signs and aspects of Modern Spiritualism, and why does Spiritualism, as a religion, differ from any other formulated religion of the past?

The word Spiritualism implies more to us, a deeper meaning to the thoughtful mind than the name of any other ism known to man. There are reasons for the knowledge that it involves, there are foundations upon which its theorems are based, there are bases upon which rest, like the eternal truths of the universe, its laws. Its scientific aspects are many, because it belongs to, is a part of, and evolves the intellectual propensities of the human race. It is the innate force of the mind, the domination of the spirit, the exercise of intellectual faculties of a kingdom over which human reason holds entire sway.

Spiritualism does not belong to the religious world alone, as religion is commonly interpreted; it does not belong to that world which is classified as above or superior to the every-day life of man. It involves the physiology of his body; it involves the air that he breathes, it involves the forces of nature; it involves the universe of which he is a particle correlated to every other particle consisting the universe. He must bring out this universe, of which he is a lesser part, its potencies. He is the instrument upon which every force of nature is exercising its power; he is the element through which is shining the majesty, and greatness, and divinity of a higher and holier law that belongs to human nature than has ever before been brought into the realm of religious thought.

The religion of man is supposed to be the intellectual part of his being. The higher element or strata of his existence. It is the spiritual consideration or conception of holy thoughts, and holy things, and holy laws, but Spiritualism belongs to the world as a scientific truth, because its religion is incontrovertible. It penetrates every condition, every element, every particle, every force, every law, that inheres, or dominates, human life. It has no realm by itself. It is not separated from earthly things; it is not brought down and separated from spiritual things, but it reduces to spirit every condition of life that prevails in a whole creating worlds. There is nothing in this universe that cannot be reduced to spirit, to ether. There is nothing in this universe but that can be reduced to its primeval condition, and it shows in its reduction the domination of a divine, straight-forword, straight-carrying law, and that law is so direct, and it applies to every condition of life so clearly, so definitely, so really, that you cannot escape its behests, try as you may. You may pervert the course, as you make a ray of light shine upon you obliquely, by interfering with its direction. It may be diverted from its course, or perverted from its application, as you divert a stream of water, carrying it out of its channels into any course you may select, but it will reach its ultimate. Pervert it, or divert it, as you please, it will reach the culminating point to which the law directs, without variableness or shadow of turning in the ultimate. The rocks that are bound upon your hillsides can be reduced to gas, they can be reduced to spirit. The trees, every fibre of which they are composed, can be reduced to ether. The grasses, the grains of sand, the dwellings in which you live, every condition of the material world, can be reduced to spirit, and obedient to its inherent law. This much for the spiritual relationships of the material world to the spiritual nature of man.

It has been said by the scientist that gold, in making its own light, and submitted to its own law, can be refined or reduced to a condition that it is no longer gold. This is not true; it may be reduced to the gases that compose gold, and those gases may be scattered, or diverted from the law of cohesion by which they are brought together, and they may not be constituted into the globules of gold, but the elements themselves cannot be destroyed by any scientific application, or any law, that is known to man. However, those elements can be brought together, subject to law, and it is possible, when you have reduced these materials to their primary gases, that you may bring them back to their legitimate manifestation.

Every particle of matter that is composed in the human body belongs in this realm of the outer world. You have every element gleaned from the material life expressing itself through your physical body, and the laws by which that physical body is dominated, the laws that are expressing themselves through your different manifestations, are as spiritual in their application, as are the laws that dominate your spiritual thought. Your bodies are but the instruments, they are but the organs manipulated by your own spirituality. They are but the elements through which the expression of your spiritual life is being given to the world about you. Fiske said, in his wonderful sermon on "Evolution," "When I look to the world, and see what it has brought forth as its fruits, I can look to Eternity, and believe that the possibilities of that Eternity are beyond my concept." Why? Because there is nothing in the universe so low but that it has entered it, and become a part of human life.

Now then, what is it that spiritualizes these parts? What is it that elevates, that purifies, that clarifies, that adjusts all these parts to each other. It is the spiritual law of life, the spiritual force of the universe, the spiritual potency of matter, a mind cohering in that which is best and noblest, showing that from the foundation the germ is evolving out of the lesser, the greater, the grander, the mightier, the nobler, the diviner law, the diviner life.

Dr. Abbott said: "The man who does not believe that the grains upon the shores of the ocean are not spiritual manifestations, the man who does not believe that the tree that is upon the top of the highest mountain, that sends forth its branches like a protecting arm, the man who does not believe that the horse I drive is not a product of spiritual law, I want nothing to do with intellectually." What does he mean? He means that the spiritual life that manifests itself in the one, adjusts itself to the needs of the other, and relates the whole, and through this the world is unified, and this conception runs back in olden times, way back into the history of Paganism, for out of it we recognize the unity, and the unity signifies a whole, and the parts of which this whole is composed, is that which makes the universe. That universe is one, and it takes all there is in nature, in man, in heaven, and earth, in spirit, and in matter, to make them found in one. Thus the universe was named, whether men conceived of the great unity of life or not. It was named as many authors seem to foretell the events of a coming time from an inner conception, and as they call it, without a reason. Shakspeare said, "There are sermons in stones, and books in running brooks, and good in everything." What does that mean? It means that there is a lesson. No, it means that there is a law, and there is no law of which man can conceive, unless that law expresses itself, unless it defines itself. There is a law in stones, a language that speaks, that tells the story of their existence, that tells the formation, that speaks their history, that defines the law, that inheres their being. Tells the great story that is formulating itself through the expression of that law in men. There are sermons in stones, whether Shakspeare knew of such a thing as psychometry or not, no man can tell. There is a law back of all this, that seems so narrow, and so limited, whose limitations we can compass, that is greater than our intellects can define, and what is that law? The law of human intellect, and man has never sounded its depths, or its heights, but it lives, and it must in future ages reveal itself. Men speak more frequently than they realize more profound words of wisdom than they are able to fully measure. There is in this wonderful language of the material world the history of all you say. God, or law, or spirit, or good, or divinity, or whatever name you choose to employ, this inhered life writes itself upon everything that is. The man who conceived of the form of this article of furniture (table on platform) has left the impress of his mind upon it, those who have handled it, who have laid their hands upon it, who are using it, have left their daguerreotype upon it, and as time advances they will see those lives, and they will preach the sermons that words do not utter to your understanding.

Psychometrists will tell you of the formation of the rocks, the elements of which they are composed. They will go down into the depths of the earth, and will separate the different strata one from the other. They will tell you of the wonderful growths of life that have been made manifest, and they will tell you that the wonders of nature have written themselves upon everything that has been left in their order in the formation of this world. And what do you find? It is the science of life, it is the science of evolution, of the spiritual evolution of the universe, the science of the wonderful growth of mind, and who dares to say that anything that can write its own history, has no mind, has no intellect, is subject to no law, cannot define its power, cannot speak its language, cannot convey its meaning to the world, and carry its usefulness out of the wants of mankind.

If man was so superior to the universe of which he is a part, or if he was so separated from it that he lived wholly independent of it, he might then consider that the laws were not legitimately united which governed both. But science has forged the link, that time or change cannot break. It is the chain of progress, the chain of development, the chain of divine growth, the chain of spiritual history, that is writing itself upon every particle of matter, upon every thought, every deed, upon every impulse of human life. The spiritual aspects of Spiritualism are those which govern these conditions.

Modern Spiritualism has by no means confined itself to the seance room; it has not limited itself to a single message from an individual spirit to a friend. Spiritualism is by no means measured by these messages. Spiritualism means the Spiritualism of all life, and we must know what that Spiritualism is, and we must know it by the scientific relationships that bear between mind and matter. Now then, inasmuch as we have reached this point, let us see how Modern Spiritualism has involved this universe. In the astronomy of this solar system, we find an elliptical circle. Why? Because all nature grows in circles, develops in circles, the grain of the tree is circular. The tree is cut, and you measure its age by its rings. You measure the age of your ox by the rings on its horns. You measure the age of the rock, and a geologist can tell you by the rings of the various strata that belongs to its life. All nature has moved on and on in circles, religion has developed itself in a circular manner. Philosophers, scientists, mathematics, everything, has evolved this wonderful eternal progress of moving in a circular progressive manner.

Spiritualism, according to its language, and its manifestation, not only involves these laws, and manifests them in the figures through which you receive your manifestations from the higher life, when you are not conforming to a new law, not to a new principle, but to a fixed law that is as eternal as God, and belongs to all the past, as well as all the future. That circle is circling about all the world. You have in your atmosphere the oxygen, and hydrogen, and nitrogen. The nitrogen, if extracted from its companions, would become to you a poison. The carbon of your bodies in passing off would never be neutralized, if it were not for these conditions of the air. The water that you are drinking is composed of hydrogen and oxygen. The light through which you see is the wonderful medium through which is passing the lessons that God is writing upon all nature. The darkness is the seance room of the universe. All these conditions are incident to the development of the inherent laws of the life of man, as well as the inherent laws of the life of nature.

Spiritual manifestations have involved all these conditions, from the earliest intelligent language that has come from the spiritual world. You will find there have been outlined to your mind the conditions of a spiritual existence that was composed of matter, sublimated, and spiritualized, and created, according to the conditions of human existence. These conditions belong to no one, but all. They are a part of everything. They constitute the universe. Spiritualism in its language has required all the elements of nature through which it has communicated itself to the intelligence of man. It has utilized electric force. It has made better individuals. It has concentrated that force upon the nervous organization of man, and has spoken its lessons through those tributaries to the great world without us.

Spiritualism has used the universe as an instrument through which it has defined itself. What has been the result? Mental telegraphy, spiritual communication. It is just as spiritual when it is from mind to mind, as if you were in the other country. It is just as spiritual if you send the message of love, or condolence, or sympathy, to a friend away from you on the earth, as it is from the spiritual world. It is as spiritual if they bring you the message upon the electric vibrations that are going from you out to every other human being, as is the spiritual message that you will sit around a table to accept. Telegraphy is as spiritual, only it is reduced to the conditions with which you are familiar, but when you stop to think, it has been interpreted to you that the spirit is what you do not see, a spirit is what you do not hear, a spirit is something outside of you, yourself. Did you ever see a spirit, did you ever hear a spirit, did you ever know anything of a spirit, independent of the universe through which it utters itself to you? Never. The vibrations of sound, the undulating waves upon which sound is conveyed, are as necessary to the utterance of the voice of a spirit, as they are to your voices, and who speaks through you. Who speaks? the lips are not the sounds, the vocal cords are not the sounds, the whole organization of man is not the speaker. It is his spirit that tells the story, and speaks the word of life, not death.

Thus the world is moving on. In spiritual photography, what is the law there. There is the same necessity for conditions, as there is in material photography. You who turn up your noses at the conditions, remember, were it not for the conditions of light, you would never know the starry skies above your head. You would never trace the pathway of a comet. You would never know of the wonderful systems that are formulating, and the new worlds that are creating about you in this system. Conditions are individual, and in spiritual photography it is necessary that the camera upon which the picture is taken, through which it shall be reflected, must be as carefully adjusted, and as obedient to the law, and must carry out those vibrations of light and shade as truly as the science that prevails amongst men on earth.

Spiritual writing, what does it involve? Spiritual writing involves not only the action and operation of the spiritual line, but it involves the obedience of the body, of the matter of which this body is composed, that shall obey the mandate of that spirit.

Spiritual rappings, what is it that induces them? It is as obedient to a scientific law, as is the tick of the telegraph; it is composed of the same conditions, incident to the production of those sounds, as the batteries through which the electric forces are sending your messages that have girdled the world, and thus every manifestation of spiritual life is as scientific in its interpretation, in its application, as any law that is involving the mysteries of earth. The spiritual forces are in each condition, and the adjusting of these forces brings to you the wonderful results that tell you of the eternity of souls. Spiritualism is a science. No man can comprehend its lessons, until he has studied carefully the messages it sends him, and those messages encompass the world. No man can know what Spiritualism implies, from its modern standpoint, until he has made a study of himself. The particles of matter that compose his body are just as important to the embodiment of its spirit, as are the particles of matter that compose the body of Jupiter or Mars. It is as important that he should be held in his spiritual life by the same law by which he maintains his specific gravity, as that he shall be held by fifteen pounds to every square inch of his physical body. It is as important that these laws shall dominate his life, and the science of Spiritualism involves every known science that can manifest itself to our understanding. It speaks its own language, it tells its own story.

When you stop to consider, there has never been a physical manifestation of progress, that has not been accompanied by a spiritual utterance of development. The communication that came at Hydesville was in close companionship to the telegraph that came to Morse. The wonderful mental telegraphy that has been talked of, and dreamed of, and has been working amongst men in the last decade, has wrought out by mental telegraphy the connection of mind to mind. Why? Because the elements of this universe are alike, are akin to each other, and are as important for the transmission of thought in the one instance as in the other, and let me tell you, friends, that the X-rays that look through wood and stone are only the physical clairvoyance that is comparable to the spiritual clairvoyance that looks into your heart, or hearts. Thus the spiritual world is here, and you are in it, and of it, you are one of the grains that form the whole, the unit, of the universe.

Anent Materialization.

To the Editor:—I would like to say to Mr. W. F. Jamieson one thing: He may convince weak-kneed Spiritualists (and no one cares a fig whether he does or not) that materialization, or even the return of spirits, is not true. He may convince them because, Spiritualists sitting on the fence, ready to come down at any body's beck or call are not worth the dynamite to blow them up, to the cause or to any other truth. But there is a class he cannot teach—and they are growing—that know the truth of materialization for themselves. This is a class who were mostly born, not made mediums. This is a class to whom cabinets or audiences, or, seemingly even conditions are not necessary. The writer is among them. I am not a public medium—never was, never expect to be; but have friends among those who are, and hope to have more.

That in places there are frauds must be true. It is in the market, in politics, in religion, in science, and even investigators might find it among themselves. But for all that, fraud is not universal. Honesty is not dead, nor does it even sleep. There are mediums among this latter class, materializing mediums. All hail to them! They will live and their names go down the ages long, long after their detractors are buried in the dust of oblivion.

The reason is manifest. Materialization and the return of spirits in every form—for it is protean—is a truth. Truth is immortal. It is untruth that does not survive.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. O. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. O. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T. P., 629 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storyettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest:"

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

HUNTING FOR THE ONE TRUE CHURCH.

THE TRUE CHURCH.

To the Editor:—I send you copy of a poem, "The True Church," given me by a friend; the author is unknown. It may interest the readers of The Progressive Thinker.

HAMILTON DE GRAW.

Shakers, N. Y.

The True Church.

I asked a holy man one day,
"Where is the one true church, I pray?"
"Go round the world," said he, "and search,
No man hath found the one true church."
I pointed to a spire cross-crowned,
"The church is false," he cried and frowned.
But murmuring he had told me wrong
I pointed to the entering throng.
He answered, "If a church be true
It hath not many, but a few."
Around the font the people pressed,
And crossed themselves from brow to breast.
"A cross," he cried, "writ on the brow
In water. Is it Christ's? Look thou,
Each forehead frowning, sheds it off.
Christ's cross abides through scowl and scoff."
Then looking through the open door,
I saw men kneeling on the floor.
Faint candles by the daylight dimmed,
Like wicks by foolish virgins trimmed.
Fair statues of the saints in white
As now their robes are in God's light.
Sun ladders dropped aslant, all gold,
Like stairs the angels trod of old.
Above, below, from nave to roof
He gazed, and said in sad reproof,
"Alas! who is it understands
God's temple was not made with hands."
We walked along a shaded way,
Beneath the apple blooms of May,
And came upon a church whose dome
Bore still the cross, but not for Rome.
We brushed a cobweb from the door
And gazed within the sacred floor.
"Do prayers," he said, "the more avail
If murmured nigh an altar rail?
Do tongues that taste the bread and wine
Speak truer after by that sign?
Does water sprinkled from a bowl
Wash any sin from any soul?
The very priest in gown and bands
Hath living lips and dirty hands."
"He speaks no error," answered I.
"He says the living all must die.
The dead all rise and both are true,
Both wholesome doctrines, old not new."
My friend replied, "He aims a blow
To strike the sins of long ago,
Yet shields meanwhile with studied phrase
The evil present in these days.
Does God in heaven impute no crime
To prophets who belie their time?"
We walked along among the tombs,
The bees were in the clover blooms,
The crickets leaped to let us pass
And God's sweet breath was on the grass.
We spelled the legends on the stones,
The graves were full of martyr's bones,
Of bodies which the rack once brake,
In witness for the dear Lord's sake.
Of ashes gathered from the pyres
Of saints whose souls fled up through fires.
I heard him murmur as we passed,
"Thus won they all the crown at last.
Which men now lose by looking back
To find it at the stake or rack.
The stake and rack have gathered grime
God's touchstone is the passing time."
Just then, amid some olive sprays
Two orioles perched and piped their lays,
Until the gold beneath their throats
Shook molten in their mellow notes.
Then from the church a tuneful psalm
Rolled forth upon the outer calm.
"Both choirs," said I, "are in accord,
For both give worship to the Lord."
Said he, "The tree-top song, I fear,
Fled first and straightest to God's ear.
If men bind other men in chains,
Then chant, doth God accept the strains?
Do loud-lipped hymns his ears allure?
God hates the church that harms the poor."
Then rose a meeting-house in view
Of bleached and weather-beaten hue.
Where plain of garb and pure of heart
Men kept the church and world apart,
And sat in waiting for the light
That dawns upon the inner sight.
Nor did they vex the silent air
With any sound of hymn or prayer.
But on their lips God's hand was pressed
And each man kissed it and was blessed.
I asked, "Is this the true church then?"
"Nay," answered he, "a sect of men.
And sects that lock their doors in pride;
Shut God and half his saints outside.
The gates of heaven, the scriptures say,
Stand open wide by night and day.
Whoso shall enter hath no need
To walk by either church or creed.
The true church showeth men the way.
The false church leadeth men astray.'
Whereat I still more eager grew
To shun the false and find the true.
And, naming all the creeds, I sought
What truth, or he, or both they taught.
Thus, Augustine: Had he a fault?
My friend looked up to yon blue vault.
I said, "The circle is too wide."
"God's truth is wider," he replied.
And Augustine on bended knee
Saw just the little he could see.
So Luther sought with eyes and heart
Yet caught the glory but in part.
And Calvin opened wide his soul,
Yet could not comprehend the whole.
Not Luther, Calvin, Augustine
Saw half the vision I have seen."
Then grew within me a desire
That kindled a flame of fire.
I looked upon his [illegible] brow
Entreating, T[illegible] who art thou?
When by the light that filled the place
I knew it was the Lord's own face.
Through all my blood a rapture stole,
It filled my body and my soul.
I was a sinner and afraid,
I bowed me in the dust and prayed,
O! Christ, the Lord, end thou my search
And lead me to the one true church.
Then spake he, not as man may speak,
"The one true church thou shalt not seek.
Behold it is enough," he said,
"To find the one true Christ, its head."
And straight he vanished from my sight
And left me standing in the light.

Ohio Spiritualists, Attention!

The sixth annual convention of the Ohio State Association of Spiritualists will be held in the city of Columbus, May 27, 28, and 29, in the Board of Trade auditorium. Three sessions will be held daily during the entire convention. All societies are earnestly requested to send their full quota of delegates, and individual members are urged to be present in person. Business of importance is to come before the convention, in which every Ohio Spiritualist is interested.

Local societies and members desiring to offer amendments to the constitution must file the same with the secretary prior to April 25, 1904, as none can be legally acted upon, received after that date.

Full particulars regarding program, etc., will be given in a future issue of The Progressive Thinker.

THE SPEAKING DIAL.

Most Satisfactory In Holding Communication With the Spirit World.

In my letter to Prof. Hyslop, published in a late issue of The Progressive Thinker, I incidentally referred to the use of a speaking dial.

This has brought out many letters of inquiry concerning its merits.

As I am looking after several business enterprises and cannot spare the time to do all justice, and as all Spiritualists and students of the occult are interested in any subject that promises a more complete communion with friends passed over, I will give my views on the subject for the benefit of all.

I will start out by saying that it is the most satisfactory form of communicating with spirit friends I know, providing it is properly developed.

Another thing in its favor is, it will give good results to an average of at least three out of every five persons, especially those of ages between 12 and 40. The best results are obtained through the mediumship of young girls.

A better idea will be obtained if I give my own experience. Several years ago I concluded to develop one. My wife and myself held a sitting of about 30 minutes every evening for about 10 days before we could detect any movement of the table, and at first the force was so weak we were doubtful as to whether it was not our own muscular movements. Every evening thereafter the force grew stronger and the communications became more clear until at the end of three months it worked to perfection.

During the following three years we used it almost daily, and to go into all the details would require too much space. The peculiarities of that manner of communication, however, I desire to touch upon rather than what actually occurred.

1. You can "talk back," as the old lady said. You can ask questions and hold a long interview of one or two hours, if you desire. Have a stenographer present and take down long interviews on almost any subject.

2. If you are doubtful as to the identity of the spirits with whom you are communicating, you can put them on the "quiz," and compel them to prove their identity, either by tests or their personal peculiarities.

3. No two spiritualities work the dial in the same manner. The individual peculiarities are as marked as the handwriting or voice of your friends you meet every day. In a short time you will know the moment a strange spirit commences to work the dial.

4. In operating a speaking dial the medium is not under control and the personality of the medium is not reflected in the communications received.

5. The best and most satisfactory communications are obtained when the sitter's mind is occupied with some other subject, such as conversation with some one present upon some other subject.

For instance, when working the dial, I ask a question, and while the spirit is recording the answer, I usually turn and enter into conversation with some one present upon some other subject, until another person announces the answer.

If I undertake to read the answer myself as fast as it is given, my mind interferes and the answer is more than likely to come jumbled.

6. The force that enables communication, is the will power of the spirit. The will power of the sitter will retard communications where over-anxiety is permitted.

I have demonstrated this by experiments. With certain persons sitting opposite me at a table I can by exerting my will power cause a table to tip or move in any direction. For this reason the sitter's mind should be diverted while the spirit is responding and writing out an answer to a question.

Should a person rig up a speaking dial and expect it to prove a regular telephone, they will be mistaken.

It will probably respond to their touch within a few days, but it requires from two to six months to fully develop it, and after being developed certain rules must be complied with if clear and pleasing communications are obtained.

It requires three years to become an expert mechanic or to master almost any department of knowledge or profession, and it requires three months to perfect the workings of a speaking dial.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600.00 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

Mediumship Has Made Him Healthy.

In your paper of March 5th, there is an article headed, "Information Wanted in Reference to Mediumship and Its Effects."

I was a believer in Spiritism and Spiritualism 25 years before witnessing any phenomena. In 1882, I commenced attending seances, mostly of the social kind, and reading the literature of Spiritualism, and making a scientific study of it. In a few months I began to occasionally feel waves of spirit thoughts and feelings, which increased till I was satisfied that a band of workers wanted to use me as an instrument of a good work. Then I considered the question of its desirability. To be entirely absorbed in it as some mediums were, I would not be. My health had declined so that all my work was done with more or less suffering.

I finally formulated a proposition to human beings who were real persons in my judgment—not shadows. Every word was carefully weighed. "If there is a band of spirits who want to use me and will raise my health to that condition that most of the time, I shall work with a relish, as in younger days, I will do it without material interference with my business or social relations."

Mark the meaning of those words. I expected that it must be a small degree interfere with my business and social relations. I would do, not such work as I chose, but "your" work. Ever since I have held that agreement as binding as any I ever made with people in earth life.

Two years from that time I found that I was working with the same joy in activity that I did in boyish sports, or work when a young man. I frankly acknowledged to my spirit co-workers that they had performed their part of the agreement. Henceforth, I was morally bound to perform mine, with as strong a moral obligation as can be.

Since then it has been a joy to live, though several times I have with the co-workers figuratively gone down into hell and brought up some person lost in vice and earthliness, and in a stupor, and incapable even of consciousness, and raised him to a soul-living, an active and useful spirit-life. More than half of my share of the work has been subjective; a smaller share objective.

Yet I am farther from being a physical or mental wreck than when I commenced, 22 years ago.

Modern Spiritualism

A Lecture Delivered by Mrs. H. P. Russegue, Springfield, Mass.

I have taken for my subject this afternoon: What are the signs and aspects of Modern Spiritualism, and why does Spiritualism, as a religion, differ from any other formulated religion of the past?

The word Spiritualism implies more to us, a deeper meaning to the thoughtful mind than the name of any other ism known to man. There are reasons for the knowledge that it involves, there are foundations upon which its theorems are based, there are bases upon which rest, like the eternal truths of the universe, its laws. Its scientific aspects are many, because it belongs to, is a part of, and evolves the intellectual propensities of the human race. It is the innate force of the mind, the domination of the spirit, the exercise of intellectual faculties of a kingdom over which human reason holds entire sway.

Spiritualism does not belong to the religious world alone, as religion is commonly interpreted; it does not belong to that world which is classified as above or superior to the every-day life of man. It involves the physiology of his body; it involves the air that he breathes, it involves the forces of nature; it involves the universe of which he is a particle correlated to every other particle consisting the universe. He must bring out this universe, of which he is a lesser part, its potencies. He is the instrument upon which every force of nature is exercising its power; he is the element through which is shining the majesty, and greatness, and divinity of a higher and holier law that belongs to human nature than has ever before been brought into the realm of religious thought.

The religion of man is supposed to be the intellectual part of his being. The higher element or strata of his existence. It is the spiritual consideration or conception of holy thoughts, and holy things, and holy laws, but Spiritualism belongs to the world as a scientific truth, because its religion is incontrovertible. It penetrates every condition, every element, every particle, every force, every law, that inheres, or dominates, human life. It has no realm by itself. It is not separated from earthly things; it is not brought down and separated from spiritual things, but it reduces to spirit every condition of life that prevails in a whole creating worlds. There is nothing in this universe that cannot be reduced to spirit, to ether. There is nothing in this universe but that can be reduced to its primeval condition, and it shows in its reduction the domination of a divine, straight-forword, straight-carrying law, and that law is so direct, and it applies to every condition of life so clearly, so definitely, so really, that you cannot escape its behests, try as you may. You may pervert the course, as you make a ray of light shine upon you obliquely, by interfering with its direction. It may be diverted from its course, or perverted from its application, as you divert a stream of water, carrying it out of its channels into any course you may select, but it will reach its ultimate. Pervert it, or divert it, as you please, it will reach the culminating point to which the law directs, without variableness or shadow of turning in the ultimate. The rocks that are bound upon your hillsides can be reduced to gas, they can be reduced to spirit. The trees, every fibre of which they are composed, can be reduced to ether. The grasses, the grains of sand, the dwellings in which you live, every condition of the material world, can be reduced to spirit, and obedient to its inherent law. This much for the spiritual relationships of the material world to the spiritual nature of man.

It has been said by the scientist that gold, in making its own light, and submitted to its own law, can be refined or reduced to a condition that it is no longer gold. This is not true; it may be reduced to the gases that compose gold, and those gases may be scattered, or diverted from the law of cohesion by which they are brought together, and they may not be constituted into the globules of gold, but the elements themselves cannot be destroyed by any scientific application, or any law, that is known to man. However, those elements can be brought together, subject to law, and it is possible, when you have reduced these materials to their primary gases, that you may bring them back to their legitimate manifestation.

Every particle of matter that is composed in the human body belongs in this realm of the outer world. You have every element gleaned from the material life expressing itself through your physical body, and the laws by which that physical body is dominated, the laws that are expressing themselves through your different manifestations, are as spiritual in their application, as are the laws that dominate your spiritual thought. Your bodies are but the instruments, they are but the organs manipulated by your own spirituality. They are but the elements through which the expression of your spiritual life is being given to the world about you. Fiske said, in his wonderful sermon on "Evolution," "When I look to the world, and see what it has brought forth as its fruits, I can look to Eternity, and believe that the possibilities of that Eternity are beyond my concept." Why? Because there is nothing in the universe so low but that it has entered it, and become a part of human life.

Now then, what is it that spiritualizes these parts? What is it that elevates, that purifies, that clarifies, that adjusts all these parts to each other. It is the spiritual law of life, the spiritual force of the universe, the spiritual potency of matter, a mind cohering in that which is best and noblest, showing that from the foundation the germ is evolving out of the lesser, the greater, the grander, the mightier, the nobler, the diviner law, the diviner life.

Dr. Abbott said: "The man who does not believe that the grains upon the shores of the ocean are not spiritual manifestations, the man who does not believe that the tree that is upon the top of the highest mountain, that sends forth its branches like a protecting arm, the man who does not believe that the horse I drive is not a product of spiritual law, I want nothing to do with intellectually." What does he mean? He means that the spiritual life that manifests itself in the one, adjusts itself to the needs of the other, and relates the whole, and through this the world is unified, and this conception runs back in olden times, way back into the history of Paganism, for out of it we recognize the unity, and the unity signifies a whole, and the parts of which this whole is composed, is that which makes the universe. That universe is one, and it takes all there is in nature, in man, in heaven, and earth, in spirit, and in matter, to make them found in one. Thus the universe was named, whether men conceived of the great unity of life or not. It was named as many authors seem to foretell the events of a coming time from an inner conception, and as they call it, without a reason. Shakspeare said, "There are sermons in stones, and books in running brooks, and good in everything." What does that mean? It means that there is a lesson. No, it means that there is a law, and there is no law of which man can conceive, unless that law expresses itself, unless it defines itself. There is a law in stones, a language that speaks, that tells the story of their existence, that tells the formation, that speaks their history, that defines the law, that inheres their being. Tells the great story that is formulating itself through the expression of that law in men. There are sermons in stones, whether Shakspeare knew of such a thing as psychometry or not, no man can tell. There is a law back of all this, that seems so narrow, and so limited, whose limitations we can compass, that is greater than our intellects can define, and what is that law? The law of human intellect, and man has never sounded its depths, or its heights, but it lives, and it must in future ages reveal itself. Men speak more frequently than they realize more profound words of wisdom than they are able to fully measure. There is in this wonderful language of the material world the history of all you say. God, or law, or spirit, or good, or divinity, or whatever name you choose to employ, this inhered life writes itself upon everything that is. The man who conceived of the form of this article of furniture (table on platform) has left the impress of his mind upon it, those who have handled it, who have laid their hands upon it, who are using it, have left their daguerreotype upon it, and as time advances they will see those lives, and they will preach the sermons that words do not utter to your understanding.

Psychometrists will tell you of the formation of the rocks, the elements of which they are composed. They will go down into the depths of the earth, and will separate the different strata one from the other. They will tell you of the wonderful growths of life that have been made manifest, and they will tell you that the wonders of nature have written themselves upon everything that has been left in their order in the formation of this world. And what do you find? It is the science of life, it is the science of evolution, of the spiritual evolution of the universe, the science of the wonderful growth of mind, and who dares to say that anything that can write its own history, has no mind, has no intellect, is subject to no law, cannot define its power, cannot speak its language, cannot convey its meaning to the world, and carry its usefulness out of the wants of mankind.

If man was so superior to the universe of which he is a part, or if he was so separated from it that he lived wholly independent of it, he might then consider that the laws were not legitimately united which governed both. But science has forged the link, that time or change cannot break. It is the chain of progress, the chain of development, the chain of divine growth, the chain of spiritual history, that is writing itself upon every particle of matter, upon every thought, every deed, upon every impulse of human life. The spiritual aspects of Spiritualism are those which govern these conditions.

Modern Spiritualism has by no means confined itself to the seance room; it has not limited itself to a single message from an individual spirit to a friend. Spiritualism is by no means measured by these messages. Spiritualism means the Spiritualism of all life, and we must know what that Spiritualism is, and we must know it by the scientific relationships that bear between mind and matter. Now then, inasmuch as we have reached this point, let us see how Modern Spiritualism has involved this universe. In the astronomy of this solar system, we find an elliptical circle. Why? Because all nature grows in circles, develops in circles, the grain of the tree is circular. The tree is cut, and you measure its age by its rings. You measure the age of your ox by the rings on its horns. You measure the age of the rock, and a geologist can tell you by the rings of the various strata that belongs to its life. All nature has moved on and on in circles, religion has developed itself in a circular manner. Philosophers, scientists, mathematics, everything, has evolved this wonderful eternal progress of moving in a circular progressive manner.

Spiritualism, according to its language, and its manifestation, not only involves these laws, and manifests them in the figures through which you receive your manifestations from the higher life, when you are not conforming to a new law, not to a new principle, but to a fixed law that is as eternal as God, and belongs to all the past, as well as all the future. That circle is circling about all the world. You have in your atmosphere the oxygen, and hydrogen, and nitrogen. The nitrogen, if extracted from its companions, would become to you a poison. The carbon of your bodies in passing off would never be neutralized, if it were not for these conditions of the air. The water that you are drinking is composed of hydrogen and oxygen. The light through which you see is the wonderful medium through which is passing the lessons that God is writing upon all nature. The darkness is the seance room of the universe. All these conditions are incident to the development of the inherent laws of the life of man, as well as the inherent laws of the life of nature.

Spiritual manifestations have involved all these conditions, from the earliest intelligent language that has come from the spiritual world. You will find there have been outlined to your mind the conditions of a spiritual existence that was composed of matter, sublimated, and spiritualized, and created, according to the conditions of human existence. These conditions belong to no one, but all. They are a part of everything. They constitute the universe. Spiritualism in its language has required all the elements of nature through which it has communicated itself to the intelligence of man. It has utilized electric force. It has made better individuals. It has concentrated that force upon the nervous organization of man, and has spoken its lessons through those tributaries to the great world without us.

Spiritualism has used the universe as an instrument through which it has defined itself. What has been the result? Mental telegraphy, spiritual communication. It is just as spiritual when it is from mind to mind, as if you were in the other country. It is just as spiritual if you send the message of love, or condolence, or sympathy, to a friend away from you on the earth, as it is from the spiritual world. It is as spiritual if they bring you the message upon the electric vibrations that are going from you out to every other human being, as is the spiritual message that you will sit around a table to accept. Telegraphy is as spiritual, only it is reduced to the conditions with which you are familiar, but when you stop to think, it has been interpreted to you that the spirit is what you do not see, a spirit is what you do not hear, a spirit is something outside of you, yourself. Did you ever see a spirit, did you ever hear a spirit, did you ever know anything of a spirit, independent of the universe through which it utters itself to you? Never. The vibrations of sound, the undulating waves upon which sound is conveyed, are as necessary to the utterance of the voice of a spirit, as they are to your voices, and who speaks through you. Who speaks? the lips are not the sounds, the vocal cords are not the sounds, the whole organization of man is not the speaker. It is his spirit that tells the story, and speaks the word of life, not death.

Thus the world is moving on. In spiritual photography, what is the law there. There is the same necessity for conditions, as there is in material photography. You who turn up your noses at the conditions, remember, were it not for the conditions of light, you would never know the starry skies above your head. You would never trace the pathway of a comet. You would never know of the wonderful systems that are formulating, and the new worlds that are creating about you in this system. Conditions are individual, and in spiritual photography it is necessary that the camera upon which the picture is taken, through which it shall be reflected, must be as carefully adjusted, and as obedient to the law, and must carry out those vibrations of light and shade as truly as the science that prevails amongst men on earth.

Spiritual writing, what does it involve? Spiritual writing involves not only the action and operation of the spiritual line, but it involves the obedience of the body, of the matter of which this body is composed, that shall obey the mandate of that spirit.

Spiritual rappings, what is it that induces them? It is as obedient to a scientific law, as is the tick of the telegraph; it is composed of the same conditions, incident to the production of those sounds, as the batteries through which the electric forces are sending your messages that have girdled the world, and thus every manifestation of spiritual life is as scientific in its interpretation, in its application, as any law that is involving the mysteries of earth. The spiritual forces are in each condition, and the adjusting of these forces brings to you the wonderful results that tell you of the eternity of souls. Spiritualism is a science. No man can comprehend its lessons, until he has studied carefully the messages it sends him, and those messages encompass the world. No man can know what Spiritualism implies, from its modern standpoint, until he has made a study of himself. The particles of matter that compose his body are just as important to the embodiment of its spirit, as are the particles of matter that compose the body of Jupiter or Mars. It is as important that he should be held in his spiritual life by the same law by which he maintains his specific gravity, as that he shall be held by fifteen pounds to every square inch of his physical body. It is as important that these laws shall dominate his life, and the science of Spiritualism involves every known science that can manifest itself to our understanding. It speaks its own language, it tells its own story.

When you stop to consider, there has never been a physical manifestation of progress, that has not been accompanied by a spiritual utterance of development. The communication that came at Hydesville was in close companionship to the telegraph that came to Morse. The wonderful mental telegraphy that has been talked of, and dreamed of, and has been working amongst men in the last decade, has wrought out by mental telegraphy the connection of mind to mind. Why? Because the elements of this universe are alike, are akin to each other, and are as important for the transmission of thought in the one instance as in the other, and let me tell you, friends, that the X-rays that look through wood and stone are only the physical clairvoyance that is comparable to the spiritual clairvoyance that looks into your heart, or hearts. Thus the spiritual world is here, and you are in it, and of it, you are one of the grains that form the whole, the unit, of the universe.

Anent Materialization.

To the Editor:—I would like to say to Mr. W. F. Jamieson one thing: He may convince weak-kneed Spiritualists (and no one cares a fig whether he does or not) that materialization, or even the return of spirits, is not true. He may convince them because, Spiritualists sitting on the fence, ready to come down at any body's beck or call are not worth the dynamite to blow them up, to the cause or to any other truth. But there is a class he cannot teach—and they are growing—that know the truth of materialization for themselves. This is a class who were mostly born, not made mediums. This is a class to whom cabinets or audiences, or, seemingly even conditions are not necessary. The writer is among them. I am not a public medium—never was, never expect to be; but have friends among those who are, and hope to have more.

That in places there are frauds must be true. It is in the market, in politics, in religion, in science, and even investigators might find it among themselves. But for all that, fraud is not universal. Honesty is not dead, nor does it even sleep. There are mediums among this latter class, materializing mediums. All hail to them! They will live and their names go down the ages long, long after their detractors are buried in the dust of oblivion.

The reason is manifest. Materialization and the return of spirits in every form—for it is protean—is a truth. Truth is immortal. It is untruth that does not survive.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. O. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all affections of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. O. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T.B., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storyettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest:"

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

HUNTING FOR THE ONE TRUE CHURCH.

THE TRUE CHURCH.

To the Editor:—I send you copy of a poem, "The True Church," given me by a friend; the author is unknown. It may interest the readers of The Progressive Thinker.

HAMILTON DE GRAW.

Shakers, N. Y.

The True Church.

I asked a holy man one day,
"Where is the one true church, I pray?"
"Go round the world," said he, "and search,
No man hath found the one true church."
I pointed to a spire cross-crowned,
"The church is false," he cried and frowned.
But murmuring he had told me wrong
I pointed to the entering throng.
He answered, "If a church be true
It hath not many, but a few."
Around the font the people pressed,
And crossed themselves from brow to breast.
"A cross," he cried, "writ on the brow
In water. Is it Christ's? Look thou,
Each forehead frowning, sheds it off.
Christ's cross abides through scowl and scoff."
Then looking through the open door,
I saw men kneeling on the floor.
Faint candles by the daylight dimmed,
Like wicks by foolish virgins trimmed.
Fair statues of the saints in white
As now their robes are in God's light.
Sun ladders dropped aslant, all gold,
Like stairs the angels trod of old.
Above, below, from nave to roof
He gazed, and said in sad reproof,
"Alas! who is it understands
God's temple was not made with hands."
We walked along a shaded way,
Beneath the apple blooms of May,
And came upon a church whose dome
Bore still the cross, but not for Rome.
We brushed a cobweb from the door
And gazed within the sacred floor.
"Do prayers," he said, "the more avail
If murmured nigh an altar rail?
Do tongues that taste the bread and wine
Speak truer after by that sign?
Does water sprinkled from a bowl
Wash any sin from any soul?
The very priest in gown and bands
Hath living lips and dirty hands."
"He speaks no error," answered I.
"He says the living all must die.
The dead all rise and both are true,
Both wholesome doctrines, old not new."
My friend replied, "He aims a blow
To strike the sins of long ago,
Yet shields meanwhile with studied phrase
The evil present in these days.
Does God in heaven impute no crime
To prophets who belie their time?"
We walked along among the tombs,
The bees were in the clover blooms,
The crickets leaped to let us pass
And God's sweet breath was on the grass.
We spelled the legends on the stones,
The graves were full of martyr's bones,
Of bodies which the rack once brake,
In witness for the dear Lord's sake.
Of ashes gathered from the pyres
Of saints whose souls fled up through fires.
I heard him murmur as we passed,
"Thus won they all the crown at last.
Which men now lose by looking back
To find it at the stake or rack.
The stake and rack have gathered grime
God's touchstone is the passing time."
Just then, amid some olive sprays
Two orioles perched and piped their lays,
Until the gold beneath their throats
Shook molten in their mellow notes.
Then from the church a tuneful psalm
Rolled forth upon the outer calm.
"Both choirs," said I, "are in accord,
For both give worship to the Lord."
Said he, "The tree-top song, I fear,
Fled first and straightest to God's ear.
If men bind other men in chains,
Then chant, doth God accept the strains?
Do loud-lipped hymns his ears allure?
God hates the church that harms the poor."
Then rose a meeting-house in view
Of bleached and weather-beaten hue.
Where plain of garb and pure of heart
Men kept the church and world apart,
And sat in waiting for the light
That dawns upon the inner sight.
Nor did they vex the silent air
With any sound of hymn or prayer.
But on their lips God's hand was pressed
And each man kissed it and was blessed.
I asked, "Is this the true church then?"
"Nay," answered he, "a sect of men.
And sects that lock their doors in pride;
Shut God and half his saints outside.
The gates of heaven, the scriptures say,
Stand open wide by night and day.
Whoso shall enter hath no need
To walk by either church or creed.
The true church showeth men the way.
The false church leadeth men astray.'
Whereat I still more eager grew
To shun the false and find the true.
And, naming all the creeds, I sought
What truth, or he, or both they taught.
Thus, Augustine: Had he a fault?
My friend looked up to yon blue vault.
I said, "The circle is too wide."
"God's truth is wider," he replied.
And Augustine on bended knee
Saw just the little he could see.
So Luther sought with eyes and heart
Yet caught the glory but in part.
And Calvin opened wide his soul,
Yet could not comprehend the whole.
Not Luther, Calvin, Augustine
Saw half the vision I have seen."
Then grew within me a desire
That kindled like a flame of fire.
I looked upon his reverend brow
Entreating, Tell me, who art thou?
When by the light that filled the place
I knew it was the Lord's own face.
Through all my blood a rapture stole,
It filled my body and my soul.
I was a sinner and afraid,
I bowed me in the dust and prayed,
O! Christ, the Lord, end thou my search
And lead me to the one true church.
Then spake he, not as man may speak,
"The one true church thou shalt not seek.
Behold it is enough," he said,
"To find the one true Christ, its head."
And straight he vanished from my sight
And left me standing in the light.

Ohio Spiritualists, Attention!

The sixth annual convention of the Ohio State Association of Spiritualists will be held in the city of Columbus, May 27, 28, and 29, in the Board of Trade auditorium. Three sessions will be held daily during the entire convention. All societies are earnestly requested to send their full quota of delegates, and individual members are urged to be present in person. Business of importance is to come before the convention, in which every Ohio Spiritualist is interested.

Local societies and members desiring to offer amendments to the constitution must file the same with the secretary prior to April 25, 1904, as none can be legally acted upon, received after that date.

Full particulars regarding program, etc., will be given in a future issue of The Progressive Thinker.

THE SPEAKING DIAL.

Most Satisfactory in Holding Communication With the Spirit World.

In my letter to Prof. Hyslop, published in a late issue of The Progressive Thinker, I incidentally referred to the use of a speaking dial.

This has brought out many letters of inquiry concerning its merits.

As I am looking after several business enterprises and cannot spare the time to do all justice, and as all Spiritualists and students of the occult are interested in any subject that promises a more complete communion with friends passed over, I will give my views on the subject for the benefit of all.

I will start out by saying that it is the most satisfactory form of communicating with spirit friends I know, providing it is properly developed.

Another thing in its favor is, it will give good results to an average of at least three out of every five persons, especially those of ages between 12 and 40. The best results are obtained through the mediumship of young girls.

A better idea will be obtained if I give my own experience. Several years ago I concluded to develop one. My wife and myself held a sitting of about 30 minutes every evening for about 10 days before we could detect any movement of the table, and at first the force was so weak we were doubtful as to whether it was not our own muscular movements. Every evening thereafter the force grew stronger and the communications became more clear until at the end of three months it worked to perfection.

During the following three years we used it almost daily, and to go into all the details would require too much space. The peculiarities of that manner of communication, however, I desire to touch upon rather than what actually occurred.

1. You can "talk back," as the old lady said. You can ask questions and hold a long interview of one or two hours, if you desire. Have a stenographer present and take down long interviews on almost any subject.

2. If you are doubtful as to the identity of the spirits with whom you are communicating, you can put them on the "quiz," and compel them to prove their identity, either by tests or their personal peculiarities.

3. No two spiritualities work the dial in the same manner. The individual peculiarities are as marked as the handwriting or voice of your friends you meet every day. In a short time you will know the moment a strange spirit commences to work the dial.

4. In operating a speaking dial the medium is not under control and the personality of the medium is not reflected in the communications received.

5. The best and most satisfactory communications are obtained when the sitter's mind is occupied with some other subject, such as conversation with some one present upon some other subject.

For instance, when working the dial, I ask a question, and while the spirit is recording the answer, I usually turn and enter into conversation with some one present upon some other subject, until another person announces the answer.

If I undertake to read the answer myself as fast as it is given, my mind interferes and the answer is more than likely to come jumbled.

6. The force that enables communication, is the will power of the spirit. The will power of the sitter will retard communications where over-anxiety is permitted.

I have demonstrated this by experiments. With certain persons sitting opposite me at a table I can by exerting my will power cause a table to tip or move in any direction. For this reason the sitter's mind should be diverted while the spirit is responding and writing out an answer to a question.

Should a person rig up a speaking dial and expect it to prove a regular telephone, they will be mistaken.

It will probably respond to their touch within a few days, but it requires from two to six months to fully develop it, and after being developed certain rules must be complied with if clear and pleasing communications are obtained.

It requires three years to become an expert mechanic or to master almost any department of knowledge or profession, and it requires three months to perfect the workings of a speaking dial.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

Am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

Mediumship Has Made Him Healthy.

In your paper of March 5th, there is an article headed, "Information Wanted in Reference to Mediumship and Its Effects."

I was a believer in Spiritism and Spiritualism 25 years before witnessing any phenomena. In 1882, I commenced attending seances, mostly of the social kind, and reading the literature of Spiritualism, and making a scientific study of it. In a few months I began to occasionally feel waves of spirit thoughts and feelings, which increased till I was satisfied that a band of workers wanted to use me as an instrument of a good work. Then I considered the question of its desirability. To be entirely absorbed in it as some mediums were, I would not be. My health had declined so that all my work was done with more or less suffering.

I finally formulated a proposition to human beings who were real persons in my judgment—not shadows. Every word was carefully weighed. "If there is a band of spirits who want to use me and will raise my health to that condition that most of the time, I shall work with a relish, as in younger days, I will do it without material interference with my business or social relations."

Mark the meaning of those words. I expected that it must be a small degree interfere with my business and social relations. I would do, not such work as I chose, but "your" work. Ever since I have held that agreement as binding as any I ever made with people in earth life.

Two years from that time I found that I was working with the same joy in activity that I did in boyish sports, or work when a young man. I frankly acknowledged to my spirit co-workers that they had performed their part of the agreement. Henceforth, I was morally bound to perform mine, with as strong a moral obligation as can be.

Since then it has been a joy to live, though several times I have with the co-workers figuratively gone down into hell and brought up some person lost in vice and earthliness, and in a stupor, and incapable even of consciousness, and raised him to a soul-living, an active and useful spirit-life. More than half of my share of the work has been subjective; a smaller share objective.

Yet I am farther from being a physical or mental wreck than when I commenced, 22 years ago.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

MISSIONARIES' NOTICE.—All mail for E. W. and C. A. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, should be addressed for the present as follows: No. 725 West Jackson street, Bloomington, Ill.

James E. Campbell writes from Denver, Colo.: "The Spiritual Church of Truth, leading society of Denver, is closed for an interval, through critical illness in the family of its noted pastor, Mrs. Virginia Bryan, who was compelled to cancel her engagement and return to Chicago. This announcement is made with deep regret, as Mrs. Bryan was fairly started upon a most successful administration. Her lectures were of the very highest order, and with her own charming personality, was rapidly winning the hearts of the people, who tender her their most affectionate sympathy."

B. G. Sweet writes from Kansas: "I now have the ten premium books, and I intend to keep on adding to my library so long as you offer such very liberal premiums to subscribers to The Progressive Thinker and I am able to pay for the same. I am sure that no Spiritualist can afford to be without The Progressive Thinker and the excellent premium books that you almost give away to your subscribers. How many among the regular readers of The Progressive Thinker would be willing to take ten dollars, and be deprived of the paper for one year? Surely, I would not."

Mrs. Eva McCoy, one of the finest test mediums in the state, will be heard in a lecture, Sunday evening, followed by tests. Those who have heard Mrs. McCoy should avail themselves of this opportunity of hearing her. She will be favorably remembered by many from a former visit here about a year ago.—Des Moines (Iowa) News.

Dr. G. N. Hilligoss, president of the Indiana Spiritualists Association, has been elected president of the Florida State Association of Spiritualists. Dr. Hilligoss lives in Cincinnati and will be a candidate soon for the position of president of the National Association. —Indianapolis (Ind.) Star.

Rolla Stubbs writes: "The Lake Minnetonka Spiritualist Association has postponed the dedication of its temple till May. Announcement will be given later."

Nemo writes from Spokane, Wash.: "A great many non-Spiritualists are warm friends of The Progressive Thinker, and wish it well all along the line. Say, that "Witch Story" in No. 747 is a 'hun,' isn't it? and it amply justifies the proud base line, 'The Progressive Thinker leads the procession.' Mr. Tuttle's answers to querists are very interesting. They are honest and fearless. Those in No. 748 are first-class from all points of view, and it is such fearless opinion that is creating a rapidly increasing interest in Spiritualism. Why doesn't Mr. Aber try for the $1,000. I am not fully satisfied concerning the truths claimed for Spiritualism, but am almost persuaded. Long life to The Progressive Thinker."

In a sensational petition filed with the district court at Waterloo, Iowa, George D. Anton charges that the last will and testament of his father, Philip Anton, was made under hypnotic influence, and that it should be set aside. The estate of Philip Anton is a large one, worth thousands of dollars. George Anton, acting for other members of the family, claims that a brother, William Anton, shortly before the death of his father secured hypnotic influence over him and dictated the will which was filed by the senior. In the will the other children of the family are almost left out, and the will is declared untrue and unjust by the petition. Serious charges are made in numerous places in the petition, and the trial of the case will be waited with interest.

Nellie Turner, secretary, writes from Niagara Falls: "The First Spiritual Society of Niagara Falls is still flourishing. Our pastor and president, Mrs. A. G. Atcheson, of Buffalo, has served this society for the past twenty-one months, and she has proved herself a very able and willing worker in the cause so dear to us all. Under her influence the society has been enabled to rise above the tide of opposition which every struggling society has to contend with.

W. D. Noyes writes: "The first two Sundays in March we held Spiritual services in Binghamton, N. Y., to small audiences. There are not many of our people there, and they are not financially able to employ a speaker. The last two Sundays of March we conducted services in the G. A. R. Hall of Scranton, Pa. The first meeting was small. The last service, March 27, the hall was filled to the doors, and those in attendance listened to our 56th anniversary discourse. Scranton has had no Spiritualistic services for years, and the friends are anxious for us to stay.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

VICTOR VOGEL'S ORCHESTRA AND BAND.—First-class music furnished on all occasions. Office and residence, 4217 Champlain avenue, Chicago, Ill. Telephone Oakland 1111. Mr. Vogel is a well-known Spiritualist of Chicago and a natural born musician. His orchestra will be most excellent at dances and entertainments given by Spiritualists, and will add much to the interest of the occasion. As a special feature of his musical work, he introduces many original novelties—imitations of birds, etc.

The public press speaks favorably of our services. We expect to remain here for some time, at 505 Linden street."

The members are justly proud of their pastor. Services are held in the Maccabees' Hall every Sunday evening. Mrs. Atcheson in her bright and interesting lectures gives out much knowledge of the grand truth of life beyond the grave and spirit return, and follows the lecture with spirit messages, bringing comfort to many sad hearts and providing the skeptic with much food for thought. Three seances for the benefit of the society have been held during the month of March, which were well attended."

Mrs. Alice Gehring writes from Denver, Colo.: "I wish to say to the readers of The Progressive Thinker that I am permanently located at 210 West Second avenue, Denver, Colo. I will be ready to work after the first week in April. I hold my meetings here on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evenings. I feel sure I will enjoy this atphere. The day I arrived here I saw people watering their lawns."

We learn from the Record-Herald that by the decisive majority of 316 to 269 the chamber of deputies, at Paris, France, passed the government bill for the suppression of all forms of teaching by the religious orders. This supplements the work begun by the former premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, in 1901. The first law suppressed the unauthorized teaching orders, which had for a long time carried on their vocation despite the lack of legal sanction. The new law does not make any distinction between authorized and unauthorized congregations, but sweeps away the whole fabric of teaching by religious orders, thus in effect substituting the system of state schools for those heretofore conducted by the orders. The bill, which still has to pass the Senate, though no very serious opposition to it is anticipated there, forbids all teaching by religious orders in the territory of France proper, and provides for the suppression within ten years of all orders actually holding an authorization to teach. An amendment which was carried despite the wishes of Premier Combes, renders the measure inapplicable to the colonies, but as the premier was careful to point out in the final debate, this does not affect the power conferred on the government by the law of 1901 of closing such schools in the colonies.

Theo. Franck writes from Louisville, Ky.: "Considerable interest is now being manifested in the spiritual meetings held weekly at the Church of Spirit Communion of this city, as the audience shows a continuous increase in attendance, also more intellectual concernment. Mr. Wm. Sharp, of New Albany, Ind., opened the service with an impressive prayer. Immediately afterward, Mr. Throndsen sang an inspiring solo. The conditions were in perfect harmony as the speaker, Mrs. Annie Throndsen, stepped upon the platform."

Mrs. Catharine McFarlin was called home from Battle Creek, Mich., on account of the serious illness of her mother, and all mail will reach her at Plainview, Minn., until further notice.

Geneva, N. Y.—It was announced Saturday by R. G. Chase, one of the trustees of the proposed William Smith College for Women, that Mr. Smith, the founder of the college, had decided to abandon the scheme, at least temporarily. Mr. Smith's plans to found a college here were made public last summer. It was to be somewhat on the plan of a Spiritualist institution and was to be located in Smith Park, Castle Heights, one of the finest locations in the city. The plans called for one massive building, the cost of which would have been $150.000. The contract was let to S. W. Woodruff of Buffalo, and the excavation work was finished and a portion of the cellar walls done lost fall. The founding of the college brought forth considerable comment because of the objects for which it was founded. The original idea of Mr. Smith was to establish a college on liberal lines, for the higher education of women. The especial aim of the institution was to have been the providing of ample opportunity for psychic research and the study of obscure mental phenomena.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Our last monthly party was a grand success. Our next will be held at Lakeside Hall, corner 31st street and Indiana avenue, Saturday evening, April 23. Our anniversary brought a crowd all day. The decorations, etc., were fine. Many children were baptized. We will continue these all-day meetings from 2 to 10 p. m., during the month of April. Our meetings are increasing in interest. Bring your lunch and enjoy all day the power of the spirit. Many are becoming healed, many are encouraged, and many are awakened to new light and truth. Two automobiles stopped at the hall Sunday to secure tickets for Farmer Riley's seance. He has held three privately for our people, and will hold one more before he leaves the city. His manifestations are wonderful and every one feels he is honest and sincere in all he does. We are bound to secure the best talent possible along all lines of psychic phenomena, to convince the people of spirit return."

Mrs. Lou Schwenessen writes from Muncie, Ind.: "The Independent Spiritualist Society of Muncie engaged Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, of Chicago, for the month of February. We were well pleased with his work; consider him a man of fine mind. His lectures were deep, and yet he made them so plain a child might understand."

A member writes from Detroit, Mich.: "In this city last October was organized the First Church of the Soul. Services are held every Sunday evening at 7:45, at 46 Grand River avenue. Mrs. Laura L. Crawford is president, assisted by the vice-president, Mrs. Jennie Line, Mrs. Minnie Sharlow, Mrs. Mary Steine, and other local mediums. These mediums are well qualified, and give the light and truth of our spiritual philosophy to starving humanity. Just before making the trip to Cuba, we were assisted by our beloved sister and co-worker, Rev. Marian Carpenter, whom we expect to have again in the future. Tests follow that astonish as well as convince the most skeptical."

Dr. Louis Schlesinger is now at Oklahoma. The Oklahoman of that city says: "Dr. Schlesinger claims that his object is to benefit mankind in bringing home to them spiritual truth; the power of the other world where those 'gone before' are happy and contented. There is no such thing as death, explains the Doctor. He is at the Illinois now and will be for some days. He will give free readings to all the poor and suffering, and asks the rich for a donation for a home he is building at his home city of Chattanooga, Tenn., where is building a home for the Spiritualists." In order to find out the exact truth in regard to the prospective "Temple" or "Home" for Spiritualists in Chattanooga, we wrote to Mr. W. A. Weigel, who replies as follows: "I have inquired about Dr. Louis Schlesinger's intention to build a Temple in Chattanooga, but I cannot find anyone who knows anything regarding it. Some of the Spiritualists do remember about his being here some five years ago, and at the time we saw a statement similar to the enclosed in one of our daily papers. My wife and friend went to see the man who seems so liberal to the Spiritualists of Chattanooga, but they were very disappointed because he would not give them any satisfaction on the subject."

H. F. Leighton writes: "On Thursday evening, March 24, Mrs. William Hilbert of the Progressive Spiritual Society of Chicago, gave an address on Spiritualism at the rooms of the Theosophical Society in Freeport, Ill. It was highly appreciated. We hope in the near future to form a society under the direction of Mrs. Hilbert."

A Buffalo (N. Y.) paper says: "About four hundred Spiritualists and others gathered last evening in the First Unitarian Church, the Church of Our Father, on Delaware avenue, near Huron street, and celebrated the 56th anniversary of the beginning of Modern Spiritualism. Leo Manger, president of the First Spiritual Church, opened the meeting after a selection by the choir. He briefly explained the purpose of the gathering, and then introduced the main speaker, Dr. George B. Warne, of Chicago. Dr. Warne is the vice-presidnet of the National Association of Spiritualists, and has gained some renown throughout the country as a speaker for the creed. He told of the remarkable spread of Modern Spiritualism, and prophesied that as those now without the pale came to realize the convincing demonstrations on which the belief rests and the beauty, uplifting goodness and consolation to be found in the communion with the spirits of those who had passed from their earthly forms, Spiritualism will spread even more rapidly than in the past. H. W. Richardson of East Aurora, president of the New York State Association of Spiritualists, and W. H. Bach, editor of the Sunflower of Lily Dale, made short addresses on Spiritualism. Some demonstrations with messages from spirits, were made by F. Corden White of Lily Dale, and Mrs. J. A. Murtha, of Baltimore, prominent mediums."

James Newton writes from Toledo, Ohio: "As we read The Progressive Thinker, we feel as if we would like the world to know that Toledo, Ohio, is not in any way in the background as to the grand and beautiful phenomena of materialization. Mr. J. B. Johnson, of our city, has many phases of physical power, but has not used them for a period of seven or eight years. On March 17 he entered the cabinet at 8 o'clock p. m. Mr. D. A. Herrick, speaker and message bearer for the Independent Spiritual Society for this month, attended and assisted on the outside. During the seance nineteen beautiful spirits came to the curtains of the cabinet, varying from little girls to ladies and gentlmen in full form. One beautiful spirit lady came to her sister in full attire of a nun, and was handed a beautiful bouquet of carnations and a rose by the sister. She took it in her hand and thanked her for it, and then stepped back to the curtain in view of all and dematerialized, and taking with her the flowers. There was not a particle left to be seen. We intend to have such conditions for our medium as to protect and cherish this beautiful truth."

Secretary writes from Spokane, Wash.: "The new thought forces in this field are decidedly active. We are on the aggressive and are pushing the principles of Truth strongly to the front. Though confronted by a great many obstacles during the past ten weeks, I have succeeded in holding open Pacific Hall for access by the general public each Sunday evening. A stranger in the city, and unsupported, but doggedly I stuck to my task until I am now proud to state through the columns of your paper that Spokane has an orgnized Temple of Mental Science, with 21 strong, active members, and our list is growing each passing week. We shall charter under the state law, open a circulating library, and push the work steadily forward, with open platform to all public speakers upon the lines of inner and spiritual unfoldment and truth. I shall ask the support of all the earnest thinkers who read your paper in the line of books, papers and new thought periodicals to help us spread the public educational work. Any donation will be gladly received and placed in the hall for the use of the public. Our officers are. W. Simon Charles, Temple president; J. E. Childs, vice-president; E. D. Burlingame, secretary and treasurer. Meeting place, Pacific Hall, 814½ Riverside avenue, Spokane, Wash. Donations to aid our temple work can be addressed to W. Simon Charles, 510 Third avenue, Spokane, who will gladly place such in our temple library for free circulating purposes. In one year we shall build and own our own public temple. This we are resolved on. Aid our worthy work."

Captain Geo. W. Walrond's lectures and test meetings at 512 Glenarm street, Denver, Colo., have been crowded throughout the season. Mr. Walrond writes us that he intends taking a vacation for the purpose of toning up health and renewing his strength. His meetings will be suspended between May 1 and September 1. He will attend to his professional mail order work as usual. All orders for astrological charts and business advice should be addressed to P. O. Lock Box 201, Denver, Colo.

Vine H. Hickox writes from Niagara Falls, N. Y.: "Strange though it may seem to the average mortal, there are but few individuals who have control of their own personality. The majority are swayed by external influence. Mortals are excitable beings, therefore, priestcraft and pulpit orators have held sway over the minds of the people in the past. Why? Because in order to work out their plan of salvation they have, as it were, by thought, speech, look, gesture and the mere wave of the hand, cast a mesmeric influence over their congregations. It is now commonly called hypnotism. These physical sensations may be employed to impress the mind of another, and when an action follows or an impression has been engrafted into the mind by the antics and exhortations of the priest or minister of the gospel, such action is suggestive hypnotism."

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

H. F. Coates writes: "The Church of the Spirit Communion celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism at Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue. Our hall was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and we had one of the largest audiences which has met with us. Each one seemed glad to be there and to be known as a Spiritualist. Our services consisted in short addresses by different mediums of our city, messages, recitations, and both vocal and instrumental music. From the continued attendance and interest which is manifested, I am prompted to say that our cause is progressing and long may it live. You will be welcome to our services which are held at 3 and 8 p. m. each Sunday."

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner writes from Beaumont, Texas: "I shall soon return to Galveston for the anniversary exercises at the Spiritual Temple. I have been working since I last wrote you from Bowie, in Galveston, Houston, Willis, and again here, this being my second visit, my first resulting in the chartering of what is known as The First Spiritualist Church of Beaumont. The friends here are doing everything to make a success of their society, and hope in the near future to have a church built on their own lot, open to all."

Mrs. L. D. Everett writes from Milwaukee, Wis.: "The First Golden Rule Spiritualists Society of Milwaukee celebrated anniversary day at the hall, 134 Grand avenue, Sunday, March 20. The program for the afternoon was musical and literary, selections in elocution and vocal solos being rendered, followed by a paper on the original spirit demonstrations through the Fox sisters, and from Mrs. Wheeler of La Crosse. The evening program consisted of the usual congregational singing, announcements and lecture and tests by Mrs. Wheeler, whose work was well liked and whose kindly and charitable spirit favorably impressed those present."

W. H. Hart writes from Allegheny, Pa.: It affords me great pleasure to send you Easter greetings from the members of the Independent Order of Free Thought Bible Spiritualists of Allegheny, Pa. We are gradually increasing in number and our dearly beloved pastor, Mrs. Emma Wadsworth Foster, is doing a grand work. She had for the subject of her lecture, March 20, What Spiritualism has done to benefit mankind. Her large and intelligent audience listened with marked interest to every word. After her lecture she gave messages from spirit loved ones. People who had been skeptics in the past said at the close of this remarkable meeting that they could no longer doubt the fact of spirit return. The Spiritualists of Allegheny have met many of the mediums, but up to date consider none quite so charming and sweet of voice and disposition as our own Emma W. Foster. This is a good field for good mediums and we will gladly welcome physical mediums. The many local mediums are doing well and adding new converts to the ranks."

Louise E. Zimmerman writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "The usual services are being held at the First Spiritualist Church in this city, and the interest continues. Oscar A. Edgerly has closed his two months' engagement, which has been one continued feast to his listeners, and gone to the Eastern states with the best wishes and God speed of those he has left and their hope of a return in the future. Educationally and scientifically do his controlling intelligences sound the depths and point to the heights of the philosophy of Spiritualism and the ultimate brotherhood of man. May he be spared for many years to come as one of Lights shedding the rays of Truth along the darkened pathway of seeking humanity. March 27 was observed as Anniversary Day. The usual Thursday evening message and test meeting was held Tuesday evening, Brother Edgerly leaving the city immediately after the services. Thursday, Anniversary Day proper, was observed by a select circle of friends at the residence of Brother and Sister Rhodes, and greatly enjoyed by all present. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, of Boston, Mass., serves the church during the month of April. May the good work go on in all climes."

B. E. Riggs writes: "I wish to inform the readers of The Progressive Thinker in regard to the work being done by Mrs. Emily D. King, of Girard, Mich. She has labored long and earnestly for the upbuilding of Spiritualism in her immediate vicinity, organizing societies and other auxiliary work to promote the good cause. She holds meetings at her own home, and at such times she has a house full of earnest seekers after the truth. The meetings are held at intervals of three weeks, and during the summer, grove meetings will be held near her home. She is an inspirational speaker of a high order; her guides are both eloquent and scholarly. She is a lady of high moral character. As a speaker she stands in the front ranks, and is called upon for many miles around to deliver funeral discourses. Mr. and Mrs. King are pioneers in the spiritual cause in this vicinity and have done much gratuitous work, and are worthy of more encouragement than is usually accorded to workers in this line of thought."

The fifty-sixth anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated by the Lynn (Mass.) Spiritualists Association in Cadet Hall, in a manner appropriate and befitting the occasion, and the services were attended by a large and appreciative audience. Dr. Alex Caird, once a resident of Chicago, is the honored president of the association.

W. S. Woods writes from Kokomo, Ind.: "The Spiritualist Science Society here has engaged Frank T. Ripley for the Sundays of April, and have secured a large hall, and look forward to a good attendance."

Samuel Isaac writes, under date of April 2: "A. P. Roberts, the well-known medium, has been obliged to remove from Milwaukee to Denver, on account of his wife's poor health. Brother Roberts has always been a friend to mediums and others in needy circumstances. His Friday circles were always well attended, and many a skeptic has found the truth at these gatherings. Some time ago a medium came to our city, died very suddenly and penniless. Brother Roberts, realizing the stigma if she were buried by the city authorities, took charge of the funeral and generously paid the expenses."

F. P. Lint informs us that Mrs. Inez Wagner and Mrs. Etta S. Bledsoe, of Topeka, Kansas, held public meetings in Atchison, on Sunday afternoon and evening, April 3.

D. A. Morrill writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "The New Thought Spiritual Society celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, March 27, in Good Templars' hall, 23 S. Division street. This was also the first regular meeting of the society, having organized March 20. The hall was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and the meeting was well attended. Mrs. D. A. Morrill conducted the services, and will occupy the rostrum during the month of April. There will be one service each Sunday at 7:30 p. m. An auxiliary will be formed, and the ladies will soon meet for that purpose."

B. T. Bradburn, Pike County's Judge, writes: "The past ten years that I have been identified, more or less, with politics have convinced me that something ought to be done to cleanse and purify the ballot box. There is no reason why this inalienable right of voting should not be extended to women. The ancient arguments and objections heretofore urged against her were and are unsound and entirely obsolete. Present conditions demand her services everywhere, and where she is present there is unmistakable evidence of purity. Why not then throw down this man-created barrier and open the franchise to her unrestricted and unlimited? When this thing called 'man' is in trouble of any character, who is it that brings cheer and sunshine into his life, lifts him up and inspires him to greater endeavor? It is the wife, mother and sister. Our nation mourns to-day from the corrupting influences of the demagogue and ward politician, or as we say down here, 'leg puller.' Who shall drive away this growing menace to public decency? Nothing in my mind, but the conquering influence of the women of our land. I have no faith in the oft-repeated assertion that it would tend to lower the standing of our women, but on the other hand, I hold that it would tend to elevate man, and that both sexes would meet upon that middle ground of higher and purer ideals. In other words, it is not a question of lowering the standing of women, but more properly one of elevating man."

Mrs. Sexsmith writes: "On Sunday, March 27, The Rising Sun Mission had for its speaker, Brother J. McFarland. The hall was filled as usual with a very attentive audience to listen to the remarks of our good brother. He is an advanced worker in our cause. He had many grand experiences to relate. Our Mission has closed its charter with 125 members, and we therefore feel greatly encouraged."

Mrs. Lily LeSieur writes: "I wish to remind our friends about the $1 party. It takes place Thursday afternoon and evening, April 7, Masonic Temple, Hall 512. Come and tell us how you earned your dollar that you donate to the Band of Harmony. The ladies will please bring luncheon. Supper at 6:15. We are sure to have a jolly, all-around good time telling our experiences. Don't miss it."

Jessie S. Petit Flint writes: "The First Spiritual Union of Corvalis, Oregon, observed the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, on Sunday, March 27, by serving cake and coffee at the close of their afternoon meeting. A cordial invitation was given to the whole congregation to remain. This was a surprise to the people, as it was the work of a few members and friends. A most enjoyable time was had. The day was marked by the absence of all discordant elements. Never have we felt more harmony prevail than on this occasion."

Mrs. A. E. Sheets will return to Grand Ledge, Mich., April 5, where she desires all mail sent. Her improvement we are glad to learn, has been quite marked of late, and she feels that in time she will be able to re-enter public work. Her heartfelt thanks are extended to the many friends whose letters cheered and helped her. It has not been possible for her to reply to all, but all have been appreciated, and will be answered later.

Mrs. Lottie Colleen writes from Jacksonville, Fla.: "I have spent a very pleasant season here through some of our friends who reached our city from the Southern Cassadaga Camp, en route to their northern homes, Mr. W. J. Colville being among the number. He very kindly gave us a lecture March 22, at the auditorium of the Woman's Club, on Mental Therapeutics. We had a very good attendance. The mayor of the city introduced the speaker. All present expressed their pleasure in having attended such a spiritual feast. Mr. Colville closed with one of his improvised poems, the subjects for which were given him from people in the audience. After the lecture the speaker with a party of friends repaired to the home of Mrs. Ingram, a very estimable lady, who had prepared a feast of good things. The evening was spent in a most enjoyable way, each one receiving a fine reading by Mr. Colville. Among those present at the banquet were Doctor and Mrs. Julia E. Hyde, of Lily Dale, N. Y., who have been spending the winter in our city, and although just here for rest and recreation and not in public work, nevertheless they have accomplished a great amount of good in their own quiet way, reaching many hearts."

Mrs. Amanda Coffman writes from 419 Crescent avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I have just returned home from my winter's work, and expect to stay there until camp season opens. On account of our home camp not going to be held this season, I have the first three Sundays not taken. I would be pleased to hear from societies needing a speaker for those dates. I will answer calls for funerals within a reasonable distance of Grand Rapids. Address me, or phone—Bell Phone 2098."

Arzella C. Clay writes "The Anniversary exercises were decidedly interesting in Grand Rapids, Mich. Eloquent addresses were delivered by Dr. J. C. Batdorf and C. W. Fellows. Fine messages were given by Dr. W. O. Knowles, Mrs. Belle Fuller and Mrs. Emeliss Blake. An inspirational poem was given by Mrs. C. H. Hinckley. Sickness and calls to other fields kept many away. Mrs. Amanda Coffman and W. V. Nicum were not present; we greatly missed them as they form important links in the fraternal chain of Spiritualism. The banquet was a success; among the ladies who furnished liberally for our comfort were Mrs. Ogden, Mrs. L. H. Austin, Mrs. J. Lindsey, Mrs. Hinckley, Mrs. Grey, Mrs. Sadie Herrick, Mrs. Lou Johnson and others. We parted with good will to all. Mrs. Winch and Mrs. Sarah L. Davis are yet on the sick list."

John C. Hemmeter writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "I want to do our cause the most possible good that I can, even at a sacrifice of certain would-be inspirational speakers claiming to be controlled by Jesus Christ, Demosthenes, St. John; in fact by every imaginary one, except common sense, and who in addition to our fakes do more injury to our cause at the present time than it can recuperate from in twenty-five years to come."

Will C. Hodge writes from San Diego, Cal.: "We have just closed our anniversary meeting, with a large attendance and much enthusiasm. The lyceum and our young people did nobly."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "On Sunday evening, April 10, Axel Guftafson will lecture for the Hyde Park Occult Society. Subject, Psychometry. That is something we all want to learn about; so should all hear him. Service at 7:45, No. 323 East 55th street. Mrs. Kline gives psychic manifestations. We will also hold another progressive euchre party on Tuesday evening, April 12, at the Club Room, 474 East 55th street, near Greenwood avenue. Six prizes, all hand-painted China, will be given. Game promptly at 8. Please remember the time. Score cards will be 25 cents."

Correspondent writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "The First Spiritualist Mission of Los Angeles, auxiliary of the California State Spiritualist Association celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism at Eagles' Hall, Los Angeles, March 27. Services began at 2:30. Inspirational poems were delivered by Mesdames Le Roy, Davis and Sullivan. Addresses were delivered by Mesdames Hammond, Bryan-Conley, Lenont of Seattle, Konkler, Pennington, and Dr. K. D. Wise. Tests and spirit messages were given by Mesdames Boise, Hammond and Bryan-Conley. At 5 o'clock a free luncheon was served and circles formed. At 8 p. m. the second service opened with singing by the congregation from The SpiritualWreath song books. Addresses were delivered by Mesdames Newcombe, Kratz Kate Hoskins, Mr. Sullivan and Dr. Chesbro. Tests and spirit messages were delivered by Mesdames Pennington, Lenont, Kratz and Maud Chesbro. The duets by Prof. Sullivan and wife and the songs rendered by the quartette were highly appreciated at both services. Every one had such a good time that the word harmony became unnecessary to be spoken of. In the afternoon the hall was well filled, while in the evening great crowds were turned away for the want of standing-room."

Mrs. Hilbert, pastor, writes: "The Progressive Society held a meeting in its hall, corner of North avenue and Burling street, on Sunday evening, March 24, 1904, to commemorate the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. It was a very enjoyable affair and consisted of quite an extensive program. The hall was filled to overflowing. The stage was profusely decorated with an abundance of the choicest flowers. Mr. H. H. Hill, our worthy president, managed the program. He opened the meeting after prayer by the pastor, with a few brief and appropriate remarks; then introduced Mr. D. W. McKenna, the speaker of the evening. Mr. McKenna's subject was 'Birth, Growth and Fruition of Modern Spiritualism. Mr. McKenna is a very logical, forcible and eloquent speaker. He has the happy faculty of using beautiful inspired poetry in his speeches. He did full justice to himself and the occasion. Following Mr. McKenna was a neat little poem rendered by Miss Harris, fitting for the occasion. Mrs. W. J. Howes spoke briefly and appropriately and then proceeded to demonstrate the truth of spirit return. She gave tests and spirit messages, all of which were recognized and well received. Dr. Freedman was next introduced and rendered a beautiful solo. He was compelled to respond to a generous encore. His wife played his accompaniment on the organ. Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom, secretary of the Illinois State Spiritualists Association was next on the program. Her guides took her completely under control, and one of them delivered a short scientific discourse on Spiritualism. Her little guide then gave spirit messages. She is always a favorite with her audience. Her tests were given in such a unique manner as to cause many of the spectators to laugh and enjoy themselves immensely. Miss Ihle then gave a very nice recitation which was very well received, after which Dr. Freedman demonstrated his gift of spirit healing. He is also a general practitioner, a gentleman and a scholar. Miss Magdaline Biel then gave a recitation full of pathos. This closed the exercises of the evening. The occasion was a very enjoyable one. Your pastor feels highly complimented by its success. We are going to have another entertainment at Heiser's Hall in the near future, at which time we expect most of the same talent with us again, and some new ones. We are doing all in our power to advance the cause."

Etta F. Cowan writes from Almond, Wis.: "A small but intelligent audience greeted Mrs. Frances Wheeler of La Crosse, Wis., in Almond Opera House, March 20. She was listened to with marked attention. The lecture was followed with tests which were clear-cut and convincing. In the evening friends gathered at the home of Mrs. J. S. Cowan and held a parlor meeting, which was enjoyed by all. Monday was devoted to readings, and could she have remained longer would have found much more to do. Mrs. Wheeler is a refined and cultured lady, a worthy instrument of the noble cause she advocates and ought to be kept constantly before the public. She came to us a stranger (being sent to us by our husband, who passed to the higher life, December 29, 1903) and left us with the bonds of friendship forever firmly linked."

R. F. Little, president writes: "Am pleased to state that the Seattle Spiritual Association (or First Spiritual Society) is gratifyingly prosperous, and our anniversary was a very great success."

J. M. White writes from Creighton, Mo.: "On the evening of March 31, a celebration of the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hansen, under the auspices of the Golden Sun Circle. The members of the G. S. Circle sat down to an elegant repast and afterwards an audience of the most prominent citizens of the town assembled to see and hear. A song was rendered by members of the circle, followed by a select reading and Golden Chain exercise from the Lyceum Guide. A brief history of the Hydesville demonstrations was given, followed by psychometric readings and an inspirational poem on 'Secret Societies,' was rendered by the writer, subject being given by a gentleman in the audience. The room was tastily decorated with evergreen for the occasion and many expressed a desire to attend the lyceum that we intend organizing next Sunday. After the exercises the guests expressed great pleasure at having been present. The Golden Sun Circle expects to be able to open the developing circle here to the general public in a few weeks as their medium is making rapid progress in his unfoldment. We are going to keep on with the good work here as long as we remain in mortal form."

Interesting Incidents in Connection With Obsession.

In speaking of so many kinds of obsession in your wonderful paper, I have this to say on the subject: I am a medium, and I talk to all kinds of spirits—that is common spirits. I don't claim to call great souls, but I do communicate with many. I get some wonderful messages, and my experience is this:

When an evil spirit claims my attention too long it has something to communicate that is very important. For an example, a friend I knew in earth life kept coming and would not let another spirit say one word for a long time. The man's name was Luke. I will not give his surname for fear his earth friends might see this article. So I said: "Luke, what kind of a place over there where you are?"

He said: "It is some[illegible] that will not wear out."

"Well, how about that lake of fire the preachers tell us about?"

"There is no fire in it, but it is pretty tough, though."

Just then I had a caller, and went to the door.

I am clairvoyant. I see the atmosphere full of spirits, of all sizes and kinds. Some of them have great white beautiful crowns, and some are bareheaded and apparently poorly clad. When my caller left, I stood looking out of the door. I saw a man and woman. The man had his arm around her waist, and she had her arm on his shoulder, and her face so close to his they almost looked like one face. They were sailing around, appearing so happy, like a feather on a light breeze, and some distance behind them were five or six bareheaded men, seemingly trying to catch up. Their movements were exactly like a fish trying to go up stream against a strong current. When they would almost catch up, the couple could sail out of reach easily, and still continue their loving embrace. It struck me all at once that Luke was trying to explain. I went back to my room and called, "Hello, Luke, is that you?"

"That me out there among them bareheaded men. Did you know me?"

"No, I did not see you plain enough."

"Well, it was me, old Luke. I want to tell you something. When I was on earth I had all the sweethearts, but over here the other fellow has them. I tell you, it is tough."

He went on to explain why it was so hard for him. He confessed to me that he had killed a stock-buyer shortly after the war, and spent the fifteen hundred dollars he had found in his pockets, in riotous living. He then begged me in the most pitiful manner to pray for him. I prayed to God to release him, as he was a victim of environment of the war of '61-'65. In a few moments after I commenced to pray, the influence took my hand once more and commenced to write, saying, "I feel better. That will do." He has never bothered me since.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

On February 8, Mrs. Deborah Davis passed to the higher life from her own home in Elk City, Kansas, at the age of 79 years, after an illness of eight weeks. She had been a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker and a reader of spiritual literature, and received much comfort and consolation in the beautiful truths taught therein. She was a practical Spiritualist, living to help others.

A DAUGHTER.

Passed to spirit life. Elliot Vinton White was born in Genesee county, N. Y. He came to Findlay, two years ago from Chautauqua county, N. Y., his home for many years, and where he was a pioneer. He has been a Spiritualist since the Rochester knockings; has read much in spiritual lines; also a reader of The Progressive Thinker. He was a man of deep thought and always ready to lend a helping hand. Services conducted by Frank T. Ripley.

COR.

March 7, Rev. G. C. Love, president of the State Spiritualist Association of Oregon, was called to Grant's Pass to officiate at the funeral service of Mrs. Lyrena Weaver. Mrs. Weaver was 61 years old and passed to higher life from typhoid fever. She was truly a good, pure-minded, unselfish woman, and leaves to mourn her departure for the higher life, two brothers and three sisters. There were many floral offerings and many friends assembled at the residence of her sister, Mrs. Wright, to attend the funeral on March 8. X.

Mr. Louis H. Kropp passed to spirit life, January 21, 1904. He was well known in Hamilton, Ohio, as being a Spiritualist. His age was 43 years.

Passed to spirit life, on March 12, 1904, at the home of Dr. A. O. Mudge, 338 West Broadway, Council Bluffs, Ia., Dr. H. W. Abbott, of Oakland, Cal. He was a lecturer on Spiritualism, theosophy, and the effect of light and colors on the human system.

C. O. KEMPSTER.

Passed to the higher life, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. D. A. Wallace, in McMinnville, Oregon, March 1, 1904, Lewis P. Pond, aged 86 years. He passed away a believer in Spiritualism. He was a member of Clackamas County Society for many years, and a member of the I. O. O. F. over sixty years. It being his request the remains were cremated. MRS. D. A. WALLACE.

Edwin Humphrey passed to spirit life March 10, after many months of suffering. His wife, a well-known medium, and himself were both earnest workers in the spiritual cause.

WILLIAM CASS.

Sycamore, Ill.

Passed to spirit life, Feb. 13, 1904, Mrs. Harriet P. Bicknell, beloved mother of Mrs. L. Clemines, 738 W. Madison street. Mrs. Bicknell had been a Spiritualist for many years, and lived its teachings of truth and love. The many beautiful flowers were tokens of love given by her many friends. The funeral service was conducted by Mrs. M. A. Burland.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Albert Tappert: Q. Is the living principle that evolves the offspring referable to the father or mother?

A. Perhaps no belief ever was fraught with more ruinous consequences, than the entirely false idea that offspring owe the debt of existence to the father. It is a very ancient belief, and is incorporated into the texture of the Bible, appearing in all the customs and sacred laws. By it the mother became the obedient slave of her lord and master, with no rights over her child, which belonged to the father, as entirely his, as a part of himself. It was a belief, formed in a savage age, by men absolutely ignorant of the laws of life, and has come down to the present, reflected in legal enactments which even now discriminate against the mother. For all the ages of the past it has degraded woman, and held her in bondage as the inferior, who had no rights in her children. Even her suffering was charged against her as a just punishment, for the temptation of the first mother, in far-away, mythic Eden.

A knowledge of anatomy and physiology, of recent years, has shown how mistaken were the old authorities, and how vicious the laws which have been enacted. The germ of every living being is produced, and sustained until it has independent life, by the mother. No fact in biology is more perfectly demonstrated than this, and it sweeps away all the accumulated errors of the past on this most vital subject.

All that can be claimed for the father, is the contribution of some subtle force, as yet indeterminate, of direction and modification, in the processes of growth.

C. W., Wilkesbarre, Pa.: Q. What is meant by direct and alternate electric currents? Is the direct or alternating current used in the arc lights? What is the use of a transformer?

A. The electric battery, acting by continuous chemical decomposition of its plates gives a continuous and direct current of low potentiality. Electricity generated by electro-magnetism which is used for motive power and light, generated as it is by an armature passing over a magnetic coil, the current being reversed twice at each revolution is necessarily alternate. This is rectified by a commutator so that the current is made to pass through the connecting wire in one direction. The current which flows from the electro-machine is of high potentiality, which gives it power to overcome resistance and be conducted to a distance without loss. But in this form it is not adapted for application as a motive power. By the transformer its potentiality is diminished and in the same ratio its volume increased. This may be illustrated and understood by comparison to a head of water. The high potential may be placed at a pressure of twenty feet, and if the gate is opened the water soon rushes out exerting great force. Now if the head is lowered to ten feet the water flows more slowly, the force is less, and the time of its exertion lengthened. The potential of lightning acting instantaneously is almost inconceivable. If it could be subjected to a transformer its tension let down and its volume increased, the instantaneous stroke might be prolonged into hours of continuous work. The current of high potential is conveyed to the station where it is to be applied and there transformed into a larger volume of lower potential, which is gauged to the work it is given to perform.

The alternate current is employed for the arc light, being less destructive to the carbon electrodes.

J. R. Lees: Q. How shall I proceed to gain a patent? And the cost?

A. There are many lawyers who advertise as patent solicitors, but probably there does not exist a more unscrupulous class of sharks in the business world. The charges they make depend on the gullibility and means of their victims.

The government fee for a patent is thirty-five dollars, and it should be, as intended by early legislation, all that is demanded to secure an inventor his rights. But it has become the rule for patent officials to ignore the very work for which they are supposed to hold their places, and receive their pay. The inventor, if he makes a personal application, is put aside and never reached. If he expects a hearing he must apply through an attorney. The attorney will charge five or ten dollars for making a preliminary examination, which means a comparison of the new invention with all of like character on which patents have been granted, to find out if it has not already been secured.

If the field is clear, drawings, model, and specifications are made, by the solicitor, and forwarded to Washington, with fifteen dollars. If the patent is granted, the other twenty dollars is paid. The solicitor's fee of reliable agents for the entire work, in cases where extra labor is not required, is forty dollars. Patent sharks, however, make this fee all they think their victims can bear.

Now as to patents, an inventor always thinks he has a gold mine in his invention. He may have, but the chances are ten to one that he has not. More than ten to one, or twenty to one, for not that proportion of inventions that are not losses to their inventors. There are several hundred patents on churns, for instance, and yet the old "dasher" holds its own, and for all-round purposes is not approached by the complicated substitutes. Washing machines, trusses and every fancy crook contrivance, from improvements in impossible flying machines to butter ladles. Hard-earned money is wasted and great anticipations go to naught in the majority of these schemes, which are not worth the paper on which the patent deed is printed.

The "improvements" on harvesting machinery, covered by patents, run into the thousands, yet how few have stood practical test, and are now embodied in the perfected machines.

This correspondent asks for further advice. If he really has something, easily adopted, labor-saving, and intrinsically valuable, he may be justified in taking the means provided for protecting his rights.

D. L. Scott: Q. Is the prophecy of Napoleon to be fulfilled?

A. This is the celebrated prophecy of the great Napoleon referred to: "Within the next one hundred years, the world will be either Cossack or Republican."

The San Francisco Call has a cartoon where before the crowned representatives of Europe backed by "Uncle Sam," the hand of the great warrior writes this fateful sentence. It has been frequently quoted, having prestige from its high source. It is called up by the war waged between Russia and Japan, which would appear to make a revision of the prophecy necessary, so that it would read: "The world is to be either Russian or Japanese." The Russian Empire has none of the resistless strength given it by the fancy of Napoleon. Its strategy overwhelmed his forces, and practically caused his ruin. It was natural for him to overestimate its power. Republicanism in the uncongenial soil of Europe has been slow of growth and the people easily oppressed by concessions of their robber rulers. There is no indication of a conflict between the autocracy of Russia and Republicanism, and the prophecy is wide of fulfillment, in fact the trend of events is farther and farther from its fulfillment.

To the Spiritualists of Wisconsin, Greeting:

Your attention is hereby called to the fifth annual convention of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, to be held in Whitewater, Wisconsin, April 18, 19, 20 and 21, 1904.

The Morris Pratt Institute Association has placed the beautiful auditorium in the Morris Pratt School Building at our disposal, thereby providing us with one of the finest halls in the city.

A first-class array of talent has been secured for the convention, thus assuring all comers a most interesting and profitable sojourn in the beautiful city of Whitewater. Among those who will participate in the exercises are Prof. W. F. Peck, of St. Louis, Mo., who is widely known as a powerful and eloquent exponent of the Spiritual philosophy; Rev. A. J. Weaver, the able superintendent of the Morris Pratt School, for many years a foremost worker in the cause of Spiritualism; Rev. Moses Hull, whose reputation as an orator and logician is world-wide, and Mrs. Mattie Hull, the well-known writer and lecturer. Aside from the above workers, Mrs. Francis D. Wheeler, of La Crosse, Wis., will be the message bearer, bringing greetings from the loved ones "Who have gone before," at each regular meeting. Mrs. Wheeler's work is of that class which brings conviction and comfort, and needs only to be heard to be appreciated.

Monday evening, April 18, a reception will be tendered the delegates and visitors, in the beautiful hall referred to above. Tuesday and Wednesday mornings and afternoons, and Thursday morning business session will be held for the transaction of state business; Thursday afternoon a memorial service will be held, in addition to which, the faculty and students of the Morris Pratt Institute will present an excellent program, which in itself will be a very attractive feature.

Hotels are all within a short distance of the convention hall. Those especially to be commended to visitors, are Hotel Walworth, which will be headquarters, rates $2 per day, and Hotel Whitewater, rates $1 per day.

Important matters will be considered at all sessions, and it is imperative that all Spiritualists who have the good of the cause at heart, be in attendance. Come and aid in the deliberations and general work of the convention. It will give you an opportunity to attend the regular meetings Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, in which the above mentioned workers will present the philosophical, ethical and phenomenal side of our progressive religion.

For further information write Will J. Erwood, secretary, La Crosse Wis. Don't fail to attend; the convention needs you and you need what you will get there.

REV. NELLIE K. BAKER,
President W. S. S. A.
WILL J. ERWOOD,
Secretary W. S. S. A.

MAN IS A GOD.

Silently falls eve's mantle gray,
After the sun's descending ray—
Sinks 'neath the glowing horizon
Denoting that the day is done.
The mantle gray deepens in hue,
The whirling worlds roll into view,
Luna's bright face, the queen of night,
Reflects on earth the Sun-God's light.
The human spirit like the sun
Illumes our mental horizon.
It animates our form of clay,
Unfolding slowly day by day.
Its transformations form a chain,
Each link one step to higher plane.
Man is a spirit on this earth,
He is the same after new birth.
The inspired seers clearly saw
Endless progression is the law
To spheres of light man will attain;
Soul consciousness he will retain
Ever seeking an ideal goal
No limitations bound the soul
No obstacle to bar his rise
He is a God in paradise.

Divine Telepathy.

SPIRITUALISM UNDER ANOTHER NAME.

Frank DeWitt Talmage on "Divine Telepathy."

The Editor-at-Large has constant calls to defend the walls from the attack of belligerents. The Devil who was leader in the solid forces of the churches, has been displaced by "the transliminal self," a goblin of the fancy, set up to lead the forlorn hope.

Only the four-corners red schoolhouse preacher now prates of the devil. "Subconscious," and "transliminal," sound scientific and grandiloquent, as though they meant something, although there is not a vestige of a thought or explanation behind them.

After this experience, it is refreshing to come suddenly on a sermon, from a thoroughly orthodox pulpit endorsing everything Spiritualism claims, even if it is labeled by another name.

Frank DeWitt Talmage has taken the place of his father, and his sermons are reported for the press syndicate after the same manner. Not as audaciously brilliant as the first Talmage, he is more sincere, thoughtful, and reliable. T. DeWitt Talmage was at heart a Spiritualist as proven by his discourse on Heaven, which was thoroughly Spiritualistic. He, it is true, allowed love of high-sounding phrases and bizarre expressions to betray him into the style of the negro orator, and copy the obscurity of John the Revelator, yet after this rubbish was cleared away, there was little to be objected to.

But, the pity of it!—he was a moral coward. After this sermon, he preached many others to destroy its effect, and prove he did not mean what he said; in fact meant the exact opposite.

We may hope the son has more backbone and common honesty, and will stand by his words.

In a recent sermon Frank DeWitt Talmage took an up-to-date subject for his text, and treated it in an up-to-date manner. It was "Divine Telepathy." Twenty years ago all the doctors were fighting mesmerism, as an unmitigated fraud, and all the clergy, as the work of the devil. Now the doctors are trying to have laws created making it criminal for anyone except doctors to dabble in the wonderful thing, and giving them exclusive right to use it, and the clergy are employing it to interpret the scriptures!

Ah, yes, the "world do move!"

"Divine Telepathy," with Rev. Talmage means Spiritualism. It is the rose under another name. It is true he is slightly mixed in his terms, and not clear in expression. He puts God in the place of spirits, while his illustrations prove that spirits have the place he assigns to God, yet for a young convert, all these slight failures to grasp the entirety, is pardonable. He has good intentions, but his theological phraseology, the old, worn rut his education confines him to, holds him fast, and he applies the old phrases to the new ideas which gives him a double meaning, one to the church believer, and quite another to the Spiritualist.

Telepathy has been receiving the attention of some of the most capable minds of the age, and has become a popular word. It means the influence of one mind over another, near or far removed. It also means the influence of mind over mind in the sense of all minds in the universe collectively, having an influence on every individual mind. Talmage uses it in the broader sense of God having this influence over the minds of men in the body or out of it. He says:

"As in the material world, so in the mental and spiritual world, there are facts and phenomena which we know to be certainly true, though we can not explain them. We must recognize rational results as such, although we can not tell the 'why' and the 'wherefores,' nor the causes which produced these results. For instance: We are nearly all ready to grant the power of human telepathy, or the influence of one human mind upon another human mind, even at a distance. Sitting in public meeting some night, you exercise the power of will upon a person, and soon he will turn round and look at you, although that person could give no rational reason why he turned and looked. Indeed, so powerful sometimes is this influence of one human mind over another that many students of criminology have come to the belief that some murderers who wield the dagger or aim the pistol may be merely the helpless and pliant instruments of unknown criminals, who have impelled them to commit their murderous deeds. Mesmerism, hypnotism, bewitchery, enchantment, are merely long names defining this mysterious power which almost everywhere in the intellectual world is beginning to be recognized, and men are asking whether it may not sometimes dethrone the supremacy of the individual will."

Again: "As one human mind has an influence over another human mind, we also know that there is a spiritual telepathy. A subtle, mysterious influence which the other world exerts upon our own. Visional messages, as direct and unmistakable as that which came to Peter upon the housetop of Simon's house in Joppa, may also come to us."

If there is a "spiritual telepathy," of what use is it, or how was it discovered if spirits do not use it? If they do, then what difference is there between the belief of the son of "the great preacher," and Spiritualism?

Further he continues: "When God speaks to man, he speaks to him when he is rational, when he is wide awake, when his senses are on the alert, not when he is cooped up in some dark deceitful retreat of a Spiritualistic medium, or when he is tossing about on his couch at midnight in uneasy slumber, as the result of his digestive organs having been overloaded. There is a vision of the spirit which comes from God, and one that is, like the nightmare, the product of our own brain under the disturbance of physical or mental conditions. There must be careful discrimination, lest we accept foolish fancies and mischievous impulses as the voice of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit.

Substitute "spirits" for God, and there is advice and a message which Spiritualists may take with profit. The "communications" "born of the flesh" should be discriminated from those "born of the spirit." Oh, that there were a sure test by which the impressions of appetites and desires could be absolutely distinguished from those from spiritual sources.

"What right has a man to imagine that he can get a vision from God by using the Bible as a fetish or an amulet, opening it at random, and expecting the first verse his eye falls upon to be God's judgment in reference to some undecided matter, as I have known in my own experience of two or three people being in the habit of doing? What right has a man, when in doubt about any matter, to go to a fortune-teller, or to a sorcerer, or a professor of divination, and to regard the voice of a professional charlatan as the voice of God"

Again substitute "spirit," and we may pertinently ask the same questions, adding, why when he has the means of receiving such influence within himself?

The meaning Talmage has in mind of "Divine Telepathy" may be better gained by the following quotations:

"Divine telepathy, as with Peter, is often manifested with God's children after some great trial or sorrow, or earthly misfortune has come upon them. When the casket is placed in the home it is apt to be felt, as Christ appeared unto Mary on the first Easter morn. It is very apt to be manifested vividly in times of bereavement, as it came to my companion with whom I journeyed through the Holy Land.

"How to explain this manifestation I know not. I would give you the simple facts, and let you judge for yourself. We were enroute from Beirut to Athens, by way of Smyrna. It was about 3 o'clock in the morning. I was awakened by my companion sobbing in his berth. 'What is the matter, Trouh?' I asked. 'Oh,' he answered, 'something has happened at my sister's home. I had such a strange vision about it. I was not asleep, but this vision has come upon me as an overwhelming reality.' 'Nonsense, man!' I answered; 'you are not a fanatic, are you? You were asleep, and had a bad dream; that is all.' I did not believe in God's visions then as I do now. My friend said nothing; but that vision made such an impression upon him that he took note of the time and the latitude and the longitude we were then in. From Athens we went directly home. So overpowering was his conviction of the reality of that vision, that instead of going at once to his Philadelphia home, he stopped first at a friend's residence not far from where he lived. 'How are the folks?' he asked. The friend answered, 'What, did you not receive any message lately? Why, your sister lost both her twin boys in one day. They both died of diphtheria within an hour of each other.' My friend asked the time. They died about the same time the wonderful vision came to him in the middle of the Mediterranean Sea. I ask you not to give a human interpretation of that manifestation. You can not. I cannot. From a human standpoint, was not that vision very strange? Can you interpret it from any supernatural causation?

"By divine telepathy we know what God wants us to do in a spiritual way, the same as Capt. Yount, an old California trapper, knew God wanted him to do some thing in a physical way. Rev. Dr. Bushnell tells this incident in one of his sermons, as it once was told to him by the hardy Westerner: One night Capt. Yount had a vision. It was midwinter, and he saw a company of bestormed emigrants perishing in the mountains from cold and hunger. 'He noted,' said Bushnell, 'the very cast of the scenery, marked by a long perpendicular front of white rock cliff. He saw the men cutting off what appeared tree tops, rising out of a deep gulf of snowdrift, and he noted the very features of the persons and the look of their particular dress.' Well, to shorten a long story, Capt. Yount the following day told one of his friends about this dream, and he described the scenery of the place where the emigrants were imprisoned in the snow. 'The friend said, 'Yount, I know where that place is you describe. It is in the Carson valley pass of the Sierras. I have seen in that valley the scenery just as you have described it.' What did Capt. Yount do? He realized that this was a vision sent by God. It was a summons to a rescue. Although his friends laughed at his superstition, he collected a party of men and went a long journey of 150 miles in midwinter to Carson Valley Pass, and there they found a company of perishing emigrants, in exactly the position the vision had pictured them."

Has the preacher forgotten "guardian angels," and are not their coming and going, the "Divine telepathy?" That is the idea he conveys, and has at heart, and simply covers up with his phraseology.

Then he says with feeling, and it requires no eloquence to enforce its acceptance:

"The divine telepathy comes to the despised man's home as frequently as it does to the ruler's palace. Who was Peter's host at the house where he had this divine vision? He was Simon the tanner. He was in all probability the most despised man in all the coast capital at that time. Among the Jews, the dealer in cured hides of animals was looked upon as a social outcast. The harlot, the murderer, the insurrectionist, were more respected than he. The condemned criminal might be pardoned of his crimes, even though he was the thief who waylaid the poor man on the road to Jericho; but the tanner's calling was never forgiven."

That was right with the apostles, it is right now, and under name of Divine influence is constantly being manifested. If this be so, and it is not denied, why the constant objection that spirits would not come to many who claim to be mediums because of their inferiority in social caste? If God comes to a tanner, the most despicable and outcast of society, why should a spirit object to using the same?

Yes, the "divine telepathy" of our angel friends comes to the most despised, and lowliest home. It comes to the outcast, the forsaken, for the angels' loving care knows no distinction in its benediction.

MEDIUMSHIP.

One Must Rise Above the Normal to Be a Medium.

The active principle of the universe, which, of course, is the life-principle—for motion constitutes life—is what we have been pleased to term, or what may be known by the terms: God, love, law, or spirit (intelligence understood, for the final effect, man, proves the nature of the cause from which he originated).

The passive principle we have named matter. Thus we speak of spirit and matter when we refer to the two entities—one positive, the other negative.

We know that friction produces electricity. Thus we may imagine that the friction of the two elements, or principles—spirit acting on matter, the positive on the negative—has produced a third: a universe of electricity, which we take to be the medium element between spirit and matter, or the agent for co-operation, as magnetism is the agent for co-operation between individualized spirit and man (Spiritism).

Material life (materialization) is the result. As in the macrocosm so in the microcosm. The coalition of the positive and negative produces new materializations—electricity (or magnetism when softened by contact with flesh), acting as the medium element for the introduction of spirit (life individualized) into the new creation.

Mediumship, then, is a condition, and, when favorable, permits of the co-operation of spirit and matter—whether it appertains to the universe or to its individualization—suns, planets, or human beings. And among the latter, when conditions are favorable, it permits of the co-operation of spirits and mortals. But as magnetism is the needed adjunct to produce these conditions, we may infer that electricity plays the same role in space. And as individualized spirit or intelligence is enabled to co-operate with and even control mortals for their personal and others' benefit, why should not universal spirit or intelligence control planets for their good or for that of their inhabitants? But as electricity may be needed to furnish or make the conditions, is it not possible that the sun's, which are grand electrical force-centres, become the agents for such effects? What a mortal medium is to a spirit, then, a sun is to God or universal intelligence. Is it a wonder that some of the ancients worshiped the sun? They did what many are doing to-day for light or comfort—appealing to their mediums as the channels through which this light or comfort must flow from the intelligences beyond or behind them.

God's medium, the Sun! Man's medium, the circle or battery established for that purpose. Electricity, God's co-operative principles; magnetism the spirits'. And as the sun furnishes the needed principle, so does the mortal medium (or sensitive, as it is this principle which qualifies him in accordance with the word), for phenomena, each to its kind.

But what gives the mortal this prerogative? As spirit is the active principle and matter the passive; and man a combination of both in his normal state, he must rise above the normal to become a medium or sensitive; (for, otherwise every mortal would be a medium, which we know is not the case).

Now, to rise above this state, or be by nature of the supernormal order, the individual must possess a larger percentage of spirit to matter in his composition—a superior spiritual to material vibration in his make-up, though not necessarily freed from materiality or animalism. A mortal may have numerous forces or principles, each expressing a virtue, a passion, a habit, a desire, a good or bad quality—spiritual and material sensibilities. But as soon as the former, in the aggregate exceed the latter, he becomes a medium, attracting electricity from nature to the extent of this excess. He thus has a surplus of nature's medium principle embodied in himself, and which surplus is utilizable for the operation of spirits. His so-called mediumship then is practicable to the extent of this supernormal quantity of electricity—which, however, is converted into magnetism in connection with a human life-entity—and we may apply the adjectives according to the phenomena accruing in his presence or through him personally, whether of a so-called physical or mental order.

Materialization, slate-writing, tests, inspiration, etc., depend upon condition, within the medium. As his forces per se characterize the man, so the relation of these forces to each other characterize his mediumship, just as the relation of elements towards each other produce different effects. In that respect a medium also becomes a chemical laboratory.

Now, whether a mortal is born thus, or elevates himself to this superior spiritual state by personal effort, is indifferent. But whether medium or not, all his forces must attain a superior spiritual vibration over its material or negative vibration to make him a perfected spirit. And while mediumship is a good aid towards this perfection, all who practice temperance and justice may rise to the same superiority—temperance in all things to preserve the vital force needed for the up-building of the spirit, and justice to inherit a harmonious vibration with spirit or God, which constitutes the happiness all are seeking; for sensualism weakens the immortal part of man (as it often does the mortal) and selfishness or injustice darkens it, both in understanding and appearance.

To develop a perfect, that is, a healthy spirit body, and understanding of its surroundings is the aim of life here. As mortals already we are seeking power and light, but we fail in our mission as mortals if we acquire it unjustly or unspiritually. No man can gather too much knowledge or do too much unselfish good; and it is through these two that heaven, so-called, is reached—that being the mediumship of salvation for the human soul.

Anniversary Exercises in Denver, Colo.

The Spiritualists of Denver gathered together in Howes' Hall, Sunday, March 27, to celebrate the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. The hall was crowded, and we were favored by having that grand worker, Georgia Gladys Cooley, preside. She never did better. The rostrum was covered with flowers, and the musical program was excellent. This made harmonious conditions, and the advent of Modern Spiritualism was handled in a masterly manner. It was shown how Spiritualism has liberalized all denominations. No one hears now of infant damnation, hell fire, eternal punishment, and such teachings given from the pulpits these days, and it is not so long ago that we were made to believe that salvation could not be had outside of the church.

Spiritualism is the only religion that can prove what it teaches—while others talk about immortality and resurrection when Gabriel blows his horn, Spiritualism gives the evidence of the continuity of life.

The profusion of flowers brought forth the highest inspiration of the guides of the medium, and the most beautiful thoughts were given in this connection. A great many said they had never heard anything so beautiful, and the writer, who has been in the ranks for thirty years, can add his testimony to theirs and say that in all his experience he has never heard before such elevating and ennobling thoughts expressed by any speaker.

The good conditions were also manifested in the messages given after the lecture. Thirty-four clean and clear tests were given, and all fully recognized. Many an anxious soul was brought nearer the spirit world and given unmistakable proof of spirit return, also receiving the consolation and comfort that no other religion could give. A splendid feature in connection with these demonstrations was that fully one-half of those receiving messages were skeptics, but honest skeptics, and freely admitted that they could not account for the messages from their spirit friends and relatives in any other way than that they were able to return and make themselves known.

The musical program arranged by Prof. M. T. Close and wife deserves especial mention.

Prof. Oscar Mayo first favored us with a piano solo, which was fully appreciated by the audience. Mrs. Mertie Moore followed with the favorite song, "For All Eternity." This called forth enthusiastic applause and was greatly enjoyed. Prof. Close and wife closed with one of their favorite selections which are always pleasing.

We expect to celebrate many anniversaries of Modern Spiritualism in Denver, but all agreed that we would always look back with pride and pleasure to the celebration of the 56th anniversary.

THE INVISIBLE WORLD.

Abstract of Lecture Delivered Before Church of Spirit Communion, Sunday, March 6, 4308 Cottage Grove Avenue, by Dr. J. H. Randall.

Few people from their general conduct do not appear to have a very just conception of the realm of life in which we live. It is only a short time ago, comparatively speaking, that some of the more intelligent men arrived at that state of consciousness in which we are made to realize that we live, move and have our being in constant contact with a world of invisible forces and personalities. Notwithstanding the marvelous evolution of our knowledge during the past two hundred years, there is yet a vast proportion of mankind that cannot grasp the idea of the existence of any world except that which is tangible to us through our physical senses. Among us, however, there are some men and women so constituted as to fully realize our dual natures, and the two worlds, the visible and the invisible, in which the moments of our consciousness and unconsciousness are passed. We may more fully realize the spiritual features of this conception by briefly considering a few facts in physical science.

We will suppose an ordinary class of perosns studying chemistry, and that our lesson and experiment for the hour is to learn something of the nature of hydrogen gas. If we placed a glass jar filled with this gas before people of ordinary intelligence they would say there was nothing in it. If we took a jar before our class to prepare it as a receiver, as we held it up all would see and generally say, "There is nothing in it." The statement with reference to the jar of gas, and the jar of air is not true. For though these elements are not visible to our sight, yet they exist. To get a receiver for gas which will be separated from other elements, we must displace the air from the jar, so we fill it with water and invert it with its mouth under water. In another jar we put a few ounces of water and some scraps of zinc, to which we add hydrochloric acid, and insert a cork, through which we pass a tube long enough to extend into the water directly under the mouth of our receiver. Before we bring the zinc and acid together there is no visible activity in either of them; but as soon as they are brought together we see the most energetic action. We cannot see the chlorin gas nor the hydrogen gas that are tied together forming the acid, but in the presence of the zinc, as if it were a long lost friend, and hydrogen set free starts to hunt another affinity; rushes through the tube, forces its way through the water, crowds the water from the receiver and takes its place. Having witnessed this phenomenon we know it is there, yet the space to the sense of sight, which it occupies, is transparent.

But we want another test; also we want to know more of its nature. We slip a bit of window glass over the mouth of the receiver under water and tur nit up, light a sliver of wood and plunge it into the body of the hydrogen gas which extinguishes the blaze at once. We bring a blaze to the surface of the hydrogen and it ignites, burning with a blue blaze, which we have to look very sharp to see; as it burns, which we call the oxidation of hydrogen, we discover drops of water that form on the sides of the gas receiver. We know that two invisible elements have united and brought into existence the form of water which is tangible to our senses of sight, feeling and taste. In this experiment we call "Elementals" from the "vasty deep" of great nature, before invisible to us, into the realm of visible activity.

What we have pictured here of three or four "Elementals" identified with inorganic chemistry, which may be readily demonstrated by the "Black Art" of the chemist, might be extended to cover hundreds of experiments that would render visible many forces and personalities that make up the world invisible.

Previous to the time of Euclid, the most profound philosophers in this world generally held the opinion that there was no such thing as "Absolute Truth." The affirmations of the cause of things, and of being, in the physical world, made by one school of philosophers, was constantly disputed and overturned by another. All school conceding that there was no criterion for truth for the guidance of human consciousness. But Euclid, Galileo, Kepler and Newton, with an army of other men with intellectual powers above those of the great mass of the people, succeeded in making material demonstrations of great abstract principles which have carried conviction to all reasoning beings of the absoluteness of the laws of the universe. To the ordinary person these principles are invisible; he cannot carry them in thought. But there are others who can.

Most of us readily understand what a triangle is; but very few of us grasp the diversity of use it is to the human mind in enabling it to reach into the invisible, so as to make tangible far away bodies, and make their relations to one another known to us; and to construct in space the tent dwelling, temple, ship, engines, cars, musical instrument, any kind of a machine needed, any fabric, and determine in the mind's eye, and fix it upon paper in form to be intelligent to some other men, so that the activities necessary for its materialization may be put in motion and kept so until all the elements from the invisible have been united into the form desired.

If we want to know when an eclipse is going to take place we consult an almanac, and it takes place invariably according to the account there given. The principle by which it takes place is immutable. Man did not invent it; he discovered it, and from the sources of his being he was endowed with an understanding that enabled him to comprehend it. This principle, with many other principles that we employ to get foreknowledge of an eclipse, or of any other important phenomena, relating to heavenly bodies and the elements visible and invisible, is called trigonometry, or the properties of the triangle. Applied to the planets, comets, meteors, we call it astronomy; applied to guide the course of a ship, we call it navigation; when we use the rule and compass and figures to draft plans, we call it geometry. The architect and surveyor cannot do anything at their calling, without it. It is a vital living force—the soul of science; an eternal truth. The triangle is the image of the principle which without it would be imperceptible. In thousands of ways it reveals to human reason and consciousness the permanence of the invisible world, the reality of force and its indestructibleness, as well as the immortality of that force of all forces, which interprets all the rest of them—the human soul.

From the standpoint of science interpreted by Spiritualism, O, Nature, how marvelous is thy work! In the drop of dew that glitters on the bosom of a flower, in the mysterious waves of light that drape the earth in a shimmering curtain, shutting out the Great Unknown, even as the veil in the Jewish temple shut out the holy of holies, in the tiniest speck of animate life that the microscope reveals to us in the drop of water, to the last and growing work of God's creation—man. In the whole vast range what wondrous power, beauty and harmony.

Look at the flowers. Do they not reveal to us that they have come from an invisible to this visible state of being? Their colors and fragrance stand out as our bodies and souls stand out in the great arena of nature. Each with its own personality in the world of forms, and at the threshold, through the qualities of their fragrance, of the invisible world, as we through the qualities of our intelligence, our memories and affections, are at the threshold of that world by virtue of our spiritual natures, under which we and all other things exist.

With so much to remind us in the visible world of the forces behind it that we do not see, is it not natural that we conclude that there are experiences yet to be realized not dreamed of in any formulated philosophy? And surely we must admit that there is no system of religion which intimates life beyond the grave so acceptable and self-evident as that suggested to us in the phenomena of Spiritualism. And there is no more mystery about its various phases through which we are made conscious by the frequent visits of our departed loved ones, and the interest they take in our welfare, than there is in the physical science phenomena of chemistry, and the wonders of the myriads of the heavenly bodies which the astronomers can tell us all about for a year, quarter or half century, or any period of time, in the future.

So when we reflect that the persistence of an intuitional concept of the unseen guided men for ages, before the real facts of the nature of the heavenly bodies in space and their nature and relation to each other could be demonstrated, we have great cause for encouragement from what we have realized by spirit communion, that the time will come when the reality of immortality will be as clearly understood by all men and women, as the eclipses are now by the astronomers, and the existence of the gases by the chemists.

Dying and Returning to Life.

Relatives and friends of a worthy octogenarian dwelling in an Auvergne village have been passing through a variety of emotions, and it is a question whether the excitement is as yet quite at an end. They have been alternating between the hope that his life might be saved and grief at his death. At the present moment he has officially, so to speak, shuffled off his mortal coil, but it seems to be an open question whether he may not come around again. The good man had already on two memorable occasions amazed his mourners by returning to consciousness as his body was on the point of being consigned to the tomb.

The other evening he took another solemn farewell of those among his kith and kin who were gathered around his bed. When he appeared to have drawn his last breath preparations were made for his burial. The supposed corpse was attired in his Sunday raiment, the gravedigger had been warned that his services would be required and the bell of the little church had already begun to toll, when the old gentleman suddenly pulled himself together, and, siting up, asked for a glass of cordial. His son and daughter, who had just arrived from Paris, in brand new sable garments, and bringing with them a colossal wreath, were in the room at the time, and as soon as their father had refreshed himself he jested with them about the innocent trick he had played them, chatting away in high good humor. He inquired with considerable display of interest about the funeral preparations, and the whole family went to rest that night much relieved in its feelings.

During the following day the octogenarian was so lively that his children arranged to make their journey back to Paris on the morrow. In the evening, however, after partaking of some coffee, into which, at his request, a wee drop of brandy had been poured, the old man fell backward insensible, and the village doctor, who had been summoned in hot haste, declared that there could be no mistake about it this time, and that he was really dead. As, however, nobody in the village feels by any means convinced that this is the case, the general opinion being that he has simply fallen into another trance, no preparations are being made for his interment, nor will they be commenced unless unmistakable signs of death are noticed. —Paris Correspondent London Telegraph.

FIFTY-SIXTH ANNIVERSARY OF MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

Again we pause to think
Again we joy to tell
Of this new glorious light
Which on our pathway fell.

Oh, how we groped to find
The truth of future life,
To know if there was rest
Beyond earth's sorrowing strife.

And light broke in at last—
The light of Truth divine—
And true to nature's laws,
Must ever on us shine.

And now the world's ablaze
With modern view—new thought—
Each finds some ray of truth
Which this new light has brought.

Oh, sweet communion now
With friends gone on before,
Who tell of their bright homes
And progress evermore.

Oh, let us all rejoice
This anniversary day,
That Spiritualism shines so bright
O'er all our earthly way.

We know we're spirits now
Within the body's thrall,
For we can live the law of love
Which is the life of all.

Oh, let us all be angels,
Or messengers of light
To bring their glorious message,
From higher spirits bright.

Let us make our lives so bright
An honor to our cause,
That all shall see this light,
And come to learn its laws.

Our fear of death has left us,
And fear of hell is gone,
While Progress is our watchword
And love our joyous song.

SEEKING LIGHT

On the Great Subject of Reincarnation.

Having studied Spiritism in France during the early '60s, I am naturally inclined to believe in reincarnation, but I do not pretend to know much about it. During the last forty years I have, half a dozen times, taken up the study of Spiritualism, each time hoping that I would get a knowledge of the conditions we will find beyond the tomb, and yet I am not further advanced to-day than I was when I first commenced my studies.

Yes! one thing I have found out; little consolation it brought me, however. I found out that the spirits of the departed know, as a rule, very little more about this subject than I do myself. Otherwise, why should spirits manifesting through French, German or Spanish mediums teach reincarnation while spirits manifesting through English and American mediums teach the opposite doctrine?

I need light, I need knowledge, and I turn to The Progressive Thinker for help.

I was told some time ago that the subject of reincarnation was being discussed through its columns and I have sent in my subscription.

If I judge by the article of Mr. Ferris in the first number that I have received, the discussion on this subject cannot have gone very far, because the writer gives opinions and makes assertions, but presents no arguments. At least, I am disinclined to class under that head the simile between a spirit and a set of parallel lines, and also the conundrum about the elevated angel in the body of an ignorant "Bosjesman." However, as a beginning the article is a very good one; and I hope that all the readers of The Progressive Thinker who can say a word on this subject will come out with it.

For the benefit of those who, like me, are for the first time approaching this subject, it would be a very good thing if Mr. Ferris would give us an idea of the line of arguments he claims have been presented pro and con reincarnation by the spirits themselves.

If disincarnated spirits are as intelligent as incarnated ones, they ought to be able to settle easily and quickly that, to us, troublesome question. Nothing more easy, I should say, for the exponents of the single life theory than to bring their opponents to witness the birth of a spirit and kill the reincarnation theory then and there. Or again, why don't they take a census every ten years and prove the increase of population?

Are the spirits without knowing that a want of system and unity in their teaching impairs the value of those teachings? It really seems so. If occasion presents itself, I may at some future time attempt to explain this strange condition. I have no time to do it now. Besides, I do not care to present too broad a side to the attacks of the opponents of the single life theory.

Where also did Mr. Ferris find the reincarnationists teaching that elevated angels do reincarnate in the body of bushmen? They say it is true that sometimes the spirits reincarnate under conditions lower than those of previous existence, but then it is claimed to be the case only when those spirits need certain experience to be found only through those conditions.

Again, Mr. Ferris asks, "Why the various stages of development from the South African savage to the highest type of Anglo-Saxon, if we have all begun at the same time?" I could with fairness pass the question back to him and say: Why those variations, if we have just come out of the hand of an absolutely just Creator? But I think I can do better. Those variations are, I believe, a strong point in the line of arguments presented by the reincarnationists in support of their theory.

I do not claim to be qualified to present their side. I read very little and I do not remember having read anything on this subject, but I fancy their explanations are something like this: We commenced our existence at the lowest possible stage of animal life. All created alike in every respect, and with just enough intelligence or instinct to feed the body and reproduce our species. We started so low in the scale of life that we were not even capable of descerning between pleasant and unpleasant environments. We roamed around in search of food without even the shadow of a will to guide our steps.

But God having made us capable of acquiring knowledge and ultimately of developing intelligence and spirituality, we soon began to notice that in some spots food was more plentiful than in others, and we learned to hunt and find those spots, those having found food in abundance at the start progressing, naturally, more slowly than those who had to hunt hard to supply their need. These last soon discovered, too, that when two or more had to live off of a scanty supply of food the share of each individual was thereby reduced. There again is another cause of inequality in the process of development.

The hunt for food first, and for comfort later on, has developed ingenuity, while the scarcity of food and of those things we deem necessary to our bodily comfort, has developed selfishness and criminal feelings in some and good feelings in others.

Following these lines, a book could be written explaining the "various stages of development," etc. I can do no more than indicate their probable start, here.

The foregoing is, I believe, a sufficient answer to Mr. Ferris' question, "Why should we be incarnated?" etc. But for fear some one should not see the point, I will say that the reincarnationists do not believe that we have been created the intelligent beings we are now. We have, I believe, as stated above, grown so from the zero point of intelligence.

By the way, how does Mr. Ferris believe the spirits are created? Are they the result of union between the male and female spirits, or are they created by God every time an ovum is fecundated? If the latter, God must be kept very busy even if this planet is the only inhabited one in the whole universe; if the former, why do spirits incarnate on this earth when it seems to be admitted by all Spiritualists that facilities for development and capabilities of enjoyment are greater in the other world than they are in this?

You see queer questions can be asked by the reincarnationists as well as by the other side, and I sincerely hope that until some light is thrown on this subject the exponents of the two theories will keep on asking and answering questions.

Catarrh Cured

If you Suffer from Catarrh in any form, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any Lung Weakness read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU

THIS TREATMENT FREE

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the noted specialist in Catarrh and Bronchial troubles has found a SURE, Speedy, and Permanent Cure for Catarrh. It not only quickly relieves and permanently cures Catarrh but gives almost instant relief in Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung Troubles. It completely removes the disease from the system and makes the diseased tissues like new. Mrs. Weaverling, of Seattle, Wash., writes—"I suffered from that dreadful disease catarrh, for twenty years, and found nothing that would help it until I began your treatment. I improved from the first and in a short time was entirely cured. You have rendered me a great blessing, and I recommend your treatment most highly to those having catarrh." We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of Catarrh and Bronchial troubles in all forms and stages but they would not tell you what the treatment will do for You. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself and believing that it will Positively Cure any case of Catarrh no matter how long standing or how many treatments has failed in the past, that we will send a full two weeks' treatment with Dr. Peebles Medicated Air Inhaler to any sufferer wishing to try it. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you? IT IS FREE. Address Dr. Peebles Institute of Health, 23 Madison St. Battle Creek, Mich.

ELEMENTAL FURY.

Six hundred soldiers, encamped on the shore
Of a wide-spreading lake, now all frozen o'er—
The season was winter, now dreadful and drear—
The country Siberia, of which many have fear.
The soldiers are Russians, all hardy and brown
Who've been in the field till they've won great renown;
An order has come, to this soldier band
To march o'er the lake, says the stern command;
Full two and twenty miles, across this frozen plain.
The frigid air is fearful—makes life seem all in vain,
The summons must be honored, 'tis a soldier's life
Whether retreating from the foe, or mingling in the strife;
Midway on the march, a dreadful storm arose
Of furious howling winds, and thickly driving snows,
No life could it withstand, its currents must congeal,
And everything must perish, that has sense to feel;
The fury of the storm shut out the light of day
And every soldier perished, amid the wild display—
Alas! no help could reach them, from the distant shore
And in one brief hour their sufferings, had passed forevermore.

Your Contribution To the Mediums' Fund in the N. S. A. Treasury, be it large or small, will do more good than a donation to any other fund upon the books of the Association. Every medium, every speaker, and in fact every man and woman who loves the cause of Spiritualism should swell this fund with their gift. The appeal of Mrs. Longley is just and timely. If our cause is worth sustaining these dear old pioneer workers who have become invalids at their posts are worthy of our sweetest kindness and tenderest care. Let us help our helpless mediums, and prevent their dependence upon the common charity of a cold and prejudiced world. Send your contributions to Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., 600 Pa. The Progressive Thinker.

Read These Ringing Words From the Pen of One of Spiritualism's Greatest and Noblest Representatives.

SPIRITUALISM, As a system of universal eclecticism, accepts truth wherever found, and has no word of scorn, no sneer for any other, however false. The pure precepts of the past will remain forever, for they rest on the eternal foundation of man's relationship to man, and cannot perish. Their interpretations may be false; they may be misunderstood, and new light give them an entirely different meaning. Spiritualism may interfere with many darling beliefs of the churches, but never with the truth. The record of its progress in the last fifty years is that of the intellectual advancement of mankind. Spiritualism is without day or year, or limit of duration.—Hudson Tuttle, in "The Arcana of Spiritualism," soon to be re-published; see editorial page, first column.

THE ENVIRONMENTS OF HEREDITY.

There Are More Powerful Forces Shaping Life's Destiny.

If it were not so, if the environments of our heredity were the most potent forces of life, then that life which we at present see manifested in such a wonderful variety of forms would not exist; it never would have advanced beyond the primitive types. The luscious fruits and beautiful flowers that have been evolved from the primitive ones, were brought to their present state of perfection through the operation of a law superior to hereditary influences. They are the product of man's inventive genius working in harmony with that great law of progess. Left to reproduce under the primitive system of life they would not have been perfected, because there the law of hereditary influence was dominant and they had not the power of themselves to advance to that state where they could come under a highed law. Mankind understanding in some measure the operation of that higher law applies it and the result is productions superior to any that exist in the wild state. Whether in the animal or vegetable kingdom, there is an inherent force when intelligently directed that enables life to overcome the law of hereditary environment and advance to that state where from out of the old types and races new ones are formed so much superior to the old that they would seem to be new creations. Geology tells us that once in the remote past the highest types of the human race were the cave men who, not having developed to a state where they could construct habitations, occupied those which nature had already formed. But there was something in the make-up of those prehistoric humans that anticipated the coming of such types as a Washington, a Lincoln, an Emerson. It was there in those undeveloped types, and must as the ages roll on be more perfectly revealed. It can not be weighed, chemistry cannot analyze that inherent force. Man's intellectual materialism at the present time cannot comprehend its power. But the human race is coming to a realization of the fact that those spiritual forces do exist, and to make any permanent advancement hereditary influences must become secondary.

The human race has at present only a faintest comprehension of the glorious inheritance that awaits its higher moral development; when it can feel that the Biblical promise is something more than a myth, that the truth of that promise is being realized, and that it shall have dominion over all of the material forces of life, instead of as at present being dominated by them. In what we call the lower types of human life there is a mighty struggle going on, antagonizing the forces of heredity, and though at present not outwardly apparent, will in time make itself manifest in more advanced types. History has on record many instances where for the sake of material gain an effort was made to keep down to the lower levels the expanding energies of races that were prepared to rise to higher ones, and the result was, explosions that shook to the very foundation the civilization of the oppressors. That force is irrepressible and when it is ready to move, hereditary influences are powerless to restrain. It has brought the human race up to its present plane of civilization, and is diligently working, preparing life to take another step forward. Instead of the goal having been reached, the journey is comparatively just begun, and the coming civilizations of the world will be as much superior to the highest ones of the present, as they are superior to the races that have not yet emerged from barbarism.

While the advancement of those human types which are down on what we term the lower levels of life, is an absolute certainty, the law of physical heredity would in its operation, and without interference from a higher law, tend to keep them down to the lower levels, but the destiny of life is upward. There is a law of spiritual heredity, the existence of which is proven from the fact that life with all of its inherited tendencies pertaining to the physical and mental planes of being is dominated by spiritual forces which enable the individual being, however low the plane on which their life may be existing, to advance to higher gradations.

Hereditary influences, when they have formed an alliance with those higher spiritual forces, are made more potent in their efforts to pass down the line more desirable traits. Those spiritual forces recognizing and accepting the good that heredity has to offer; but when it asserts that the boundary line established through hereditary influence is supreme and must not be passed over, even it is set aside, superseded by superior forces. There is something in the law of destiny, an energy that does not let life feel satisfied only as it is advancing.

"Not enjoyment and not sorrow,
Is our destined end and way,
But to act that each to-morrow,
Finds us further than to-day."

KEEP TO YOUR ORBIT.

Keep to your orbit; scatter not your force
In devious ways; each star that gems the night
Moves on its separate and appointed course;
Unswerved while centuries dawn and take their flight.

Mad comets wander purposeless through space,
And meteors waste themselves like aimless souls,
Be not of these—but keep to your fixed place,
Nor spend your strength upon too many goals.

Light Cast on the Orthodox God.

An Essay by Mrs. F. C. Cramer, Read Before the Spiritual Science Society, of Rockford, Ill.

Many ideas and opinion have been fostered and expressed upon this subject. While no positive evidence can be adduced to prove the existence or non-existence of a God, we should take reason for our guide in forming our opinions pertaining to this as well as all other subjects.

Those who take the book or combination of books called the Bible, as their infallible guide, or the true and indisputable record of a remote past, of which they have no proof, have been taught from childhood to regard it as an inspired word of a great being that is termed God, and believe him to be the embodiment of perfection, and the creator of all things, both animate and inanimate. They believe he created man in his own image, and pronounced his work good, but later, realized that he had made a mistake, for man did not remain good, but became disobedient and sinful, and then God was grieved at heart, and repented that he had made man.

Think of it, an all-knowing, an all-powerful being, making a mistake so serious, and being grieved and repentant in consequence. But after due consideration, he decides to exterminate, not only mankind, but all the beasts of the field, the creeping things and the fowls of the air, and thus endeavor to make amends for, and rectify the unfortunate error he had made in creating man. The method of extermination decided upon was that of drowning; so, according to the story recorded in the so-called infallible book, the Bible, he sent a great flood upon the earth to destroy all his unfortunate, helpless creatures, that he once pronounced good—with the exception of a favored few. These were saved in a huge boat constructed for the purpose, according to directions given by God himself.

According to the story, the rain descended for forty days and forty nights, and the earth was hidden by a vast sea of water, and not one living creature could escape it, excepting those that were safely housed within the ark. But, notwithstanding his first failure in creating man, and the consequent necessity of bringing about this wholesale destruction of all life upon the earth, he made a second attempt to people the earth, to multiply, and in course of time, they and their offspring had again peopled the world. So, also had the animals saved in the Ark along with Noah and his family, multiplied and increased in numbers, until the earth was again teeming with animal life.

Now, it would appear to any reasonable mind that through the experience gained by his first attempt and failure in producing man, this so-called being possessing all power and all knowledge, would, in making the second attempt, be better able to perform his work in a manner that would produce the desired result—namely, perfection in mankind. But was this result attained? Was man any better, any less sinful, any nearer perfection after the flood than before? You will say with me, "No." The work was again a failure. For the second time God was disappointed with his own work, and realized his failure in producing the kind of man he wished to inhabit the earth.

Now, in the same book, the Bible, that records these stories about the so-called God's attempts and failures in creating man as he would have him to be, we are also told that he is a perfect being, who possesses unlimited knowledge, wisdom and power. I would ask, are not these contradictory stories? Could failure and disappointment be the result of the work of an infallible being?

But, we will proceed to examine and are told how God proceeded in an endeavor to redeem man from the pitfalls of sinfulness into which he had fallen. This story tells us that God conceived the idea of producing a son, or according to the doctrine of the Trinity, which is accepted and taught by the majority of adherents to the orthodox faith, he himself, would enter into the body of an infant, and be born into the world as the child of a maid, and sojourn upon earth for a time, teaching and preaching to his unruly, disobedient children, and holding out to them what is now termed the "plan of redemption."

This plan was very simple, and consisted in believing that this child, who was called Jesus, was both God and the son of God, and that through his suffering and death, mankind should be redeemed from sin and saved from the eternal torture which he had previously provided for his wicked children of earth, but those who could not believe this should be consigned to endless torment, there to intensely suffer throughout a never-ending eternity. I would ask, Is this a reasonable thing to believe—that through the suffering and death of another, an innocent one, we should be extricated from punishment for our sins, and be permitted to enter into a state of perfect happiness, there to exist forever, while our brother man, who is no more sinful than we, shall be forever subjected to the most cruel torture, because he is not able to believe what he has been commanded to believe—cannot accept the so-called plan of redemption.

We Spiritualists have no such God or plan of redemption. We take reason for our guide, and the teachings of our departed loved ones, who have passed out of this initiatory life into the great beyond, who come back to us and tell us of their life beyond the grave. They bring us information that contradicts the unreasonable stories recorded in the Bible. They tell us that heaven and hell are conditions of happiness and unhappiness that we make for ourselves, and that no Jesus or any other person can redeem us from the punishment we deserve for the wrongs we have done, we must redeem ourselves. As we sow, we shall reap. And we believe them, for this is reasonable and just. If we are living a good and pure life, while sojourning here on the earth plane, as our inner teacher, conscience, tells us, we should live, never wronging our fellow-man by word or deed, we need have no fear of hell, either in this life or the life after leath. But if we heed not the admonitions of the voice of conscience, and live a life of sin and selfishness, we make for ourselves a hell or a condition of unhappiness, both in this and the future life.

Every good, pure, unselfish thought and act brings its own reward. Every evil, selfish thought and act brings its own punishment. We do not believe that an angry, revengeful God administers punishment to us, but that it follows as a natural consequence, and result of wrong-doing. Neither do we believe that our punishment or unhappy condition must continue forever. This would be contrary to the law of progression, through which we believe we have an opportunity to overcome the evil in our natures.

Our spirit friends tell us that life after death is one of continued progression and advancement, and that those who have attained to a more advanced state of progression assist the weaker and unprogressed ones to overcome and rise above their evil inclinations. Thus we understand that we will all have a work to do, the grand and glorious work of uplifting our fellow-man, while we also unlift ourselves. This we should also do in our present state of existence. The more of selfishness and sin we can overcome and outgrow in ourselves, and assist our brother and sister, through influence and example, to do likewise, the better are we fitted and prepared to enter into a more advanced state or condition in the life beyond the grave.

We should all realize that we have an influence which we may wield for good or bad, as we may desire, over those with whom we come in contact. We should remember that to a certain extent we are our brother's keeper, and it should be our highest aim and endeavor, both by precept and example, to do that which will uplift rather than degrade our fellow-beings.

Spiritualists do not rely upon a book, or a combination of books, as their guide, written at various times and in various places, by many different writers who express many different opinions. Our information comes through those who have gone to see what is before us all, and it not a matter of belief, but of absolute knowledge. Their statements regarding the conditions of the future life do not correspond with those of the Bible, and we prefer to accept theirs for they are more reasonable and just. We have no proof that the Bible is an infallible work, and that the strange and unreasonable statements therein contained are absolutely true, but we know that our friends and loved ones who have gone out into the other life, whose integrity and veracity we never had cause to doubt, while in earth life, would not come back to us to deceive and mislead us. Not one of them has ever told us of an endless hell, nor of a God seated in pompous splendor upon a great white throne, surrounded by those who have been redeemed from sin by the death of another, with harps in their hands, with nothing else to do but sing and play harps, and promenade the streets of gold throughout an endless eternity. This would certainly be monotonous in the extreme, and by no means desirable.

The Bible tells us that this so-called God will answer prayer, and that whatsoever we may ask in faith, we will receive. I will relate an instance that was brought to my observation through the newspapers, and also through the information given me by an acquaintance who was visiting in the city in Texas at the time of the occurrence of what I am going to relate.

It was midsummer, and a long continued drouth extending over a vast area of the state, was causing great destruction to the growing crops of this section. Many weeks had gone by since a drop of water had fallen upon the scorched and sun-baked ground. All vegetation was suffering for water. Much of it was injured beyond repair. The prospects of a bountiful harvest, that were manifest early in the season, were gone, and the industrious husbandman began to despair. His hopes for good returns for his labor and expenditures in planting and cultivating his crops were almost abandoned. Many things had been planned and hoped for, based upon the prospect of a bountiful harvest. Many were the prayers that had been offered up in silence to their just and merciful God, the supposed maker and giver of all things, for that gift which at this time would be to them the greatest of blessings—a copious rainfall. But thus far their prayers had availed nothing, and the situation was daily growing more and more serious. Relief must come soon, or all vegetation perish, and great suffering and privation follow in consequence. So, it was decided by some of the most devout believers in the efficacy of prayer to call the good people together in a great concentrated effort in offering up their petitions to the throne of mercy, for the much-needed rain. A time and place were appointed for the assembling of this suffering section.

Many came together promptly at the appointed hour, and no time was lost in beginning to offer up their petitions. Prayer after prayer was rendered in the most humble manner to the great so-called ruler of the universe, beseeching him to send upon them a special dispensation of his great power and love and mercy, by granting the one great blessing they so much needed and desired. And while thus engaged in this humble devotion with great faith and hope that in a short time their petitions might be granted, some one in the assembled crowd observed in the dim distance a very small floating, fleecy cloud, a mere speck in that vast expanse of clear, blue sky, in which no cloud had appeared for weeks.

Eagerly he watched it for a short time, and he soon discovered that it was growing a little in dimensions. Jubilant over this, he soon attracted the attention of the assembled audience, and they also eagerly and hopefully watched the little cloud, as it came nearer and grew larger in proportions, and being exultant over this unmistakable indication and evidence of an answer to their prayers, they again fell to their knees and began a general outpouring of gratitude and thanksgiving for the approaching raincloud. And as their voices blended in out great exultant expression of praise, the cloud came nearer and nearer, and grew larger and heavier and darker, until it had spread out over the heavens and the blue sky hitherto cloudless for so many weeks, was now hidden from view, and great was the rejoicing of that assembled crowd. The rain began to descend, and all felt that with it came the descent of God's love and mercy in granting that for which they had just offered their humble petitions. The great overshadowing cloud grew heavier and blacker and a brisk wind began to blow, which became stronger and stronger, until it was evident that a fierce storm would soon be upon them.

The rejoicing of those good people was suddenly changed into fear, though the most trustful ones tried to feel that all would be well, and endeavored to quell the fears of those who expressed more fear than faith. But the winds howled about them, and they were soon obliged to realize that they were in the midst of a dangerous storm, a veritable tornado. The church edifice in which they were assembled, shook upon its foundation, and in a few seconds more the roof was uplifted and carried away by the great power of the wind. The rain which was now falling in torrents descended upon the unprotected crowd.

Frantic with fear of what next might come, the screams of some and the wild praying of others could be heard above the boisterous noise of the storm. But the wind still raged in its wild fury, and the walls began to totter, and soon a great portion, unable to bear the strain longer, collapsed, burying beneath the debris many of those helpless people. Consternation now reigned supreme, and the hitherto truthful, hopeful, prayerful people, were suddenly plunged into the sea of bitter anguish and despair. Though the much-coveted rain had at last descended upon their arid fields and dying vegetation, it was accompanied by a destructive force, far more powerful and far-reaching in its work of destruction of life and demolition of property than the rain could be in the salvation of the crops of the field, for the work of devastation was not confined to this church edifice, and those unfortunate victims buried beneath its fallen walls, but many of their homes were destroyed, and their fields flooded and vegetation ruined.

Oh! why had their prayers been so cruelly answerd? Why had their trusted, loving, merciful father sent this terrible calamity upon them? They could not understand it. Think you, my friends, that this rain and accompanying storm that wrought so much destruction in its pathway, and brought death to so many of those devout, praying people was an answer to their prayers? I do not believe that any God or devil had anything whatever to do with it, but it came as a result of natural causes, through the workings of the laws of nature, just as everything else in nature is produced. Had the much-needed rain only come to those suffering, drouth-stricken people, they and the Christian world would have regarded it as a special dispensation and blessing sent by their God in answer to their prayers, but as it was accompanied by the destructive force of the wind, and its disastrous work of devastation and suffering, they would not like to give God credit, but in reality, it all came from the same source, or was produced by the same cause, through the workings of the laws of nature.

Personally, I do no believe in the existence of a God or Devil. If we acknowledge the existence of these two mythical beings, we must admit that the devil is the more powerful of the two, for is it not evident that there is more bad than good in the world, more wrong-doing than right-doing? When we look about us and behold the wickedness of all kinds, and are compelled to witness the selfishness displayed by mankind in their dealings and associations with each other, and are obliged to see and know so much of the low, vile, degraded, debauchery and licentiousness of every description, surrounding us upon every hand, is it not evident that the power of sin is stronger than the power of good, or, in other words, is not the so-called devil, the supposed author of sin, more powerful than the so-called God, the supposed author of good?

Why, let me ask, did God create a devil, or permit such a wicked being to exist and forever be his enemy and competitor? Why does he place such a being in our midst, and permit him to go about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, well-knowing before that mankind would yield to this tempter he placed in our midst? Is there a human parent, who is sane, that would permit a wicked person to mingle with their children, well knowing they would be influenced by this person to do the wicked things he had commanded the mnot to do, and because they yielded, cruelly torture them forever? No sane parent could be guilty of such cruelty and injustice.

Ah! it is far easier for me not to believe in the existence of any God than to accept the general belief as gleaned from the Bible. If there be a God, an banish all wickedness from our midst? Why is there so much suffering in the world, if there is a person that can prevent it? Why is there disease and pestilence? Why must we helpless people of earth be visited by the destructive cyclone and tornado? Why must we have floods and drouths to destroy the fruits of our labor, and bring great privation and suffering in consequence? Why the great destruction of property and loss of life by the lightning's flash? Why did not this supposed being of unlimited power arrest the angry flames and prevent the awful suffering and agony of the six hundred unfortunate victims in the recent horror in the burning of the Iroquois theater in the city of Chicago? Why the intense suffering and loss of both human and animal life by freezing during the recent severe weather extending over a large area of our country? Tell me not there is one whom you call merciful, who has unlimited power, yet does not use it to prevent the awful things that are taking place almost daily in our midst.

THE BEAUTIFUL HILLS.

Oh, when and where shall I gain them,
My beautiful hills of rest?
They lie afar in the cloud-land
Of an unknown mystical west.
Their slopes are covered with blossoms
More fair than the Eden tree,
Nor earthly showers have dimmed those flowers
Through Time and Eternity.

Dreaming, I see their beauty
And rush to their glad embrace,
Till a dead white mist comes ghost-like,
As I seek them far and wide.
And waking I weep, and wander
Again in the endless quest,
Through the world of men seeking again
My beautiful hills of rest.

There's a little brook runs downward
With its silvery flow and fret
And he whose lips shall touch its waves
Shall all of his griefs forget.
One tall palm like a jewel
Gleams green upon the crest
And the summer moon is deep aswoon
On my beautiful hills of rest.

I hear them singing and calling—
My friends on the other side—
And my heart bounds high in greeting
As I seek them far and wide.
They clasp me, claim me, and hold me,
Their wandering, earth-bound guest,
Till the vision flies when the morning skies
Break gray o'er the hills of rest.

Oh, when and where shall I find them—
The hills of my spirit home!
The lilied glades and the silver seas
With their pearl white wreaths of foam.
I am heart-sick, home-sick, weary,
To clasp to my aching heart
The friends who bide on the other side
In my beautiful hills of rest.

For I know beyond any doubting
That the visions of night are sure.
My home stands there in the summer land
To last while the stars endure.
One day I shall find it, claim it,
When coffined and calm—and blest—
They'll say, "She is dead," when my soul has fled
To my beautiful hills of rest.

THE TRUE RICHES.

Who loves the most 'tis he possesses most;
Who loves the least 'tis he possesses least.
Indifference is ignorance, and hate
Informs with falsehoods. Love the teacher is
Of all that's true. Love gives us sole dominion
Of all that we can hold of earth or sky
Save as the beasts.

We cannot understand save as we love;
We can not even see, save as we love.
Who owns most of the valleys, hills and woods,
The streams, the grazing flocks? 'Tis the same man
Who owns most of the sunsets, clouds and stars.
And who is he? 'Tis he who loves them most.
For only by the measure of his love
Can he discern their perfect loveliness,
And know the joys of their companionship.
Who owns the priceless pictures? Only he
Who through his love can feel the thought they hold.
Nor title-deeds nor gold can give possession
Of aught most worth possessing. Only love
That gives all can receive all in return.

Who are the poor? For one whose flesh is starved,
The thousands starve in spirit, in proud mansions
And humble huts alike. And which is worse,
To own a shriveled purse or shriveled soul?
The want from which mankind is suffering most
Is want of love; and yet where one man strives
For riches and dominion had through love,
The thousands strive to feed upon the husks.
"Love God and one another." No false fable,
Nor crackling thorns of foolish rhetoric
Is Christ's commandment, but the way to riches
Which have no power to purchase sin and woe;
Which thieves take not away, nor years destroy.

WHAT NEXT?

LET THE REPUBLIC SIDE WITH CHRIST.

The Hash of Public Opinion Brought Forth by the New York Sun.

We have received a printed copy of a sermon preached at Grace Episcopal Church on the second Sunday in this month by the Rev. Dr. Huntington, the rector. It is "a plea for Christian legislation in the matter of polygamy and divorce," and is marked throughout by a moral earnestness which commands respect.

Simply as an argument, however, the sermon is not unassailable. It makes assumptions which are not always supported by facts. For instance, Dr. Huntington contends that "the duty of the Republic" is to "take Christian ground." "Let the Republic side with Christ," he exclaims, "even though secularists lose their temper and all Agnostia protests." But what is the law laid down by Christ "as spokesman for Almighty God?" It is thus read by the rector of Grace Church: "Christ utterly discountenanced polygamy, and sanctioned divorce only for one cause."

Now, of the religious communicants of the United States, aggregating somewhere towards thirty millions, or less than two-fifths of the total population, about one-third are Roman Catholics, who deny that Christ sanctioned divorce for any cause. Of the remaining two-thirds, practically all the Protestants, with the exception of less than a million Episcopalians, believe that Christ permitted divorce for more than one cause, or for the cause of desertion, besides adultery; and this belief is expressed in the statutes concerning divorce in every State of the Union except South Carolina and New York. In this country there are also more than a million Jews who reject the authority of Christ to lay down any law "as spokesman for Almighty God." The Mormons, of course, believe that the Divine law permits and requires polygamy. "All Agnostia protests" that the law both as to polygamy and as to divorce is a purely human and conventional rule; and the population of that realm of unbelief is undoubtedly great, though it cannot be assumed that it includes all or even a majority of the fifty or more millions of the American people who are classified as outside of religious communions.

Let the Republic "take Christian ground and not be afraid to say that it takes Christian ground," says the distinguished rector of Grace Church. What have the million Jews already here to say about that and what will the many millions more who will be here a generation hence have to say? Moreover, as we have shown, the vast majority of Christian believers in the United States deny that Christ laid down any such law of divorce as Dr. Huntington attributes to him. What will they have to say? So far, the American people have said in their legislation in all the States, except two, that there is no Divine prohibition of divirce for more than one cause, while one-third of the organized Christian believers deny that Christ allowed divorce for any cause, but rather established matrimony as a sacrament dissoluble only by death.

Dr. Huntington would have this Republic proclaim its establishment on "the New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" and make its laws in strict accordance with the principles there laid down. But what are those principles? Christendom is split into two great and radically conflicting divisions because of disagreement as to them. We print to-day, for example, a letter from a distinguished Roman Catholic ecclesiastic, in which he explains that if a Catholic who had been divorced, even for the one cause which, according to Dr. Huntington, was "sanctioned" by Christ, should get married again by the learned rector of Grace Church, he would subject himself to excommunication—he would be anathema.

Nowhere else than on the Christian ground, says the Grace Church rector, can the State find "sure footing," "here it can tread firmly and with full confidence." But how can the State establish itself on that ground when Christians themselves differ so radically as to the "sure footing," how can it take any decided position on the question without violating our fundamental principle of the separation of Church and State and offending the religious conscience of a great part of its citizens?

REAL WEALTH.

Let money-makers scheme and soulful dreamers dream;
The form of man must live and house the soul supreme;
Must have its food and clothes and shelter on this earth,
And aid the spirit in its growth and higher birth.

Let men of earth toil on in greed till they are gone,
They cannot always keep their souls in pawn,
And while they gain and hoard their gold—the God supreme—
The lasting wealth can but be gained through love, life's dream.

Unlasting, frail and weak the wealth the selfish seek;
When Death at last imprints his stamp upon the cheek,
The soul in prison looks for light and life beyond, above,
And to the dreamer last appeals for higher, lasting love.

Were this wee earth the whole of life the human soul
Would need no aspirations, need no higher goal,
No higher life, no hope for growth beyond the tomb;
Just birth and toil to breathe and be, to face one doom.

SPIRIT RETURN.

A GRAND AND SOUL-ELEVATING TRUTH.

A Beautiful Story of Spirit Return, or How a Spirit Mother Was Attracted to Her Son on Earth, After Being Several Years in Spirit Life.

On January 31st, 1897, James Langtree, a bellboy at the Pilgrim Hotel, 517 Chestnut street, St. Louis, Mo., told Mrs. A. E. Babcock, one of the guests, that he thought some spirit was always around him, and he asked Mrs. B. to help him find out if such is the case. He being an uneducated boy, but honest, Mrs. B. wished to help him all in her power, and told him to come to the room some Sunday morning, and then she would find out for him. He came the following Sunday, and with him came the spirit of a lady and her daughter. Amelia Bauer, our spirit friend, told us that the lady was tall, had blue eyes, and light hair. The spirit lady then said, talking through Amelia Bauer, that her name was Mary Cavanaugh, and the daughter's name was Jane Cavanaugh, and that they were the mother and sister of this boy Langtree, and that his name was not Langtree, but James Cavanaugh, and that he was left an orphan, and that the lady that took him was not kind to him, and that he was taken away from her and put into an orphan's home in New York City. His father was a bad man, and she did not live with him. He went west selling wine, and ran with bad women. He passed to spirit life about 1887.

The boy then asked, "What nationality am I?"

"Your mother was Irish; your father French on his mother's side. You are an American and was born in Cincinnati, Ohio. I am so glad I have found you, my son. I have been around you a long time. I was attracted to you while you was in church at Trenton, Ill., about 1897. I like the lady you are going with. She is a good woman and you had better marry her. All your relatives are now in the spirit world."

P. S.—This boy married the lady, as his mother suggested. She was a chambermaid in Pilgrim Hotel. They are both doing well, the boy having a good position at Lemp's Brewery, St. Louis, Mo.

On Feb. 14th, 1897, Mrs. Cavanaugh came again, and requested us to write to the Foundling Asylum, New York City, saying the boy must have been brought to that asylum by a Mrs. Langtree, she giving her own name instead of Cavanaugh. The child was not taken to the asylum to keep, but to take care of. There should have been $300 taken with this child. The mother died in the meantime, is the reason the child was not called for. The mother of this boy was married when 18 years old by a priest in New York City, giving birth to a boy and girl. The boy was born in December, 1873. The mother would be now about 46 years old. There should be a record of this boy, as money was left him from his father's side in the old country.

Mrs. Cavanaugh again thanked the spirit girl, Amelia Bauer and her friends on earth for bring her and her son together, saying, "O, my son, I am so glad I have found you. I will watch over you now, that you may grow better and prosper."

Mrs. Babcock, wrote the letter, and received this reply, showing the mother was right about this boy being her son. Foundling Asylum of Sisters of Charity, 175 East 68th street, New York City.

Mrs. A. B. Babcock, Pilgrim Hotel, St. Louis, Mo.—In answer to yours of Feb. 28, I will say our books show that on the 28th day of May, 1881, a male child (the name given him was James Langtree) was brought to our home. He was sent west and was adopted through our agent, to Jacob Myer, of Trenton, Ill.

Yours respectfully,
SISTER LAURA VINCENT.

The above is one of the many true visits and records of strange spirits visiting our home. We are not professionals, and never under any circumstances take a cent for what we give.

NOTHING WILL DIE.

When will the stream be a-weary of flowing
Under my eye?
When will the wind be a-weary of blowing
Over the sky?
When will the clouds be a-weary of fleeting?
When will the heart be a-weary of beating?
And nature die?
Never, oh! never; nothing will die;
The stream flows,
The wind blows,
The cloud fleets,
The heart beats,
Nothing will die.
Nothing will die;
All things will change,
Thro' eternity.
'Tis the world's winter;
Autumn and summer
Are gone long ago;
Earth is dry to the center
But spring, a newcomer
A spring rich and s
Shall make the wi
Round and round,
Thro' and thro',
Here and there,
Till the air
And the ground
Shall be filled with life anew.
The world was never made;
It will change but it will not fade
So let the wind range;
For even and morn
Ever will be
Thro' eternity.
Nothing was born;
Nothing will die;
All things will change.

Man and Woman.

The Noblest Title to Which One Can Aspire.

Are you a man? Are you a woman? This question comes to us forcibly in all its true significance and breadth of meaning, and though we put forth our best efforts in search of the key which will open the lock of this problem, the answer only comes to us in fragments. However, we will do the best we can to gather them together, and present them to you as a whole, in such shape, you will, at least, be able to arrive at some satisfactory conclusion for yourselves.

We have frequently heard the expression used, "He is a man among men," or, "She is a woman among women." My friends, to what grander or more noble title could you aspire, than to be called a "man" or a "woman," in the true sense of the word?

Were you president of the United States, King or Queen, over vast domains and millions of subjects, and can not lay claim, honestly, to the title of "man" or "woman," you are traveling on a lower plane of development than the poor, humble pauper who can. The former, who sits in high places, dwelling in the midst of earthly wealth and ease, who, by the raising of a finger, or glance of the eye, cause all noise and turbulance to cease; who ride forth in their rich, beautiful carriages, whose highly polished surfaces reflect the faces and forms of their subjects and citizens; who scrape, bow and acclaim with loud voices the honor and esteem in which they are held.

This, and much more, might be added to present them to you beautified and lifted high in the proud station which they fill, beyond the common cares, woes and sorrows of their subjects; and yet, if they do not posses in their hearts and minds that most noble of title—"Man and "woman"—their positions are a sham, their lives a failure.

To one, who stands upon the outermost edge of wealth, pomp and pageantry can view, with mind untrammeled with thoughts of jealousy or selfishness; who look with clear-seeing eyes on this tinsel show, passing on like a fleeting vision to the ultimate of its earth's last journey, through the gates of so-called death, into the vast mysterious beyond, to be forgotten and unknown as time rolls on. The humble and lowly of station as well, by this great law of time, dealing with one and all alike, high or low, rich or poor, are being hurried swiftly along, no favors shown to the moment when the last good-bye will be said, the last kiss impressed upon the cold lips, and from the eyes the last look of love and recognition shine out from their clouded vision, the last breath flutters from the body, and the spirit goes out into the ethereal immortal realms beyond.

There, in God's bountiful domain, and soul-entrancing music, vibrating the ethereal atmosphere, echoing from court to court, will be found the answer written upon the tablets of time, in the tears of anguish we have drawn from the eyes of those we have oppressed and injured, or written in letters of gold, in the midst of a halo of glory, for the joys we have given those we have protected and helped, and find those titles superseding all earthly titles annexed to our names, "Man" and "Woman." Lofty and beautiful sentiments spring from many a human mind, fleeing from the abode of impurity in which they dwelt, parting company from their deceased companions of iniquity, and gone out on their mission of charity and good will, to find a more cleanly and purified atmosphere in which to live. No mind can become so impregnated with the poison of wrong living, but it will at times emit sparks of bright and shining light, from that divine flame planted within, and awaken the desire from its slumbering condition, to want to lift itself up from its lowly place in the scale of degradation, and rise into a higher and purer atmosphere of action and mentality.

I believe like attracts like, and that the drunken individual feels ill at ease with the sober, and seeks his own inebriated companions. Likewise, the one who lives upon the higher plane of purity of thought, has become truly sensitized and imbued with a divine love and reverence for God and admiration for nature, shrinks from those who dwell upon the lower plane of derision and blasphemy. Yet, my friends, don't you know the saint to-day may be the sinner to-morrow, and this life's journey upon which we have started in an embryo state, the spirit dwelling in the mortal body, trudging onward, ever onward, full of anxiety, restlessness and concern, groping at times in the dark shadows and slums of lowly condition, now coming out for a time into the open of God's sunshine and purity of thought, back into the cloudy fogs of uncertainty, ambling on, ever on, to the end of earth's pilgrimage.

Let us try and have more light than shadows, and enthuse our minds with the thought to do the best we can. To so live, we will each and every day, by our kindly acts, pure and noble thoughts, come nearer to our lofty ideal of being a true man, or a good woman, whichever the case may be. This life is made up of the littles, and the smallness of things, and those fragmentary parts adhering together, create the vast, the whole, grand and magnificent.

Ah! how many illustrations we can call to mind to exemplify those littles, which in the separate integral parts of their individual selves are not worthy of apparent notice, but how they grow and enlarge when they come into conjunction with others of their kind, compel our respect and command us to deal with something mighty and important. Let us make a few comparisons:

Look out upon the desert plains at the smooth, sandy surface. How it glistens, shines and scintillates from the rays of God's beautiful sunlight. A cloud appears in the sky, another, and then another, they are seen hurrying from all sides until the heavens are canopied o'er with a dismal dark pall of gloom. Gusts of mind start up here and there, from the North, South, East and West, gentle at first, like children of Spring, gaining strength every moment, which in their raging might and power, are sweeping and howling o'er the land like giants let loose, carrying in their strong grasp small particles, throwing them here and there in rills, hills and mountains. Those lofty domes which have reared their majestic peaks aspiringly towards heaven, so grand and imposing to look upon, flung together by the mighty forces of nature, are composed of what?—"little grains of sand." Likewise, the calm ripple on the surface of the ocean's boson, becomes the mighty wave of huge strength, force and power when the winds let loose, and pile them up into huge masses of crested foam, madly chasing, jostling and toppling o'er each other, heading towards the shore to beat themselves with spent strength in thunderous roar, upon the rock-bound coast, or fall with sullen sound upon the sandy beach—"little drops of water."

So it is, my friends, these lessons of the "littles" are being taught us each day, plainly showing the true principle of force and energy, rightly and profitably applied, can compel the smallness of things to evolve and grow into larger and greater.

We are all citizens of these United States; taken separately, we are weak, but as a whole we compose one of the greatest and grandest countries upon the face of the globe. Let us deal with the present and take care of the "littles" round and about us, in doing our duty by helping some one in sorrow by a kind word of sympathy, some one in need of a little help, scattering our smiles here and there, doing our share to ease the burden resting upon aching shoulders, and lifting the veil of sorrow from many a pale face, and drying the tears from eyes that only look out into the world with grief.

While here, let us live more in the present, and do our duties here and now. Don't worry so much, figuring and striving to solve and know the mysterious future of your lives, but contentyourselves in holding firmly, and true, to the present, and do your duty as you find it. Surely, in taking care of the "little deeds" of the present, so small, so common, they are liable to be neglected and overlooked, in our far-away-search of the great events which will happen in our future state. Come back from the ethereal fields of celestial vision, in the beautiful realms beyond. Come back to the things which concern your present state, dealing with the material earth and physical body. Take good care of that physical temple, the body, that house in which dwells your beautiful spirit, constantly trying to impress you with thoughts, to live nobly and grand, here and now, and all will be well in the future. Wrinkle not your brow, nor make your head ache, in trying to solve the problem of to-morrow, next week, next month, but hold yourself to your duty as men and women, here and now. One second in the past is history, one second in the future is mystery; only the present is ours to control.

Sit not in listless mood, with folded hands, dreaming of the many grand and mighty deeds you would do if you had wealth in abundance. Sit not in idleness in fancy view, picturing yourself, seeing in your mind's eye the many beautiful edifices you have raised for the benefit of humanity. Listen not to the voices of fancy which applaud you from the dim vista of dreams, not based upon reality. Wake up from dreamland, through exerting that God-given will power, and resolve to yourself, "I will go out and search for the things I can do in the present, and perform my duties faithfully and well," and you will find your pathway lit up through life by the small lamps of wisdom you are filling with the oil of kind deeds and noble acts, and kept burning with the bright flame of love to illuminate you upon your journey of progression in the future.

Take care of the little things of the present, to your utmost ability, and you are storing away the fragments and pieces, which, in the future—the mysterious future—when you and I have solved the mystery of death, you will find they have resolved themselves into a grand, noble, substantial spiritual edifice in that beautiful ethereal land beyond. Then you will know and realize that most noble and precious of all titles, the only true and lasting, when your dear friends, gone on before, welcome, caress and greet you with words of love and praise and hear them say: "You have lived the true life of a man"—"You have been a good, noble woman."

DESIGN.

An Agnostic View of the Subject.

A correspondent recently favored the readers of The Progressive Thinker with a series of articles, by which he seeks to show want of design, and hence that there is no designer.

I fail entirely to see the verity of the suppressed premise.

This subject of design has occupied my mind from infancy. The argument should be that the object sought for in the thing done, has not been attained.

In advance, let me say I am not contending that there was, or is a designer. I am agnostic on that subject, but I do contend that the mere fact that the animal kingdom is imperfect in any part of its construction, is no proof of want of design. The suppressed premise in the argument of the writer, then, is where there is a designer, the thing designed should be perfect.

Now, if there is an intelligent designer, we must first ascertain what his design was.

Suppose that in the present Russian-Japanese war the Japs should construct a huge gun so that on firing its pieces would fly in every direction, and for miles, with disastrous effect, and that they should in some land battle appear to flee from the Russians, leaving this gun upon the field, and that it should then explode, killing and wounding many of the Russians, would that show a defect in the gun? I am not meaning to insinuate that the animal defects may be designed for vicious or calamitous ends, but to intimate that seeming imperfections may have been designedly wrought. In furtherance of this view, it is important to meditate as to the end which the thing designed is meant to reach. Suppose a man to have been so constructed that his teeth would never ache nor decay; the relation of nesophagus and trachea such that no unpleasantness could ever result; that even food should always be at hand when needed, etc., through the entire series of so-called defects enumerated by our friend; in short, suppose man to have been created perfect. Is it necessary to call attention to the fact that no move, no action on his part would be necessary? He would be a mere living thing without object or purpose. The sensitiveness of his teeth alluded to incites him to keep them clean; ever to be mindful of the kind of food he takes; even the liability to strangle in the act of deglutition is a constant reminder. His liability to dyspepsia and other stomach diseases set him a task to perform.

Now, will any one doubt that the entire course of evolution is brought about by perpetually occurring necessities? The finely chiseled hand is an advance from the like member of lower animals. The former rude member was insufficient to fulfill the nicer wants as they arose. The sightless fish in the mammoth cave was never annoyed by the rays of the sun, hence its eyes were never developed; in short, there is nothing to prove that the defects mentioned by the writer were not designed for our further development and evolution. To these in part we may be indebted for being living, energetic beings.

MY REAL SELF.

A Spirit Gives His Views in Regard to the Same.

Well, the wonder of it all! I never knew before! I would not have believed that I am as I see myself now, Body!—no it is only a house that I live in. Truly that is all that it is. I see now my real self is in it. Ah! what a different being it is from what earth people ever dreamed it could be. I am ethereal. I am of a more subtile, clear, refined character than any of the finer gaseous substances that are known to earth's chemists.

No wonder I am spellbound to find myself looking at myself, and this most astonishing fact forcing the truthfulness of its intense reality upon me.

There are the eyes—I suppose I should say my eyes; but they are not my real eyes, they are only instruments or parts of my house mechanism. I use them to see earth things only. I use them not to see the finer, the real, the spiritual, those who have moved out, arisen, the glorious landscapes, such as those can see who become aware of their inner and finer nature, their real selves.

Now I will tell how I live in this house and accommodate myself to it. I am the shape of my outer self, but, oh! so perfect, fitting and filling every part of it; clear and transparent. Every muscle, joint, nerve, organ, hands, feet, hair and eyes are of the same color of those in my house, and features the same. I can look out of it anywhere. I can put my real hands to any part of it.

I know and sense obstacles long before my body comes in contact with them. My house is perfectly clear to me. It is lighted up with a perfect light, and I can see that it is in good repair. How I dislike to have it torn or marred.

Why, I have actually grown and developed my perfect form in this house, and never realized it before; strengthened and rounded out the beautiful lines of my imperishable self. I absorb and appropriate the finer particles of the food my house needs for repair; also the sunshine and the gentle breeze as it fans the quivering air.

I have been asleep. I have awakened with that intense energy that the strong child only knows after his sleep. I am more than alive! All vibrations are as known currents to me. Here, securely encased in my body-house, immortal!—my real self. Yes, surely.

Ah! now I know; knowing, I will watch my thought waves, protect myself from those who send the swift darts of enmity, and describe for you, if you will listen to me, the form, features and appearance of your friends on the other side, and will tell you the words that their spirit voices vibrate to me in that etheric zone wherein they dwell. I will also tell you some of the wonders that I found.

I forgot to state that I never wink with my real eyes; they adjust themselves telescopically to objects at any distance, even to canons of miles away; and while my house is resting and being repaired for the coming duties of the day, I look to the terrestrial spheres and examine countless realms of boundless worlds and spheres, and there I receive wisdom and subtile lasting impressions that I store away in the secret innermost repository of my inner self, so that when I shall finally leave this house, I shall not be uninformed as to the way I shall take to reach those remote shores. Thus while encased I see and examine with my telescopic, telepathic, inner finer vision where countless, boundless worlds are rolling in the grand symphony of nature's eternal, unlimited spaces, and the fresh song of the morning is ever heard. More countless than the sands of earth's shores are those systems of worlds appearing in the canons of distances; even to my far penetrating sight they appear not as in sunlight, but in a soft, clear, perfect light, and tinted as the finest steel engravings known to mortals, perfect in form and outline; only I cannot stop upon them to examine them. This is not my privilege; it is only for me to see and learn the ways and paths that I may safely tread them when I leave my earthly home.

My work here is not finished. I must perfect myself more. I must look and see that my inner self is matured and strengthened by the magnetism of mother earth, so that when the final preparations are complete I can go and leave no residue behind that will serve me in that higher home.

My friends, I wish to tell you this, as I see and know it. You are just like myself, only you don't know it. This you will all find out when the time of your journey bursts upon your inner spiritual vision.

Here a voice said to me, "Your friends helped you write this." I am impressed that they have a deeper and a far more reaching object in view than perhaps appears to the reader, viz., to show me what, where, who, and how the real self is; dwells, lives, grows, and unfolds, and may and can be the supreme master and guardian of its own destiny.

Health is Your Heritage.

If you feel sick, depressed and irritated, if your food disagrees with you, if you are constipated, if you suffer from catarrh or kidney and bladder trouble, you are not getting what you are entitled to out of life. There is no reason why you should not be restored to a life of perfect health and usefulness. There is a cure for you and it won't cost you a cent to try it. The Vernal Remedy Company have so much confidence in their superb remedy, Vernal Palmettona (formerly known as Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine), that they are willing to send, free and prepaid, to any reader of The Progressive Thinker that writes for it, a trial bottle. You can try and test absolutely free of all charge. We advise every reader to take advantage of this generous offer and write to-day to The Vernal Remedy Co., 452 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

A Brilliant Intellectual Light Sheds Its Rays on a Putrid Mass of Creedalism.

THE FUTURE POSITION OF THE CLERGY.

Mr. Goldwin Smith on the Vitality of Religions of Authority.

To the Editor of the New York Sun:—Sir.—Your editorial of March 16, suggested by the case of a young clergyman compelled by conscientious scruples to leave the profession, opened a question most momentous not only in its religious but in its social bearing. No one doubts that the clergy have hitherto been and are still a vital element of our social organization. But if M. Sabatier is right in holding that the days of every religion of authority are numbered, there will be an end, of course, of all dogma, all creeds, all articles of religion, all established ritual, all ordinations, and consequently of the existence of the clergy as specially appointed keepers and dispensers of religious truth. The churches themselves apparently must be closed, or handed over to secular use. A vast chasm will be felt in our social life. If man's conception of his origin, state and destiny is totally changed, we must expect a revolution in his general state to follow.

The revolution, if it is to come, will probably be more sudden in the United States than elsewhere, because among your people there is, with special activity o fmind, a general level of education and intelligence over which new ideas and sentiments spread like the tide running in over a flat. Yet even in the United States, though religious belief may have been losing its hold, it seems that the churches are still well filled and the contributions have not fallen off. We had a startling account the other day of the prevalence of heathenism attended by moral collapse in the rural districts of Rhode Island. But of this apparently there were local causes. In Catholic countries, Italy and France, while intelligence almost universally is free-thinking, simple ignorance still believes and will probably continue for some time to believe in the Pope, St. Januarius and the Immaculate Conception. Even in Protestant countries there are masses which, though they are educated in comparison with the masses in most Roman Catholic countries, and will still take the Higher Criticism a long time to reach. Social habit and the feeling that church-going is respectable will last long. So will the political conservatism which upholds what has been coarsely called the "Black Police."

In England, the State Church, distracted as it is, and though a large section of the educated classes has ceased to believe or pretend to believe in its doctrines, is upheld from a mixture of social and political motives. I have known one instance, at least—I think more than one of the building of churches from such motives by men who had renounced Christianity. This is a practical illustration of the saying of Gibbon that all religions were to the people equally true, to the philosopher equally false, to the statesman equally useful.

However, if the dissolution of religious organization must presently come. The signs of are visible. There is disturbance in all the churches, even in the Church of Rome, though in her case it is more easily hidden from view than in the case of any one of the more democratic churches. There was a considerable abstention of prelates from the Council of Rome which affirmed the infallibility of the Pope. There is a conflict, evident, though half smothered, between the Jesuit order and the party of conscience. In the Protestant churches we have hot theological debate, futile heresy trials, desperate attempts to revise creeds, of which the stubborn dogma defies revision, and to put a liberal construction on anathemas, the authors of which meant exactly what they said. Even ritualism is probably in great measure a phase of doubt flying from itself. Clerical consciences are pricked, as is the conscience of the young man who at the same time assures us that within his knowledge many clergymen, some of distinction, have abandoned the profession; that more are restrained only by temporal considerations; that even students from theological colleges are renouncing ordination, and that those who enter the ministry from the universities are usually the weak and poor in intellect, stronger minds going off into other callings. The last statement, if correct, is ominous, since it implies that the spiritual leadership of the people is falling, intellectually, into unfit hands.

The consciences of the clergy, who have actively to teach, preach, and lead in prayer, must be more disturbed than those of the laity, who have only to sit or kneel through the service. The conscience of the Protestant pastor is likely to be more disturbed than that of the Catholic priest, whose individuality is generally lost in the performance of an ordained rite. The idea which seemed to float in the minds of Renan and Matthew Arnold, that the people might be left in blissful ignorance and that the clergy might adapt their ministrations to it, involves a sacrifice of the clerical conscience which could never be seriously proposed.

You note the manifest tendency of the clergy generally to glide from the work of the theological pulpit and religious ministration into that of philanthropic leadership, and to concern themselves less with the life to come and more with the life that is. This is a natural transition. The combination of the two offices is not new, though the proportion of the secular and philanthropic to the theological has been signally increased. Nor, if spiritual life is a reality and the essence of Christianity is true, is there anything to forbid the professional union of a spiritual pastorate on a rational footing with a congenial leadership in good works. Unitarianism has almost come to this already. However, there is a veil; it must be owned, over the immediate future, the raising of which aged eyes are not likely to behold.

GOLDWIN SMITH.

Man as a Sub-Creator and a Typical Egoist, or Mind as an Arbitrary Ruler Over the Empire of Government.

This prominent argumentative thread interwoven in the wool of human interests, is forcibly brought to our notice, by the discourse of the Rev. Heber Newton, on "Training of Thought as a Life Force," and in which the creative process seems to have been especially employed in the manufacture of a disproportionate percentage of by-products, and from which is evolved the questions of the relative standings of egoism and altruism, as modern developments of man as a moral and social being.

In the idealistic trendings of argument, in the discourse considered, the unfolding pages of intellectual development seem to have been rolled backward to the shadowy, intuitive plains of thought, as it flourished in the palmy days.

Of Confucius, of Jehovah; of Brahma, of Siwa;
Of Isis, of Osiris; of Horus and of Rah.
Arch-angels, Fetich demons; Fairies from the Land of Nod;
And of hundreds, if not thousands, other Tutelary Gods.

In spite of, and in disrespect to, the modern in-rush of science and practical scientific thought, giving to immature childhood the intellectual scintillations and acumen, in broad mental conceptions, more than equalling the premedieval sage and philosopher, the Rev. Heber Newton, and a generous following of Newtonized intellects, have succeeded, within perhaps a single generation, in inciting a deplorable stampede of the theological units, on a half mad, half blinded chute, backward to the dreamy occultism of a primitive, indolent intellectuality.

The subject essence of this discourse is contained in the following quotation from Mr. Newton's argument; and is selected, in the main, because it so fittingly represents, in a new mantle, and on a modern pedestal, the long-since science-shattered idol of a semi-civilized religious epoch. The quotation is as follows: "God creates the universe, first of all by thinking it; as every man creates his world around him, by first of all thinking them into being in his own mind."

What an ambiguity of logic! What an inversion of the plan of natural creation and development! What a sacrifice of philosophy to mythological occultation! What a bartering of the fruits of a hard-earned realism, for the husks of a spontaneous idealism! Both Gods and men create their own environing worlds, or with impunity effectually sever the great subjective from the punitive objective! What a miracle of all miracles! The intellectual factors of science and education have already delegated to environments the great prime factorship of a creator's compliment. As an initial heritage, arbitrarily subjected to environs, man, all the way along, has posed as the CREATED; but by this modern artist, each individual is pictured as independent in matters of his own creation; creating, owning, utilizing a world by and for himself as a product of his own ephemeral mind.

Thus, then, must the supposed man be robbed of his acknowledged and earned capacity, shorn of all licensed excuses for his short-comings, and of all sources from which he must or should receive, objectively, force for his mentality, and cause for his conduct. Intellectual or physical inheritance is non-effective; parentage imposes no obligations; organic law need not be respected. In fact, environments become but playthings, and the potency of universal law is, at option, "stood-off" by this wonderful man.

His mind is directed or impelled by what? Environs, which should be considered as products of his mental force, could supply him with no mental energy; direct no particular or general phase of mental conduct, would be in no wise causative, and would vibrate not from the causative to the effective, but from the effective to nothing.

And again, what is the nature of this "world around him" that man is said to create, and how does he control it? Does he encompass himself with legions of fetich demons, faery spirits, or tutelary gods, and force environing antagonisms into estates of love and servitude, like his weirdly pretentious barbarian ancestors, or does he employ the more economic method of subject hypnotism? On this point, though a vital one, the instructions of the instructor fail to instruct. But we will not be thereby discomfited, though there is a great dearth of literature on this and kindred subjects, that, if supplied, would leave a perpetual shower of information in their wake. But words are not argument, for words, even, when properly arranged, express ideas only; a group of ideas, properly arranged, express but simple facts; a series of facts and their relations, properly arranged, express knowledge, and no more; and finally, a system of knowledge, or knowledge systemized, judiciously selected, expresses wisdom; the climax of human intelligence; but words alone, or even abstract ideas, do not carry the understanding direct onto the plane of human wisdom.

This "world around him," that man is said to create, might be, in its ideal conception, but a mental picture; and by considering the mentality as a product of itself only, can we realize that the thing created thereby, is absolutely a product of such an independent unit. Literally rendered, such argument advises us that we have full liberty, and in fact an endowment of duty, to render the agonizing cries of the afflicted as sweet music to our souls; thereby cutting us off from such obnoxious miseries of our intruding brother man, and thus establishing ourselves in an isolated and happy estate of human egotism; wherein, under the old human plan, we would assimilate, to a degree, the miseries of our fellow-being, and partially experience such environing conditions, as conditions native to our own organisms, thereby generating human sympathy, followed by charitable conduct, extended in profitable justice, to the benefits of a fellow-man, and the great cause of human ethics.

And again, is it possible that by a temporary freak of the will, impelled by an artificial cause, we can look with joy upon the hollow eyo and sunken cheek of starvation's countless victims? Or can we, barring all objective realities, generate in our mental workshop alone, a beautiful June morning, with its associated birds, and brooks and flowers, out of the real and tangible, bleak and blinding storms of the frost-king, with its snow-and-ice-clad hills and vales, at December's fading twilight? It might be said that there lies latent in the intellect of man a qualification by which can be developed such mental pictures as would feebly represent a spring-time, at a time when the ego, in unison with the balance of associated nature's environs, is actually experiencing the chilly blasts of the dying year; but could the mortal ego reap and actually experience from such spontaneous and fanciful mind dreams, and in the regular order of nature's course convey such hallucinational phenomena to the crucible of the human soul?

Newton's God, immortal, incomprehensible, unknown, has created a universe, the comprehensible nature of which, to those who ought to most fully comprehend it, and their subtile relations thereto, is coarse and material, barren and unsatisfactory; the fountain-head from which all terrestrial miseries have quaffed. This has been accomplished by the application of a great infinite mind to what? Nothing. He thought it into existence in his own mind. We have finally learned that thought, or "to think," is a transitive verb, and that we do not think of things, but actually think them. There was an infinitude of nothing, and an infinite mind thought it into everything, and so we have the universe.

Apparently, that his assertions may have the force of argument, before the the common minds, he simplifies it by enthroning all men as creators; but having no more material worlds that may pose as mortal products for his mortal Gods, he must, it seems from necessity, intend in his non-instructive instructions, that the individual birth-to-death, and thence spiritual, out-into-an-infinite-eternity life experiences of each vital unit, is the "world around him," that each mortal intelligence, by fickle impulse of mind, has woven into his web of life.

The rights of human inquiry inspires us to ask, from what marvelous and occult sources have the Heber Newtons of the past obtained the knowledge that all was once both chaotic and nothing, or that all is now orderly and something. Let such revise their experiences, and the arbitrary empiricisms accompanying them, and with caution, report again to their world of students, how much of this universe, this human cosmos, has sprung up at the directions of the index hand of design, and how much has been thrust upon them, and especially for them, in spite of the last and intensest human efforts, helmed by the fraternal hand of human purpose.

The law of physical inheritance, allied with the designingless warfare of environs, projects upon the plains of life, a conscious automata, and gives to such, discordant organisms, inferior mental enlightenment, brutal and carnal passions, etc., at the very genesis of life's responsibility. Nature, by virtue of such laws, and mechanical efforts are thrown in and around her varigated subject organisms, endows some with weak bodies, some with strong bodies, but not one with a perfect body; unfolds some with dull intellects, some with bright intellects, but none with infallible intellects; some void of either instinct or reason, with but a bare consciousness; some developed to a sublime consciousness, but none to psychic infallibility. Yet this Heber Newton, with one isolated flash of thought, would make all these divers subjects of the adversity of Nature's perpetual and irresistible crash of environs, the creators of their own destiny, the infallible directors of their own welfare.

To what foolish purpose, O fallen warrior, comes to thy bleeding side that red-crossed angel of love, and hope and cheer? You are your own world-builder; she builds none of it.

Why, O blushing lover, allow the soul's cardinal throbbings to disturb your peaceful breast, when impulsed by the radiant smiles of thy psychic affinity? You, rather, should rebuke such psychic advances of this affinite being. Such comes from without; you build your world from within.

If all is subject to the impulses of thy deific attributes, O wonderful man, where operates the potency of thy would-be intellectual teachers; where indices the efficacy of thy moral instructors?

All that thou need'st is just thine own subjective self, most marvelous creature and creator.

Meanwhile, what disposition will you make, O modern prophet, of the countless demi-gods of personified nature? of the co-ordinate figure-heads of ancient theology? What will become, O Astrologer, of the terrestrial subjects of thine Astral Gods? Where, O Aesculapius, is the recognized potency of thine Alchemic doses? Where, O Christus, are the victims of thy sword; the fruits of thy vineyard, the compensations for thy cross? Where, O Shepherd, are the lambs to be fed?

In spite of the combined potencies of environs and inherent laws, in the higher creations of mental organisms, this literary prince, by one subtile stroke of his pen, in the transparent garb of logic, has both virtually elevated man to the miraculous dignity of self-creator, and lowered him to the base puerility of self-created; thus forcing the inference that, henceforth, all human interrelationship must be untaught; soul intercommunion—unrecognized; spiritual interdependence—unknown; all dead—ignored—forgotten.

And finally, let us ask our informant in this one great philosophic career of human life, at what time in this serious unavoidable race with dissolution's grim horseman; in this protracted plunge down the gauntleted lane of life's dim and fickle uncertainties, this mingled pain-and-pleasure-charged ego commences, under full potency and responsibility, his world-building career. Tell us, O marvelous instructor, when is this finite spanned universe, this mortal cosmos abandoned as completed?

Does it begin when the brawny man of iron frame and mature mentality has already passed through the genetic experiences, and is held in wonder's suspension on the brink of a new universe?

Is it when the companionships of gay youth lead from bright highways, down to dark and still darker valleys of immorality, when golden showers of ancestral wealth constantly glisten in his hopeful pathway, or when the mental endowment of a bright intellectuality indices the road to wisdom and to fame?

Is it when plump and laughing babyhood first writhes in fever's merciless tentacles; in accident's gory maws; or in starvation's horny clutches? Or is it when the first gasp of life informs him by its omnipresent first flash of pain, that the great prime necessity, "breath of life," is his first antagonist, and vibrates throughout his ever sensitive organism, the first clangs of nature's discordant fingers?

And lastly, when is this world completed? When can the final verdict of the infallible judge, the supreme godhead, be pronounced upon the completed, egoistic labors of these, his subaltern gods? Not while consciousness lasts; not until both memory and mental concepts are destroyed; then all is destroyed.

Or, these individual creators, being the embodiment of a true egoism, their labors being of and for themselves exclusively, creating their own worlds only, their responsibility must fall within the boundaries of their own special interests, thus barring the justice and necessity of a hand that would punish. Make all, or any part of the socio-intellectual universe creators of their own worlds, and you make them creators of their own destiny, if not also creators of their own origin. You make them at once, both free moral and physical agents, and also assembled types of a GENUINE EGOISM. Thus banishing all traces or shadows, either of a human or an ultrahuman ALTRUISM.

And thus we will leave the divine, his aggregation of egoistic Gods, and their egoism; and as before, continue onward toward the harmonious realms of a pure altruism; where are all others helping to create the world of the one, and the one helping to create the worlds of all others; where not divided, but united, either in joys or in sorrows, are all basking in the fraternal waves of love-light, transradiating its flashing beams from soul to soul throughout the peaceful infinitude of an ALTRUISTIC WORLD.

The Golden Calf Illustrated.

To the Editor:—I am somewhat amused, interested, skepticulated, etc., with the idea of laying your hand upon a genuine medium by sending the "golden calf" after him as a sort of bait. There is no doubt that the medium that gets the $1,000 will be as well advertised as the most renowned patent medicine; and the "golden calf" will leave a path, however crooked, that we can all travel to conviction. I was about twenty years getting to be a Spiritualist, and I had a sort of vague idea that my friends would fall over one another trying to get into the Spiritualistic ranks after I became convinced, but they didn't; and my infant ideas are slowly expanding.

I am firmly convinced that the "Golden Calf" is one of the main rounds in the ladder of fraud or perhaps the whole ladder itself, and if gold is to cure fraud, it would be well to give it in homeopathic doses. There is no party that wants to butcher this calf, unless it is the socialist, hang his hide in some museum and have a glorious feast upon his carcass. Truth will never soar as a bird, so long as it is held under the hoof of the "Golden Calf." "It won't pay the preacher." We will never gather grapes in this country by voting thorns.

This last sentence is short, but alas! I have betrayed my politics.

If some medium gets this $1,000, what is there to hinder me from thinking that an immense advertising scheme is on foot. I am as skeptical of the man that has the $1,000 as I am with the medium.

We are not to blame for our skepticism, for it has grown up with us from childhood, and we may take on more of it than we can well carry and become non compos mentis.

This man that has the $1,000 to give to a medium may become convinced of the truths of Spiritualism; the few that witness it may also be convinced, but it is too much money for the conviction of the few.

He had better lay it out to help butcher the "Golden Calf," the primal cause of fraud.

The basic fabric upon which society now rests is being weighed in the balance and will be found wanting.

This put me in mind of the words of Prof. Denton in "Our Planet":

"The old must pass away that the new may come in.

"So passed away, with the Permian formation, old oceans, old islands, old shells, old fishes."

A VERY IMPORTANT CALL IS MADE.

A GENEROUS OFFER, AND A CALL TO SPIRITUALISTS.

To the Spiritualists at Large:—A generous offer has been made by a prominent Spiritualist in this city to give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to the Mediums' Relief Fund of the N. S. A., for the benefit of aged and needy mediums, provided the Spiritualists at large will contribute another Thousand Dollars to the same relief fund by the first of June next. The N. S. A. is now paying out a large monthly sum in pensions to worthy mediums; the calls for aid increase and the fund is constantly being depleted. Let every generous soul who has not already done all possible for this worthy object, kindly send contributions, large or small, to the following address, each will be acknowledged with thanks. The generous man who makes the offer desires to be unnamed to the public.

The Revival of Learning.

Did It Begin In Italy After The Fourteenth Century, and in England About the Year 1500?

Further citations from Professor Johnson's "Rise of English Culture."

The exposure of monkish fraud by the learned Jesuit, Jean Hardouin (1846-1729), is the most remarkable event that has occurred in ecclesiastical literary annals. He was a librarian. In 1690, as he tells us, he began to suspect fraud in the writings ascribed to Augustine and his contemporaries. In 1692 he detected the whole system devised in the fourteenth century and carried out thereafter. He insisted that it must be a Jesuit who should detect and expose these frauds, because there was no other Catholic family that had not been imposed upon by spurious writings under the names of distinguished men. The points which he made against the old Benedictine writings have never been answered and are indeed incapable of being answered. Having pursued a different path of inquiry from him, I am able to say that I can confirm him by having arrived at similar conclusions.

Hardouin maintained that Christianity had no authentic documents save of the Vulgate Bible, the decrees of the Council of Trent, and a few coins.

The weakness of Hardouin's position as a scholar was in maintaining the antiquity of the Vulgate, at the same time that he denied the antiquity of the alone the Vulgate is known to us. But Hardowin was a spirit; he must beg the question at some point.

Hardouin was certainly right when he declared that the age in which he lived was the first truly critical age in the course of church history.

The earliest known catalogue of the books in the monastery of Monte Cassino is of the time of Paul II., 1464-1471; the next dates from the time of Clement VII., 1525-1534.

I have no hesitation in pointing to the period 1464-1534 as, roundly speaking, the first great period of Italian Benedictine literature. Whatever had been produced before that time was most slight in point of quantity and of no importance to the historical student.

Montfaucan, the great Benedictine Paleographer (1655-1741) preserved a silence on the subject of Dante's "Divine Comedy," which Father Tosti admits to be inexplicable, had the existence of the MS. been known to him. The "Divine Comedy" bears strong internal evidence in parts of having been written by a clerk imbued with that widespread anti-papal feeling which led to the Reformation.

The legends of earlier libraries melt away before the admitted fact of the late origin of the libraries in Venice, in Paris, Canterbury and Oxford. No collection of books worthy of the name of an English library, in modern acceptation of the term, existed until the time of Sir Thomas Bodley (1544-1612).

The scheme of Benedictine literature was begun close upon the time when a collection of books is known to have existed in the cloister. In the next age intense curiosity is felt among the inquiring monks and friars to read the book which is a novelty in the world—I mean the Bible.

For the first time, late in the fifteenth century, a knot of monks in Monte Cassino are busy in writing works which are to be issued by-and-by with the names of Paul the Deacon, Peter the Deacon, Paul the Monk, and many others. The ecclesiastical names of Peter and Paul are beloved in Monte Cassino; they took thir rise on that spot.

Paul the Deacon is the first to write of the Anglo-Saxons.

A monkish biographer of Paul II. (1458-1464), reports that there was a club or guild of young men in Rome who regarded the orthodox faith as "resting on certain tricks of saints, rather than true testimony," and a saying is put into the mouth of the genial and secular-minded Leo X., 1515-1521—Jesus Christ."

The great law-giver, St. Benet, constantly cites Scripture in his Rule. Generally he cites the Vulgate, but sometimes the Septuagint. Father Haften has pointed out that St. Benet does not always follow the Gospel in his allusions to persons in Gospel time, e. g., when he makes the Publican say, "Lord, I am not worthy, sinner that I am, to lift my eyes to Heaven." The explanation given is that St. Benet infers these words from what St. Luke says. The true explanation is that the Rule and the Gospels were the production of the same Order; and the Rule may have been composed at a time when the text of the Gospels was not yet fixed; or, again, the Benedictine literature was constructed upon the system of sentences, and a series of "Says he," or "It is written" were gradually made the property of named, yet ideal persons.

The Christian Scriptures from which the Benedictines deduce all their system, were by them first deduced from the Scriptures of the Synagogue. By him "who brings out of his treasury things new and old," is meant each Abbot of the Order who is skilled in the Divine Law.

After St. Benedict came Cassiodore, who is made to declaim vaguely on Divine learning, Dionysius Exiguus (the small), a great Scriptural scholar, St. Gregory the Great, all the product of the Benedictine Round Table.

The Gregorian system of Biblical interpretation, with all its artifice and false science, shows how impossible it was for the monk to admit the common people to the unaided perusal of the Scriptures.

The distinguished allegorist is made to admit that he understands neither Hebrew nor Greek, he is content with the Italic and the new "version of Jerome." In other words, the Gregorian style is late fifteenth or early sixteenth century; the time when our ancestors began to hear of this Pontiff who had sent Augustine and other Benedictines to these shores, and a variety of other novel "histories."

Bede, first heard of as an ancient monk of Warmouth in the early Tudor time (about 1500 or later), and exalted to Venerability during the same period, duly succeeds in the illustrious Roll, in turn duly pointing to Greek and Latin scholars in the South and North who preceded him.

Then St. Boniface and his coterie of imaginary Benedictines of a monastery near Oxford make their appearance—all luminous Biblical men in dark ages, when the Bible had never been heard of.

Later imaginary Benedictines all drink from the same fountain, the writings of Saints Augustine, Ambrose, Jerome and Gregory.

When we arrive at Trithemius (1462-1516), Abbot of Spanheim, we find him in bitter conflict with slothful monks, who are not to be induced to study the Scriptures nor any other books. He calls them "frogs."

The monks were forbidden to read Lutheran books, and the study of Theology must have been very limited among them until after the Council of Trent.

The sermon on the Mount is a Benedictine composition. The blessing on the poor in spirit is the blessing of the life in the cloister. It is Benedictines who say that all other philosophy is wisdom of this world and folly with God. They put into the mouth of incarnate God the commendation of poverty. They make their apostle Paul exhort men to become fools that they may be wise.

The friars at Merton College during the Revival of learning felt the necessity of cultivating a little of the science that was current. They selected the old English name of Bacon for the designation of their ideal or idol scholar. They wrote short tracts on astronomy, alchemy, mystical, theology, etc., which they ascribed to one or the other of their Bacons, for they had two of them. They drew up a catalogue of their scholars and referred them to an earlier age. But they made so much noise about Bacon that scholars began to believe there had been such a wizard, the miracle of the thirteenth century. And yet at the end of the reign of Henry VIII. (1547), ony thirty of these poor tracts could be produced. Roger Bacon's "Opus Magnus" was not forthcoming. From the pens of Oxford and Paris students his writings were greatly swollen in bulk. Not until the time of Queen Elizabeth (1558-1603) did men begin to hear of a complete system of science under the Baconian name.

A MOST REMARKABLE VISION.

A Lady Sees the Spirit of Her Babe, Accompanied by a Lady Who Had Passed to the Realms of Souls.

To the Editor:—I will relate what I believe to be a genuine case of materialization that happened here. Mrs. Cora R. Bloom is a neighbor lady, and with her husband and two children live here on a small farm. She makes no claim to having any mediumistic powers, and is not a Spiritualist, but is a member of the M. E. Church, and this is her experience in her own words:

"Our third child was born on Aug. 10th, 1901, and lived only twenty-one days. After this I would lay awake nights while my husband was asleep and cry for my babe, and wonder where it was, and it seemed to me that death had ended all with it. But about two months after baby was buried, I awoke one night as usual with the thoughts of it uppermost in my mind, when suddenly I saw Mrs. Stearns (a neighbor lady who had passed away about a year previous), with my babe in her arms, in space, just above the bed and holding it so that I could plainly see its little face. I saw both just as natural as life. I gazed on them for a few seconds, when they vanished. I had no feeling of fear, but on the contrary, I felt satisfied about baby, and ever since then I have felt that it was all right and in good care."

LEADING QUESTIONS.

WHICH WAY ARE YOU PULLING?

Some Thoughts That Scintillate With Divine Light, and Which Should Cause Each One to Aspire for the Purest and Best.

To the Editor:—The enclosed clipping, from the Detroit Evening News (Which Way Are You Pulling?) is very suggestive and full of thought, both from a political and religious standpoint.

To me, it is a sermon in itself, and it may awaken a thought in some other sleeping soul if of enough importance to place in your columns.

As ever a well-wisher for your success in the cause of Free Thought, and public discussion of all subjects,

J. P. RUSSELL.

Grand Ledge, Mich.

Which Way Are You Pulling?

There are in this world two sets of forces—one set pulling down, the other pulling up.

The homes, the churches, the ethical societies, schools, art museums, the higher drama, the social settlements are pulling men up, putting more light and joy in human lives and increasing the sum total of the world's happiness.

Arrayed against these benign agencies are the forces of greed, appetite and passion which, through all time, have pulled men downward.

Every man and woman is influenced more or less by both of these forces. He yields more often and more readily to the one with which he is most in sympathy. Habits, purposes, ideas, associations all are tendrils, or tentacles, by which one or the other of these forces gain hold on one.

As times change these forces assume new shapes, new phases, new names, but through all th[illegible] and under all conditions they are substantially the same—the one animated by love, the other by greed; the one working for the great brotherhood in which there shall be a common glory and a common joy, the glory of good deeds, the joy of a noble self-respect; the other animated by a selfishness that is ready to see humanity damned, root and branch, if it can only "put money in the purse" and attain to the gratification of the lust for place and power.

We are not only influenced by these forces, but we blend into them and become part of them. Our every action is a force for good or evil in some other soul.

It is a fearful, unending battle, of vital and far-reaching results, and it is the first business of every one to ask himself the questions:

"Which side am I on?"

"Am I with the forces which diminish the sum of human joy and dwarf the world's manhood, or am I on the side of those forces which flood the world with gladness and promote the character which is the basis of all true civilization?"

It is purely a question of love or selfishness, of manliness or unmanliness, of the kindly human interest that would live for the brotherhood, or the stupid brute indifference that would find its supreme satisfaction in its own miserable greed.

No matter how unimportant you may seem to be in the world's affairs you are a vital force one way or the other.

Which way are you pulling?

From the Spirit Realms.

Spirit Carlyle Petersilea.

While on Earth Mr. Petersilea was a medium for the transmission of important letters from those long in spirit life. Now, having become a freed spirit himself, he will convey his best thoughts through the mediumship of his devoted wife, and we are sure they will prove interesting to our readers.

Letter Number Five.

In speaking of the cathedral, and how it was builded, reminds me of the pictures that my wife and Mrs. Hadlock saw on plain writing paper, by pinning it up where the light would strike through the paper. After the description of how the pictures were made visible, was published in The Progressive Thinker, I received quite a number of letters, saying that the pictures were caused by the inequalities of the paper; but I am happy to say that such was not the case. There were hundreds of pictures seen on one small sheet of paper, and all were beautiful faces of spiritual beings. While looking at them intently, many would disappear and others take their places. I was controlled by Denton to write out how they were produced; and I now find that he wrote the truth. They were thought pictures, just as the cathedral was a thought picture. Denton, just as he wrote, stood behind my wife, and threw, or sent out, his thoughts and the paper focused and reflected them as they went vibrating onward. My wife being a sensitive could really perceive them; besides, many of those pictures were the photographic impressions of spiritual beings that were actually present, standing at a proper distance so that the reflection of the image would appear small.

The scientific Denton was eager to try this experiment, and Mrs. Hadlock and my wife were excellent mediums for the purpose. This episode, at the time, deeply impressed and interested me. It was also written, by Denton, that in some such way as this, the great fact of immortality, and the presence of unseen beings would be fully established. Belief is one thing, and actual, scientific demonstration, is another; and when once immortality is demonstrated and scientifically proven, the matter will forever be set at rest, and there can never be any more doubts, no more than there are now about electricity, the X-ray, or the newly discovered radium.

Of course, as I had been so deeply interested in these thought pictures, I was anxious to meet Denton personally, here in the spirit life, and hold converse with him. I asked my father if we might not pay him a visit?

"Certainly," he answered; "and, no doubt, Mr. Denton will be very glad to meet you as an unfettered spirit."

"Does he know that I have left my body?" I asked.

"I think it very likely. He keeps himself pretty well informed of all that takes place on earth, for he hopes to be able to be the one to demonstrate ethereal photography, and is watching sharply for the right kind of medium through whom to give it to the earthly plane. He is an exceedingly busy man, an untiring worker here on this plane as well as for the earthly plane. I think we shall find him, either at his laboratory, or at a scientific college not far away. He lectures, and has classes, at the college when not engaged in trying to demolish popery."

"Has he tried to destroy the cathedral wherein we found Franz Liszt?"

"He has tried very hard to enlighten many of the votaries belonging to it, who insist that they are right and he is wrong."

"The Romish church is fast gaining ground in the United States," I said. "My wife and I often talked of it sorrowfully, but always ended by saying that, probably, we should not live long enough to meet the terrible crisis when it came. Father, will there be such a crisis as we feared?"

"So far as I can tell the future," he replied, "there will be; and the streets, within the cities, will yet flow with the blood of the so-called heretic. History repeats itself, and the slimy octopus has already wound itself in and out, and all about, the free states of America; yes, and what is left of the Protestants will yet join hands with the mother church, as an aid and ally to destroy what they are pleased to call atheism and infidelity together with the new spiritual movement."

"Cannot this be averted?"

"I fear not," he answered.

"And are not all the hosts of heaven able to destroy such monstrous errors? I thought the heavenly spheres were stronger, and had the power to govern such things on the earth."

"There is only one way to do so," he said; "and that is to enlighten the minds of mankind, especially on religious subjects. What can be expected, when children are taught church dogmas, and might, which is war, is taught to youths, before they are old enough to do a great deal of thinking for themselves? Mediumship is the only remedy; for, how else can it be known on earth that the Romish church is not right? It is only by obtaining a knowledge of the heavenly spheres that church dogmas can be refuted—and how can anything be known of the spheres except through mediumship? How would you have ever known but that my former ideas when on earth, the ideas that I myself instilled into your mind when you were a child, how would you have known but they were true, and that death ended all, unless I had not actually forced my writings upon you from the spirit world, controlled and forced them upon you, against your will power, and sometimes even obsession had to be resorted to? Spirit control, possession, and obsession, are all right when used for the right, to give truth to mankind and uproot and destroy error. But, here is Denton's laboratory. Perhaps we may find him within."

And, sure enough, there he was, engaged in some kind of chemical analysis. He arose as we entered and came forward to greet us. My father was not unknown to him. He recognized me at once, but I had never met him face to face before to my knowledge. He grasped my hand and shook it warmly:

"Welcome, my dear professor," he said with a pleasing smile. "And so you have joined the great majority, I see? Truly, I did not expect you here so soon—feel sorry that you did not pay more attention to natural laws and stay in the body the allotted time of man. You did not listen to your wife, it seems, and I did not listen to mine, so we both paid the forfeit and left them to mourn in sorrow and loneliness our early departure from earth."

"Ah, yes, Mr. Denton," I replied. "I am now well aware of my folly, but it is the old, old story of spilled milk," and I smiled at him.

"Brother," he said, as he pressed my hand; "we were both headstrong, but let us try to mend matters as well as we can. We may be able to make the spilled milk good, after all."

"I know what you mean," I said. "You mean that I can now retrieve my error by learning all that one can about this life, and by controlling my wife to write, thus make amends, in part, at least."

"Precisely! You are an apt pupil, I see."

"Mr. Denton," I said; "I have often heard my wife speak of you. She admired you greatly in her younger life. She attended very many of your lectures, and as you have controlled much of the writing, what more natural than that I should greatly desire to meet you face to face?"

"Nothing could be more natural," he said, "and here I am, what there is of me. Not as large as I might be, am I?"

I laughed as I replied: "Choice goods are usually in small packages."

"What of yourself, then?" he asked, quizzically. "Perhaps musical vibrations increased your size to their present proportions? Be that as it may, I am small in size, while you are large, and our souls are as different as our mortal bodies were, or as our spiritual forms now are. But, my brother, I love you—have loved you since I first was brought en rapport with you. I knew you well, when we were both in the earth life, often met you on the street, or in the old-time horse car, and attended some of your concerts, that I might hear the great player play; but this is the first time I have ever spoken to you, I think."

"Yes; you were more fortunate in knowing me. I unfortunate in not knowing you. I hope now, that our friendship and brotherly love will be mutual."

"Amen!" he ejaculated. "And now I know that you need my help."

"I need all the help I can get," I said. "I want to work. I am eager to work. I want to know just how to work, and what to do. My father, here, is doing all he can for me; but he, like myself, understands that in unity there is strength, and congenial minds must band together in order to accomplish any great work. I want, very much, to join my forces with yours, and others, to help give light and truth to the lower world."

"In order to do that," he said, one must first understand light and truth in their various bearings. That which appears to one to be true, to another seems false. I never did care much for theories: Facts, facts were what I wanted and what I still want. How does that strike you, my brother?"

"There are things that I intuitively know to be true, which I never did, and do not now, reason about. My wife used to tell me that I always jumped at things, just as I jumped at music, but that I always jumped directly into truth. What have you to say to that, Mr. Denton?

Mr. Denton squared himself and looked at me intently.

"I think your wife jumped directly into the truth herself when she said so. Light and truth seem to radiate all around you. You are the soul of harmony, or a soul that radiates the harmonies of nature, and light and truth are among the great harmonies. I delve among the facts, while you rise into the harmonious region."

"Do not flatter me, I beg. I would also like to grasp facts that I might assist in giving them to the earthly world. However much I may intuitively know these facts, I must learn to demonstrate them to others—like music which I have always known within my soul, yet was obliged to learn all the facts or technicalities of it before I could demonstrate it to others. Mr. Denton, you are one who can teach me all facts wherein you are pleased to say you delve."

"Well, come to my lectures, will you?"

"Most certainly. Nothing could please me more."

"Bring your friend Liszt, along with and stubborn nature," I said. Do you think, Mr. Denton, that he will ever perceive truth as we see it?"

"That is somewhat owing to his set and stubborn nature," I said. "o you think, Mr. Denton, tht he will ever perceive truth as we see it?"

"Possibly not," he answered. "I think it will be a long time before he gives up the personal male God—the dominant male God."

"What fact do you base your belief upon?" I asked.

"The fact that he, himself, is a dominant, stubborn, male personality, who will not yet, nor for a long period of time to come, allow that females are, in all respects, equal to males."

"There!" said I, "you have hit the nail squarely on the head. That is one of the facts that you have brought to light by delving for it."

"And how does it come about," he asked, "that you are in possession of this fact without delving for it? You must have been taught, or imbibed the idea in youth, that women were inferior to men, especially as you received your education in German schools. Did you jump into that fact also?"

"Ah, Mr. Denton. You have me a little on the hip there. No, I must admit that I did not jump into that great truth."

"Did you delve for it, then?"

"No, I neither delved for it nor jumped into it."

"Well, how did you obtain it?"

"Through experience," I replied. "I lived it."

"How so?" he asked, with shining eyes.

"I met and married my own true other self, and found by actual experience, that my wife was my equal in all respects; that one-half was the entire completement of the other; that together we were the rounded soul—the twain that made one flesh—or, in other words, that the female half cannot be small and the male half large. They must perfectly and evenly balance each other. The male must not dominate the female half of himself; but, hand in hand they must walk together."

"But how about the music?" he asked. "Your wife was not a musician?"

"No, but my music found a perfect response in her soul—her soul echoed and flung it back to me in all its purity and beauty—and the talents which she possessed, my soul echoed, and re-echoed, and flung them back to her with added strength and vigor. And, thus, we grew together; and, through actual experience, I have learned the great fact, that the female is the equal, in all respects, of the male. And until the lower world recognizes and admits this fact, there can be no justice, no balance struck, and wrong and error will abound."

"You are right," said Denton, "and I tried my utmost, when on the earth plane, to show to that world the great importance of holding the female equal with the male. My wife was the first to initiate me into the mysteries of creation. She, it was, who taught me how to read the secrets of the past, the present, and the future; but for her, my eyes might have remained blinded to spiritual things until I stepped into them from out my mortal body; and it grieves me much, when I look back into the earthly life, to find my name continually quoted, disassociated from hers. Ah, would that the world, in speaking of me, would cease to say, Professor William Denton; but, instead, would say, as I nearly always did, William and Elizabeth Denton—or, to be still more correct—Elizabeth and William Denton. Why should the female half of the one sink out of sight and be forgotten, while the male half is forever kept before the public gaze, as though he were the all in all—as though the female did not exist? The great war god, Yahve, was a male. Well, let the war-gods be males, but why the God of the Spiritualists should still be a male, passes comprehension. Occasionally one, a little more courageous than another, rises up and prays to his or her Father-Mother God; but that is of rare occurrence. It is still the great he God with most of them. They never write or speak of God except as he. The great He still dominates, and while this is so the lower world will still wallow in wars, in political intrigues, in hell-fire, and so on."

"Before coming here," I said, "I thought the study of chemistry belonged entirely to earth. How is it that I find spiritual beings engaged in this study, still?"

"That we may know all that may be known concerning it," he replied. "If spiritual beings had not continued to study chemical laws, and the results of the action of those laws, there never would have been a spiritual rap; there never would have been spiritual phenomena of any kind; there never would have been a materialization; there never would have been levitation, for it is by the action of these laws, and through understanding the chemical laws of attraction and repulsion, that these things have been accomplished. Now, if there were nothing to be attracted nor repelled, there would be nothing to study. So you perceive, by this, that we still work with, and through matter, although it be attenuated and refined. You find that you still have a body, do you not?"

"Most certainly," I answered. "I have a body as real to me now, as my mortal body was on earth; and it is a material body, too; it is matter in an attenuated and refined condition; and my soul, myself, still dwells within it. This state of things pleases me much."

"Then you need not be surprised that we still have matter, in a refined and attenuated state, that we can study and analyze, as chemists of earth do matter in its more condensed state. But such terms really ought to be changed. To us, now and here, earthly matter is coarse and exceedingly porous. To us it does not appear condensed. It is our finer, more ethereal substances that seem condensed. Our finer substances pass directly through the coarse, porous substances of earthly matter. You are well aware, I think, that the finest, most subtle of substances, even on the earth, are the most powerful, and through chemical action and affinity bring forth the most wonderful results. So, I am still at my old tricks, you see, finding out all I can about these fine subtle laws."

"Mr. Denton," I said, "will you go with me to visit my wife, and help me to write through her? I also, want to be your pupil, for I am determined to learn all I can about these very important and most interesting subjects. My wife, as you know, is a great sensitive, and I am determined to continue my work through her."

"With pleasure," he replied. "I will help you all I can; and I am glad to enroll one more soul among my list of helpers. We are all needed to help on the cause of truth."

My father and I now took our leave of this grand man, for the time being, knowing full well that we should meet again, and often.

Anniversary at Seattle, Wash.

We held our anniversary on Sunday, March 27, as it was more convenient for us at that time. It was the best and most enjoyable of any previous occasion in our experience.

The exercises commenced with the Children's Lyceum at 1 p. m., with singing and recitations, under the leadership of our very worthy pastor, Mrs. Lole F. Prior.

The meeting opened with President Little in the chair, who gave a preliminary address, setting forth the object of this the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, and its origin, founded by the Fox sisters in 1848, at Hydesville, N. Y. After a brief discourse he gave way for those who were to follow.

The first speaker to occupy the rostrum was Mr. Oyston, an old friend and co-worker with W. J. Colville, the noted speaker and traveler, who is so well known to us all. He gave us a very able address.

Mrs. Hibner then gave us a beautiful discourse under inspiration, which was loudly applauded.

Mrs. Spalding, an old veteran in the work in Seattle, was next called upon, and did credit to herself.

A change in the program was then made, and a solo was very beautifully rendered by our organist, Mrs. Mason. After being so highy entertained by Mrs. Mason, Mrs. Esther T. Bosley, well known for many years in Seattle and the northwest, did herself credit in rendering a very excellent poem entitled, "Going into the Silence," following a brief address.

Our pastor, Mrs. Prior, gave the closing address of the afternoon, which I considered, was in tune with the Infinite.

Following her remarks a very hearty response was given in the collections received from the audience, after which the meeting was dismissed.

At 8 p. m., our spacious hall being packed to the doors, President Little opened with preliminary remarks, after which Walter H. Hall, vice-president, entertained us with a very fine address.

P. C. Mills, ex-president of the State Association, was present during the session. He is an old war horse in the cause of Spiritualism, and a very enthusiastic worker, and when he gets on his feet you may look for good results.

Last, but not least, comes Brother Hull (not Moses Hull), an old ex-minister of the orthodox church, and it does one's soul good to see a man stand up in his true colors and announce his allegiance to the cause he espouses. The spirit of a little daughter told him that she was not dead, but still lives, and that turned his attention to Spiritualism.

The closing address was reserved for Mrs. Prior, and she held the audience spellbound, lost to everything on this material plane, to soar away to the spiritual realms beyond.

Seattle, Wash. A. V. ROSS.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The East End Spiritual Society, 1749 Superior street, C. H. Figuers, president, held anniversary exercises Sunday, April 3, 1904. The afternoon was given up to the Children's Lyceum, and a goodly sight it was to see some fifty children marching into the hall flags flying, and singing "Marching Through Georgia." The little people did nicely, and the officers and leaders of this Lyceum have done nicely and well. Mrs. Florence Barber, as leader and drill-mistress, outdid herself, and too much praise cannot be given her for her untiring devotion to Lyceum work. The singing, readings, etc., of the children were of a high order. At the close of the long program unlimited quantities of cake and cream and coffee was served—free to the children. A nice sum was netted above all expenses. It was good to be there. The evening's exercises were very interesting. The music furnished by Mrs. Haton, Mrs. Mulder, Mr. Phil Harter, Mr. Butts and little Julia Thyret was of a very high order, and was thoroughly enjoyed by the large crowd, which filled the hall, so beautifully decorated with palms, potted plants, cut flowers, and the national colors, artistically draped. Mrs. Barber gave an unusually fine reading, Mrs. Fred W. Martin, of Elyria, O., gave a most instructing and interesting lecture, and Mr. D. M. King, the veteran Spiritualist, of Maple Dell Camp, was in his best inspiration, and gave us many good things. The test work was good, every one being recognized. Mrs. S. Jennings, medium, Mrs. C. H. Figuers consented to try for independent voices, and so the hall was darkened. Many voices were heard, several at one time. Several spirit voices were readily recognized by those to whom the voices spoke.

This was one of the most successful anniversary meetings ever held in Cleveland, and the utmost harmony prevailed. All were sorry when the last message had been given and the benediction pronounced. Arrangements have been made with the Maple Dell Camp trustees to have the last Sunday in July, 1904, set aside for Cleveland Children's Day, under the auspices of the East End Spiritual Societies, and a hearty invitation is extended to all sister societies within reach to meet with us on that day. Fine musicians, good speakers and message-bearers have been secured for that day, and we expect to make it the banner day of the season. For further particulars address D. M. King, Mantua Station, O., or C. H. Figuers, Suite 12, The Quinby, Euclid avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

COMRADES.

We were such comrades,
My father and I,
Wherever he went found me, too, near by.
Comrades, such comrades.

He was a farmer,
My hero and king.
Whatever he said was just the right thing.
Comrades, such comrades.

Whatever he did,
I stood, "his right hand"—
Master or slave to adore or command.
Comrades, such comrades.

"Where is the daughter?"
And mother would say,
"Gone with her father, be where'er it may,
Comrades, such comrades."

"Two boys together"—
And such quiet fun.
The old farm our kingdom. From "sun to sun,"
Comrades, such comrades.

Sugaring, planting,
And making the hay,
Harvesting, logging, together all day.
Comrades, such comrades.

But one day he went
Where I could not go—
And they laid him to rest under the snow.
My comrade—my comrade.

They sold the old farm—
Now, ofttimes, I lie
With my head on his grave—my heart in the sky—
But comrades, still comrades.

And death does not part—
In spirit we talk—
Hand in hand, as of old, together we walk.
Comrades, such comrades.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

WAKE UP! ILLINOIS.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, the widely known missionaries of the N. S. A., are now ready to work for the promulgation of Spiritualism by organizing local societies of Spiritualists in Illinois. Let general advantage of their availability be taken at once. Do not delay in communicating with them at Rochester, Indiana, until further notice.

The time will soon be gone and your opportunity lost if you dally with indecision. Get out of the graveyard of indifference. GEO. B. WARNE, President Ill. S. S. A.

A Good Thing.

Evidences of progress are witnessed in many of the evangelical churches. Instead of alluring sinners to church by feasting them on the "grace of God," as in ye olden time, they are now advertising their sermons, and using free lunches at attractions.

In the good old times of a century ago fires were not allowed in churches. Instrumental music was under ban. Sermons one a half to two hours in length were common. Short intermission at noon was allowed, after which the learned preacher again engaged in his task, and held his audience in durance until the day waned; an evening prayer meeting followed to allow the deacons an opportunity to be heard.

Think of apple and pumpkin pie, choice cakes and hot coffee, substituted in place of a cold church "seventeenthly" in the sermons, and the choicest music human genius can devise in place of "Old Hundred," which greeted us in our boyish days.

Let the glorious work go on, until every church will have its dining-room and kitchen where the stomachs can be fed as well as the souls.

Bad Boys Make Bad Men.

Rev. Robt. Paddock, at the late annual meeting of the Prisoners' Aid Association in Washington, told the "Story of a Bad Boy" who was up to all manner of devilry, the leader of a class of other bad boys whom he was initiating into crime. He told of a three hours' personal struggle with him in his own house, caught in the act; how he succumbed to greater physical force, and promised to try to be good. He told of the boy's trials and relapses, and his final triumph. The Reverend Doctor concluded his narration with the statement:

"That boy is now studying for the priesthood, and I should not be surprised if in the course of time he fills a Bishop's chair."

It is apprehended other "bad boys" have reformed and ascended the same ladder Rev. Paddock's is climbing. Don't trust them.

A New Cure for Appendicitis.

The itch for notoriety affects the doctors more than any other class. They are forbidden by their "code of ethics" to advertise, and hence they take means to get before the public by some crank notion. The latest is of a "learned professor," who has discovered a sure cure for dyspepsia and appendicitis.

"These maladies," he says; "are due to our unnatural habit of walking upright. Therefore, to avoid them, it is but necessary to walk on all fours as our ancestors used to do when they stepped down from their perch—the tree."

Pursuant of this new method, this doctor has fitted up rooms, and is besieged with applications of patients, of which it is reported he already has a large number both male and female. They practice in the rooms which serve for training, four times a day and walk on their hands and feet, keeping the knees stiff, twenty minutes at a time. If this "learned professor," or anyone, will explain what relation appendicitis has to indigestion, or to man's erect posture, the application of this method would be more apparent. There is, however, no connection whatever, and tying a red string around the toes would be as effective. The hitherto unknown doctor has been exploitered world-wide, and will not be heard from again, nor his "wonderful discovery."

An Astounding Revelation.

Information of Great Value to Every Reflective Mind.

There has lately come into our hands, and has been read with profound interest, an octavo volume of several hundred pages, entitled "The Empire and Worship of Augustus Caesar, derived from recent studies in the great Libraries and Archaelogical Collections of Europe, including a New Chronology of History, by Alexander Del Mar, Late Director of the United States Bureau of Statistics; United States Representative at the International Congress at St. Petersburg, Russia, in 1872; American Delegate to the International Congress at Turin; and late Delegate to The Hague."

Mr. Del Mar is the author of numerous voluminous publications in which Ancient History and Numismatics are involved. We learn that, practically, for twenty years he has given his whole time to original research in the great Libraries and Coin Collections of Europe. His books have been reviewed at length and commended by the ablest of English, French and American critics. The learning displayed in their pages entitle them to a high place with American classics, as the author is a native of New York, born in 1836.

Learned scholars have been laboring for many years to find a reliable account by ancient historians of a character which impinged on history about the year 1 of our era, and who for several hundred years thereafter was worshiped as a god. Christian writers insist that this person was a Judean peasant, born at Bethlehem, who ministered for a short period to his people, and was crucified as a disturber of public tranquillity, about A. D. 29. Others have maintained he was a reflection of the sun-gods, like Mithra, Apollo, Bacchus, Osiris, Serapis, etc. No one brought that ripe scholarship, that command of ancient learning, nor has given such protracted researches to the task as has the Hon. Alexander Del Mar, and no one has accomplished such a successful result as he. Graduating at a Polytechnic, and educated as a Civil and Mining Engineer, notwithstanding his Christian faith he was unwilling to sink great truths out of sight which he discovered in his investigations in the interest of his church. The "Worship of Augustus Caesar," and numberless quotations from hundreds of ancient authorities confirming his positions, are the result. These authors, ancient and modern, are cited, with the shelves they occupy in the British Museum; so that neither the learned nor unlearned can be misled by him.

Passing over the early chapters, so full of interest to scholars, giving an account of ancient eclipses, and their cycles; the ancient years of ten months, of four months, and even of one month, or moon; the astrology of the Divine year; the Jovian cycle and worship; a voluminous account of ancient eras; passing other interesting chapters, among which are Chronological problems and solutions; forgeries in stone, etc., he concludes with "The Messiah."

Hon. Del Mar shows that Julius Caesar, on October 6, B. C. 48, arrived in Alexandria, Egypt; that he remained in Egypt till March; that following the example of Alexander the Great, he permitted himself at the winter solstice, A. U. 706, to be deified in the temple of Jupiter Ammon. On his return to Rome Julius Caesar was hailed by the priests as the Son of God. He was presented with sacred vestments, with a sacred image of himself to be borne in his chariot, with a sacred throne and a sacred bed. To mark the sacred character of his residence it was surmounted by a steeple. On occasions in the exercise of his high pontifical office he appeared in all the pomp of the Babylonian costume, in robes of scarlet, with the crosier in his hand, wearing the mitre and bearing the keys. It was these claims to divinity which probably led to his assassination. After his death it was asserted that he ascended to heaven. Augustus, his adopted son and successor on the Roman throne, paid him the reverence due to God the Father.

Passing much history, of which we have given a very brief outline, then, quoting from pages 307 to 316, omitting portions to economize space:

"When the tremendous commotion caused by the death of Julius Caesar had spent itself in civil wars, and in the firm establishment of the Messianic religion and ritual, Augustus ascended the sacred throne of his martyred sire and was in turn addressed as the Son of God, while Julius thereafter was worshiped as the Father. The flamens of the sacred college erected and consecrated to the worship of Julius Caesar, a magnificent temple at Rome, and for its services, as well as for those of the provincial temples which might be consecrated to the same god, they organized a body of priests called the Julii, or Juliani. This priesthood was not abolished until in the 6th century, full six centuries."

Passing several pages:

"Augustus had the address to cause his own worship to be added to that of Julius. The latter was now impiously addressed as the Supreme Being," the former became the Son of God, and as such he is announced upon his coins and other monuments. But this did not last long. Even the Son of God did not appear to be a title sufficiently exalted to suit the devotees of Augustus; and in numerous contemporary inscriptions, both in Rome, Greece and Asia, he is termed Deos, or Theos, which means not the Son of God, nor one of the gods, but the living god, the Creator, Optimo Maximo. However, Divus Filius Aesar and Quirinus seem to have been the titles by which Octavius himself preferred to be called." * * * * *

"The worship of Augustus was not, as the ecclesiastical schools have insinuated, a mere lip service, a meaningless mode of saluting the sovereign pontiff, an effusive form of adulation or flattery to the emperor of Rome; it was the worship of a person who was believed to be supernatural, omniscient, all-powerful and beneficent, the re-incarnation of Quirinus, the Son of the God Apollo and of the wife-virgin Maia; the god whose coming was foretold by the Cumaean sibyl; whose sway was to extend ever the whole earth; whose conception and birth were both miraculous; and whose advent was to usher in the golden age of peace and plenty, and to banish sin forever." Such was his character in Rome. In Greece he was worshiped as Dionysos; in Egypt as Thurinus; in Iberia and Gaul as Aesar, or Hesus; and in Germany as Baldir; for all of these titles and many others will be found on his monuments, or have been preserved by his biographers.

"The most effective reply that can be made to those historians who have ignored the worship of Augustus—and who, when they have not concealed its evidences, have passed them over, or sought to belittle them—is to read a letter from one of the worshipers of this god, written from Tomis, a Roman outpost, near the mouths of the Danube, addressed to Graecinus in Rome, and dated, according to our chronology, A. D., 15, or shortly after the death and ascension of Augustus. The writer of this letter was no less a person than the poet Ovid, or Publius Ovidius Naso, a nobleman of the equestrian order, then 58 years of age and, as his other writings testify, in the full possession of his faculties. Quoting:

"'Nor is my piety unknown: this distant land sees a shrine of our Lord Augustus erected in my house. Together with him stand his son and wife (his priestess), deities scarcely less than our Lord himself * * * As oft as the day arises, so often do I address my prayers to them, together with offerings of frankincense. Shouldst thou inquire, the whole of Pontus will confirm my words, and attest my sincerity; nor is my religion less known to strangers. * * * * Though fortune is not equal to my inclination in such duties, I willingly devote to this worship such means as I command. * * * Caesar! Thou who art summoned to the gods above, thou, too, from whom nothing can be concealed, thou knowest this to be true! In thy place among the stars, fixed in the arch of the skies, thou hearest my prayers, which I utter with anxious lips!'

"This evidence does not stand alone. Throughout all of Ovid's Letters, of which 36 remain to us, throughout all of his Elegies, of which 50 remain, throughout all his Fasti, of which six entire books remain, he repeatedly addresses the then living Augustus as God, or the Son of God, the Great Deity, the Heaven-born, the Divine, the Beneficent, the Just, the Long-suffering, the Merciful God.

"It may serve the purposes of perversion to explain this away; it may afford a refuge for obstinacy or delusion to dismiss it with affectations of incredulity or contempt; but this is no answer to the fact; for fact it unquestionably is, not alone upon the testimony of Ovid but upon that also of numerous other intelligent, respectable and even illustrious witnesses, that it to say, the testimony of Virgil, Horace, Manilius, Pliny, Suetonius and others.

"What is insisted upon is that Augustus Caesar, by his contemporaries, was believed to be, and was actually worshiped as a god; with bell, book, candle, steeple, frankincense, rosary, cross, mitre, temples, priesthood, benefices and ritual; in short, with all the outward marks of superstition, credulity, piety and devotion. There is nothing impossible about this; and the evidence of this worship is so valid, circumstantial and overwhelming, that to refuse assent to it, is to put reason out of court altogether. The witnesses are not phantoms, the wild creations of credulous minds. Their writings are not anonymous patchworks, undated, unlocated and unsigned; they do not stand unsupported by archaeology, inscriptions, coins, calendars, or popular customs; on the contrary, they are corroborated and buttressed by all these classes of evidence. The witnesses are men of reputation. Their writings are among the masterpieces of the world, which it would be impossible to imitate and difficult to alter without detection, whilst the monuments which support them are numbered by myriads and are found in every conceivable locality, from the Roman slabs in the mosque of Ancyra, to the coins rescued from buried Pompeii; both of which, as well as a vast number of other inscriptions and coins, proclaim the divinity and universal worship of Augustus throughout the Roman world.

"And mark this: In actual history great events do not occur alone. They appear neither unheralded nor unsung. Minor events start forth to presage them; others proclaim their occurrence; still others attest and exalt their significance; whilst a numerous progeny of facts remain behind to corroborate their appearance upon the world's stage and to definitely mark their eras. The presages of the Augustan incarnation were the previous assumptions of divinity by Alexander the Great, the Ptolemies, the Seleucidae, Demetrius Poliorcetes, the Arsacidae, Titus Quinctius Flaminius, the abortive attempts of Scipio, Sylla, Sertorius and Pompey, and the successful one of Julius Caesar.

"It was the bestowal of Caesar's empire, spiritual and temporal, upon his adopted son Augustus, that directly led to the worship of the latter. The assumption of divinity by the various soverigns and heroes mentioned, are historical facts, which no amount of sophistry can belittle or set aside. They are the historical circumstances that presaged and led up to the worship of Augustus. In false history and false philosophy there is no such evolution. Take for example the incarnations of Nebo-Nazaru, Hesus, and Salivahana. What preceded these fictions? Nothing. What accompanied them? Nothing. What followed them? Nothing, but other fictions. What evidences of their occurrence exists within two hundred years of the time assigned to them? None whatever. What valid evidence, at any time? None at all. They are myths of the cloisters, unconnected with any real event, fabricated centuries after the date assigned to them; and supported only by forgery, imposture and alterations of the calendar. * * *

"When the tremendous commotion caused by the assassination of Julius Caesar had spent itself in civil wars and in the firm establishment of the Messianic religion and ritual, when Actium was won, and Egypt and Asia were reconquered, Augustus ascended the throne of his martyred sire SON OF GOD; whilst Julius was tacitly worshiped as the SON OF GOD; whilst julius was tacitly worshiped as the FATHER. Most of the ancient books were now destroyed; the writers of the old school were executed or banished; the republican calendar was altered; and a conclave of historians and mythological poets was encouraged and rewarded, who rewrote the history of Rome and erected for posterity a body of elegant fiction and imposture, which nineteen centuries of time have not yet sufficed to wholly overthrow or eradicate.

"These statements are not mere opinions; they are based upon evidences so valid, so numerous and so convincing that they would triumphantly withstand the severest scrutiny of a court of law."

The importance of the revelation will justify this lengthy extract, but the whole book must be read, and profitably reread, to grasp the important facts it contains, the price of which is $3 by mail, and may be ordered through G. W. Brown, M. D., Kilburn Avenue, Rockford, Illinois.

A Noble Example.

George E. Weiss is not a millionaire in wealth but he is in heart. In his circle of acquaintances is a deserving medium who is in want. Mr. Weiss has translated Hudson Tuttle's Philosophy of Spirit and the Spirit World, and has just received a package of the book from the Leipsig publisher, as his compensation as translator. The entire proceeds of the sale of these he without reservation donates to this worthy medium. The price of the bound copies is $1.25; of the paper, 75 cents. Mr. Weiss is now busily engaged in translating the Arcana of Spiritualism, from advance sheets, for the same publisher. His address is 1188 Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE RESURRECTION.

Pretty Good Demonstration by an Orthodox Minister.

At the Fountain Street Baptist church, Grand Rapids, Mich., the Rev. J. Herman Randall spoke on "The Meaning of Resurrection," taking for his theme the words of Christ, "I am the resurrection and the life."

In part the speaker said: "Taking the history of all peoples and all nations, and the creeds of various religious societies, there has always been a belief in a resurrection at some distant day, when the souls of mankind should once more inhabit their earthly bodies and appear at the judgment seat of Christ. This belief was that of the Persians, and was later that of the Jews. From them it passed on to the Christian peoples and has in one form or another been embodied in the creeds of the different sects. Through eighteen hundred years it has been one of the fundamental beliefs of religious people and it has only been within the last century and particularly within the last quarter of that century, that theologians and thinking people have given concentrated thought to the future life and to the true meaning of the resurrection. Christ never taught; St. Paul, the great apostle of the resurrection never taught, the Bible never taught that the soul and the earthly body should be reunited in one grand resurrection day. In that masterly epistle St. Paul has said, 'it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body.' The belief to-day of men and women who have given thought to this matter is that in each man is the physical and spiritual bodies, and that this spiritual body is endowed with the spiritual senses as is the physical body with the physical senses.

"This resurrection is not a thing of some distant day. It is something which is taking place within each of us every day. As we delve in the upper part of ourselves and subdue the baser and animal parts of our natures this resurrection process is going on within us. The spiritual body is a thing eternal, and when we lay aside our earthly frame, the spiritual body passes on to the sphere toward which it has been progressing through the years of earthly life."

An infallible book is an impossible conception, and to-day no one really believes that our present Bible is such a book.—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

Some of us are too ambitious; we want, perhaps, to make the world happier—whereas we should be content with the endeavor to make a single individual less unhappy.—H. D. Stocker.

MEDIUMS' RELIEF.

Report of the N. S. A. Secretary.

To the Editor:—With your kindly permission, I am ready to make my second report to the public through your valued paper, of the contributions to the N. S. A. Mediums' Relief Fund. Contributions previously mentioned gave a total of $138.78. Up to present time, March 31, we have received, since last report, $156.70, as follows:

Dr. B. Anna Schermerhorn, $10; Henry M. Edmiston, $10; I. L. Taylor, $10; S. C., $10; J. R. Francis, $5; Cecilia Nelson, $5; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Fouts, $5; Mary T. Longley, $5; Psychic Research Spiritual Society of Richmond, Va., $5; Mrs. Z. A. M. Allen, $5; Maria McGuinness, $5; H. C. Fulcher, $5; Mrs. Geo. Fellows, $5; Mrs. Bigelow, in memory of her father, S. Howe, $5; Ann Rice, $5; B. Dorscher, $5; S. N., $5; Major U. S. A., $5; Cash, Worcester, $2.50; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Gates, $2; Sarah J. Storks, $2; Geo. A. Davis, $2; Mrs. S. S. Sutton, $2; James H. Taylor, $2; A Seeker, $2; Mrs. L. A. Manning, $2; G. L. Watson, $1; E. F. Avery, $1; D. Winkler, $1; M. Betz, $1; Mrs. Briggs, $1; A Medium and Spiritualist, $1; L. Steinborn, $1; Homer B. Austin, $1; Mrs. Louise Crawford, $1; Friend in Michigan, $1; Chas. Baumann, $1; Widow's Mite, Kansas City, $1; A. B., Decora, $1; W. E. Hurst, $1; Ellen Forster, $1; John M. Musselman, $1; Harriet Crafts, $1; Jas. Barber, $1; Lotela and Nannie $1; T. S. A., Truth-seeker, $1; Clarrissa H. Mullens, $1; D. Edson Smith, $1; Albert Tappert, $1; A Friend—F. D. E., $1; Chas. Hangartner, $1; Robert Hayle, $1; Lewis B. Morse, $1; Jacob Hey, $1; J. H. Brotherton, $1; Martin Pearson, 50 cents; A Friend, 25 cents; A. Denerean, 25 cents; G. W. Macatee, 20 cents.

This list with the former, makes up a total of $295.48. We have a little more than seven hundred dollars to raise before—or by the first of June, in order to secure the thousand dollars promised for the Mediums' Relief Fund by our friend who is nameless. Please, dear friends, those of you who have not contributed, send in your donations at once for this noble work. If every Spiritualist would send just what could be spared, whether a dime or a dollar, we would soon have the fund well filled, and the good work of caring for the sick and destitute would be greatly increased. We notice that most of the contributors so far, are those who are always to the front, those who have always sent their donations when any call has been made for aid in our good works, but few names are among those who are helping us to raise this fund, and yet, it would seem as if every Spiritualist would be glad to send something towards the support of aged and homeless mediums. One lady has donated five dollars in memory of her ascended father; if others would remember their loved ones in spirit life and do something in this line, we are sure that the angel world would approve. A number who send to us are in straightened circumstances, some are veteran soldiers, many aged and near to the other life; we thank them all—by letter, when we have their address, and also through these columns—we appreciate the aid they give.

Some one has asked why we do not build a home for mediums, instead of paying them a monthly pension; our reply is, that it is impossible to raise money for a home—we have tried it; a home calls for a large expenditure of money, it must have a matron and other care-takers; it is impossible to get the money to carry on a home on even a small scale. We also find, that the mediums prefer to remain outside such an institution, and either do for themselves on the pension allowed, or live with their friends, with that amount; the most satisfactory plan we have found is the pension one. Please help the N. S. A. to keep it afloat. Your contributions—large or small, will be thankfully received by

"The Great Debate Between Rev. Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson." It is a most remarkable book, elegantly and substantially bound in cloth and printed on the best paper It fills an important niche in the Spiritualistic and Occult Library, and every Spiritualist should have it. Your library will not be complete without it. It will charm you to read it. It will enable you to answer all the arguments ever made against Spiritualism. It is rich with pertinent criticisms by the scholarly Mr. Jamieson, and philosophical replies by Mr. Hull, and can but interest both believers and disbelievers.

NOTICE OF ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The seventh annual convention of the New York State Association of Spiritualists will be held on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, June 3, 4, and 5, at Empire Hall, corner North Salina and West Genesee streets, in the city of Syracuse, N. Y. There will be good speakers and phenomenal mediums; choice music under the direction of the Syracuse society. A list of speakers and mediums will be published later. All earnestly and cordially invited to attend. Individual membership, $1 per year. HERBERT L. WHITNEY, Secretary.

An Extraordinary Manifestation.

To the Editor: I have just finished reading Daniel W. Hull's splendid article in The Progressive Thinker, and it encourages me to give a little more of my own experience in the occult realm. I was all alone in the darkness of the early evening, as is customary with me since my husband's departure to the higher and better world, when I became conscious of his material presence. I did not see him with my eyes, but reached forth my left hand, and passed it slowly all over his materialized form. The form was soft as though it had no bones, but what surprised me more than anything else was the fact that I could see him distinctly with my hand, and not with my eyes, for I was in darkness. It was a peculiar experience, one that had never happened to me before. The longer I moved my hand over his form the plainer I could see him—that is, with or through my hand, not with my eyes. I related this experience to one or two friends, but dared not tell many for fear they might think me insane. But it seems, by Mr. Hull's letter, that others have had the same strange thing happen with them.

Profoundly Thoughtful.

Conscious Primary Mind the Only Certainty.

I have not for many years regarded materialism as having any valid philosophic basis. What first turned my mind from it as a system of thought was consideration of the psychology of the senses as presented below. What we know beyond all doubt is mental, not material. Cogito ergo sum. I think, therefore I am. We know phenomena only as facts of consciousness.

Sound, light, heat, and all the so-called qualities of material bodies, such as fragrance, sweetness, etc., are usually thought of as objective realities. They are conceived as existing per se; as dependent in no way upon consciousness; as affecting all organisms, but remaining the same whether cognized or not. This view is not confined to the ignorant; it is held by many, perhaps by the majority of well-educated people, and by some who are instructed in science and are accustomed to close observation and careful thinking in their special fields of thought. In some cases it requires years for such persons, even after the correct view has been presented to them, to outgrow the popular conception.

Only those who possess the power of abstract thinking can grasp readily the philosophic idea that we know phenomena only as affections of consciousness. No one who by thinking has reached this conclusion can ever escape from it, for it amounts to a demonstration and is seen to be a logical necessity of philosophic thought. Yet the average mind, which dwells mainly on things concrete and has but little use for abstraction, must think that the external world is absolutely just what it appears to be to eye and ear and sense of touch. Say to such a person that where there is no ear there is no sound, and where there is no eye there is no light, and he will probably reply triumphantly that there was light on this planet long before man or any sentient being had appeared, and that cataracts roared and thunder reverberated through the heavens long before there was any ear to hear such sounds.

For the benefit of those whose thought is not clear on this subject, a few illustrative statements are submitted with the hope that they may help some readers to free themselves from the slavery of a method of thinking that is as crude as the conclusion to which it leads are superficial and unphilosophic.

Vibrations of air communicated to the sense of hearing (the acoustic nerve) give rise to a sensation. That sensation is called "sound." Without a nerve of hearing there can be no sound. Of course the air vibrates whether or not there be any living organism present, and the aerial vibrations may blow down trees and buildings as well as co-operate with the soil in causing the growth of vegetation; but sound, being a sensation, requires not only the objective factor, vibrations of air, but the subjective factor also—consciousness, which is somehow affected by the vibrations through the nerve of hearing.

Just as there is no fragrance in a rose—the word "fragrance" standing only for the sensations produced through the sense of smell by emanations from an object that we know only by the way it affects us—so there is no sound in a ringing bell except as the waves of air, externally produced, excite the auditory nerve and cause the sensation we call "sound." The quality of the sound depends upon the quality, size and shape of the bell, as well as upon the manner of ringing it, because upon these depends the kind of vibrations which through the nerve of hearing cause the sensation of sound.

There is no musical quality in a violin; but one who feels "the concord of sweet sounds" may play on the instrument in a way that will arouse "music in the soul," because he is able to produce those vibrations which through the sense of hearing cause agreeable conscious states. So with light (or luminousness)—which is psychical, not physical. This is a sensation produced by the action of waves of ether upon the retina and fibres of the optic nerve. It may also be produced by a blow, or by electricity, which while it causes luminous phenomena through the eye, when brought in contact with other parts gives rise to quite different sensations—sounds in the ear, taste in the mouth, tickling in the tactile nerves, etc.

We know that different colors depend upon particular velocities of the waves of ether, gathered together by the optical apparatus of the eye, which impinge upon the retina, affecting the optic nerve and giving rise to sensations or conscious states that appear objectively as colors—blue, green, violet, etc. In some persons, vibrations as different in velocity as those that commonly cause redness and greenness awaken identical sensations, and they cannot therefore distinguish between them.

As some animals are sensitive to motions of the air that to human ears produce no sound whatever, so do the eyes of some creatures respond to vibrations of ether that are below or above the luminous limits of the human eye. If a creature can see in the dark—i. e., where it is dark to the human eye—the optic nerve of that creature is affected by etheric vibrations to which the human eye does not respond. It is luminous for that creature when it is dark for man, because luminosity is a sensation, not an objective thing.

Heat, too, is a sensation. The word heat indicates how our body, or anything external to the body, feels—how it affects our consciousness. Conceived objectively, it is a mode of motion, which is only one of the factors necessary to produce heat, the other being an organism in which the motion gives rise to the sensation that we distinguish by the term "heat."

Vibrations of air and ether occurred millions of years before there was eye or ear on this globe, and those vibrations were doubtless external factors in developing these organs.

But only as auditory nerve was evolved was there sound; only as the optical apparatus was developed was there light. Pulsations of air do not constitute sound; undulations of ether do not constitute luminousness; emanations of particles from a flower do not constitute fragrance. Atmospheric vibration is one of the factors in producing sound; etheric vibrations are essential to sight, for in their absence the eye and optic nerve in time become functionless and disappear, as in the cave fish; and the presence of material particles in the air is necessary to excite the sens of smell.

If all animals were to be destroyed, the vibrations of air and ether would continue to affect the earth, producing innumerable changes on sea and land. But without consciousness and the organs through which it is differentiated in feeling, there would be no sound and no hearing, no luminousness and no seeing, no fragrance and no smelling.

We know and distinguish objects by the states of consciousness which, through the senses, they produce in us. What things are in themselves, apart from their effects upon us and from the conscious states to which they give rise, we do not know. The external world, as we conceive it through our forms of perception and modes of thought, may have no resemblance whatever to the absolute reality. Between the internal and external order there is congruity, but resemblance cannot be affirmed.

The conclusion of all psychological analysis is, as Huxley says, "that all phenomena are, in their ultimate analysis, known to us only as facts of consciousness." As that close, analytic thinker, George Henry Lewes, said: "Whether we affirm the objective existence of something distinct from the affections of consciousness, or affirm that this object is simply a reflection from consciousness, in either case we declare that the objective world is to each man the sum of his visionary experience; an existence bounded on all sides by what he feels and thinks; a form shaped by the reaction of his organism. The world is the sum total of phenomena, and phenomena are affections of consciousness with external signs." The "external signs" are material things (so denominated), mere symbols of reality, necessarily associated with the senses and with sensation. Our most certain knowledge is not of matter, but of mind; indeed, our knowledge is confined to "facts of consciousness."

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Dr. J. M. Peebles' Defense = Elucidation of the Science and Philosophy of Psychic Healing.

To Dr. J. M. Peebles, by the First Spiritualist Society of San Diego, Cal.:—While greatly pleased at your rapid recovery from pneumonia and delighted with your recent two months' Sunday evening lectures, filling our new temple with barely an exception, to its utmost capacity, we ask you to further oblige us by stating the exact status of your firm's difficulty awhile since with the United States postoffice department.

All the dailies in San Diego referred to this case, and some of the journals on the Pacific coast, bitterly prejudiced against all forms of "psychic treatment," heralded the court's decision against your firm, mentioning the members' names, with a sort of vicious gleefulness. And inasmuch as Helen Wilman's (Mrs. H. W. Post, Florida) mails have been stopped, and she pronounced "guilty" by a jury, with several other indictments against her; and inasmuch as other psychic physicians, "mental healers," are being unjustly arraigned, and as we believe, persecuted, we feel as Spiritualists to ask you officially, what is to be the outcome of those indictments and persecutions by one-sided, meddling United States officials? What are the underlying motives?

Some of us have known you, Doctor, for over forty years personally, or through your books, press articles, and essays, and we feel that we have a moral right to know the exact facts concerning your firm's trial and its lessons, for the benefit of others. C. A. BUSS,

President First Spiritualist Society, San Diego, Cal.

T. J. Mc Ferron, Secretary.

Lyman C. Howe and several other writers and workers in the field of psychic science, or angel ministries, after reading in secular journals that our "mails had been stopped," wrote for a reliable statement from me to appear in the liberal press. But the whole matter was so alien to my nature that I remained silent. But now at this belated hour, since the matter has taken on an official aspect, I am necessitated to speak through the press. Briefly, then:

1. Our mails were not stopped for a day nor an hour.

2. Newspaper reporters, especially of the "yellow journal" cast, are such exaggeraters or inveterate liars, that the public is often temporarily deceived.

3. Our business, I repeat, was "not stopped" for a moment, and our company was never doing so well as at present.

In all ages and under all skies advanced thinkers having the courage of their convictions, have been either misunderstood, or murdered. The world's progress has never been carried forward by those who mistook stupidity for righteousness, nor by those whose mental horizon was bound by the five senses and inspired by a selfish, political pull.

Socrates, born 470 B. C., the great thinker and reasoner, was accused of corrupting the youth, violating law and impiety towards the gods. He was arraigned, tried, convicted and legally murdered. And yet, it was the court and jury that died, while Socrates lived and still lives a shining glory of the ages.

Plato the idealist, dialectician and poet-philosopher, ten years a disciple of Socrates, was bitterly persecuted and threatened in his home city. Later he was arraigned, indicted, imprisoned and sold as a slave. Amiceris, a Cyrene, purchased and freed him that he might continue his academic lectures.

Anaxagoras born at Claxamone 500 B. C., studied at Athens in its most stirring era, the dawning age of Pericles. Originally wealthy, he said upon becoming poor: "To philosophy I own my worldly ruin, and to it my soul's wealth and prosperity." Accused by jealous conservatives of impiety, political and religious heresies he was indicted, tried, pronounced guilty and condemned to die. But through the eloquence of Pericles, his death sentence was commuted to imprisonment, and later to banishment.

Polycarp, the early martyr, brave as conscientious, was by Herod of Smyrna, in the sixth year of the reign of Marcus Aurelius, 167 A. D., arraigned, and perished by being placed in the midst of a mass of combustibles and burned to death. His alleged crime was disobedience to law. His tomb may be seen a little to the west of the city of Smyrna to this day, honored alike by Christian and Mohammedan. The martyrs live. The hands that kindled the fires perish or are remembered in infamy.

Hypatia, the brilliant daughter of an illustrious Alexandrian mathematician, was in the year A. D. 415 falsely accused of dangerous and irreligious teachings. And in an outbreak against the Governor of the city, she, the classical lecturer was accused, arraigned, mobbed and murdered by some infuriated monks.

Dante, the soul of early Italian poetry, born 1255 A. D., in Florence, was for his liberal views imprisoned and banished in 1302; but his name and poems live.

John Bunyan, author of Pilgrim's Progress, born 1620 A. D., was charged among other things, with disturbing the worship of the Lord's saints on the holy Sabbath. He was arrested, proven guilty and imprisoned for twelve years in Bedford jail, England.

Galvani, born 1737, famous for his experiments with electricity upon the muscles of dead frogs, for his original thoughts, for his broad catholic views, and refusing to vote allegiance, was persecuted and dismissed from the great Bologna university.

Wickliffe, a graduate of Oxford, born 1324 A. D., was, because of his advanced thoughts and their expressions expelled from this famous institution of learning.

Tyndall born 1480, was a graduate of Cambridge. He was charged with new ideas and false doctrines, and accordingly was arraigned, pronounced guilty and burned.

Christopher Columbus, born 1440, mathematician and America's discoverer, was arrested, proven guilty and sent back to Spain in chains. He died in poverty.

Galileo (1564-1642) was the first to employ lenses as to show that the milky way was formed of separate stars. He also taught in Rome the rotation of the earth upon its axis and its passage around the sun. For these astronomical facts and the elucidation of other scientific problems, he was hunted, arraigned, found guilty, imprisoned and tortured when seventy years of age.

Louis Kossuth, born in 1802, a liberalist and an orator, was arraigned for his liberal views and their open advocacy. He was long imprisoned in an Austrian dungeon.

Ann Lee, born in Manchester in 1735, taught liberal Quaker views, and spoke in tongues when entranced. She was arrested and imprisoned in Manchester, England. With Elder F. W. Evans, I once visited the gloomy old cell in which she was imprisoned.

Joan of Arc, born in 1411, a country girl, a heroine, a heretic, a soldier, a psychic, hearing voices from the unseen, and through them saving the French crown, was villified and accused of sorcery and sedition. She was arrested, tried, convicted and burned at Rouen, France.

Elijah P. Lovejoy, born 1802, in Maine, believed in free thought, free speech and a free press. Because of his advanced and liberal views in regard to human rights, he was mobbed, his press destroyed and himself murdered by an angry mob in Alton, Ill.

Alexander Campbell, born 1788, an independent thinker, and founder of that prominent denomination known as "Disciples." was arrigned in Scotland and imprisoned.

Wm. Lloyd Garrison, born 1804, was a regal-souled man by nature. He believed in principles rather than policy or popularity, believed in liberty without regard to race or color; and accordingly was arraigned, tried, convicted and imprisoned in Baltimore. He was also mobbed in Boston.

Mesmer, born in Meersburg, 1733, founder of the science of mesmerism, often called animal magnetism, and later hypnotism, was misrepresented, misunderstood, persecuted, called a charlatan and hunted through the courts of Europe. He was also accused of being "in league with the devil" while mesmerically curing the sick in Paris and in a Vienna hospital.

Such have been the perils, persecutions and imprisonments of the world's advance guard—such the perils of the shining lights that glitter and glow all along the historic ages. Which of the world's prophets has not been stoned? And yet, being martyred they become immortal on earth—being dead they yet speak in tones eloquent as those that seraphs use—tones that neither courts nor jurors can silence.

Fortunately we are living in the 20th century, when church and state and political clubs no longer fry nor roast heretics in science, in religion, or for the practice of psychic healing. Official hirelings only accuse, indict and persecute nowadays in the name of law; forgetting all too often that congressional and state legislative enactments are not necessarily law. Pronouncing them unconstitutional a little later is abundant proof. That only can be law which is based upon principle, the eternal priciple of absolute right and justice and equity. All of the foregoing may be considered but preliminary to reply to the San Diego society's questions.

As previously stated our mails were not stopped, nor was our regular medical business interfered with. This was the gist of the indictment—the alleged "devising of a scheme with intent to defraud the government through the mails." And yet, every member of this firm was not only a regular physician, but a most hightoned, honorable citizen, morally incapable of fraud of any kind. This was and is universally acknowledged.

WHAT THE CAUSES OF THE DIFFICULTY?

The causes assigned for the arraignment were a series of published and mail-distributed advertisements relating to psychic diagnoses and psychic treatment, present and absent, which it was alleged misled and deceived patients and people. And it may as well be said right here that those offensive, spread-eagle advertisements were not conceived nor gotten up by the "firm," but by a professional city advertiser, who evidently more solicitous about his ten per cent than statements of exact truth, incited the trouble. My name was invariably signed to these "ads" and that, too, when I was thousands of miles away in foreign lands.

WHO WAS RESPONSIBLE?

Responsibility implies self-consciousness, volition and purpose. And these indicate that man is morally capable of acting knowingly, rationally and intentionally. I was not at any time the business manager of our firm. And I state now and for all time, that I never conceived, never wrote, never published and never circulated one of those advertisements for which the firm was arraigned. On the contrary I not only objected, but protested again and again against some of them. The following are among the many proofs at my command.

Dr. Eli F. Brown, a distinguished physician and author in our employ for several years, and a witness for the prosecution, wrote me from Los Angeles under date of September 23rd, 1903, thus:

"I wish to state to you what I know regarding the advertisements of your business at Battle Creek, Mich. I know that you came to me as a member of your corps of physicians, and made earnest protests against the character of the advertisements put out by the advertising agent, especially such statements as the following: 'Dr. Peebles, that wonderful healer, has discovered the secret of the soul,' etc. You never conceived of such a thought regarding yourself, never made such a pretense, and expressed yourself in the most positive manner as displeased with such advertisements. I further know that you endeavored personally to have these objectionable advertisements corrected. I know this objection to the advertisements to have been made by you, for such protests were made in my hearing.

"I gladly make the above statements, hoping to correct any misapprehension on the part of your friends regarding these advertisements, which were so repulsive to yourself.

ELI F. BROWN, M. D."

Mr. A. Herbert Greene, an upright, clear-headed and scholarly young man, writing under date of October, 24, 1903, says:

"Though now a clerk in the Central National Bank, Battle Creek, Mich., I was with Dr. Peebles much of the time for eight or nine years, and for the last four years, all of the time, as traveling companion, private secretary and stenographer and typewriter (the latter covering the time of his trouble with the postal laws) and I positively know that the Doctor did not write nor sanction the advertisements upon which the indictment of the 'firm' was based. And he was ignorant of their contents until his attention was called to them by friends. As soon as Dr. Peebles was aware of these extravagant 'ads,' such as 'the great, mighty healer,' 'the discoverer of the secret of the soul,' etc., he vigorously protested against them.

"A little later, through myself, he called his partners together, including Dr. Brown, to his rooms (I being present), and again he very strenuously objected to the publishing of these 'circus-like ads,' as he called them. And both Doctors Bobo and Greene assured him that they should be changed. This was along the last of November, 1900.

"A few weeks after, when the firm's advertiser in the west came to the city he was brought to Dr. Peebles' library room, when the Doctor again strongly protested against the style and some of the contents of the published advertisements. Being present I heard the full conversation upon the subject. The Doctor also seriously objected to having, without his knowledge, sentences, paragraphs and ads. injected by Kastor or any one, into his essays upon 'psychic science.' I make these statements voluntarily; and I know there is not the least moral guilt resting upon Dr. Peebles concerning those 'advertisements' causing the postoffice difficulty.

"A. H. GREENE,

"Battle Creek, Mich. Clerk Central National Bank."

PSYCHIC POWER—PSYCHIC DIAGNOSIS—ITS TRUE MEANING.

Psychic is from Psyche, meaning in the Greek, "Soul," or mind, the vital principle, and is allied to and the essence of psychology, the science of the mind; its attributes and forces. Hence, Webster, Johnson, the Standard Dictionary and others thus define psychic.

1. "Pertaining to the finer operations of the mind, or to occult phenomena attributed to the mind; mind influences over matter."

2. "Pertaining to the mind or soul, mental as distinguished from the physical forces."

Psychic power, then, is soul power, mind power, interior perception, supersensuous perception. This God-given power senses the physical and mental constitution, the emanating spheres of man in both sickness and health.

Psychology is now taught in our foremost colleges and universities, generally using the text-book of Prof. James of Harvard University, as the standard work. These scholarly definitions prove that psychic diagnosing and psychic treatment relate to the mind, the conscious, rational, cultured, intuitive mind,—the super-sensitive soul, rather than to matter or to old dust, buried books, prescriptions and outgrown superstitious theories of the 16th and 17th centuries. Conservative Bourbons never advance, however, and are seemingly angry if others do.

Psychic treatment in its broad, all-embracing relations, includes such agencies as the electric battery, animal magnetism, mesmerism, hypnotism, mental healing, metaphysical healing, divine healing, psychometric healing, Christian science healing, telepathic healing, suggestive healing, clairvoyance healing, absent healing, auto-suggestion, musical therapeutics, faith, prayer, etc., these, all these come under the broad general head of psychic treatment, of psychoses, because the underlying principle, or force, is mind; and all conscious mind-forces, when reduced to the last analysis, relate to, and are derived from God,—that God whom Jesus called "Spirit," whom Proclus called "Causation," whom Alfred R. Wallace terms the "unchangeable Supreme Mind," and whom a great modern seer pronounced over a generation ago, "The Great Positive Mind," and whom I denominate the Infinite conscious life, and presence of the universe, in brief, that God in whom we "live and move and have our being."

Accordingly, as a physician, I insist that my medical colleagues as well as myself have a moral and legal right to use one or all of the above-named methods, as the highest judgment may distate. None of these powers are supernatural. And certainly, every well-read, competent physician uses, to a certain extent, mind-psychic power, both in diagnosing and prescribing. A corpse cannot diagnose, neither can a semi-idiot—though strutting about with a diploma.

THE PSYCHIC BRAIN.

The late Prof. J. R. Buchanan, M. D., a medical college professor, the discoverer of psychometry, and pronounced by The Arena, one of the "twelve great men of the world," says in his psycho-sarcognomy, "It must be remembered that the cerebrum is the psychic brain, the cerebellum the physiological brain, and the optic lobes the intermediate, or psycho-physiological brain. The psychic brain gives sufficient character to guide the intellect, and is the seat of psychic influences functioning through the law of vibration." Highly educated French and English physicians testify in their recent works to the same scientific truths. And this reminds me of Prof. Blankard's psychoscope, which it is said, (I have not personally tested it) cognizes the rapidly-rushing flow of thought-waves, something as the spectroscope makes visible the color-waves, and as another delicate instrument measures sound-waves, and is something upon the same principle of wireless telegraphy. Thoughts are refined, etherealized forces, and when projected by the will, induce outflowing thought-waves. And, as we have, upon the basis of science, sound-waves, light-waves and invisible life-waves, so we have thought-waves vibrating through the interstellar ether, such healing and harmonizing influences that, where there is a receptive temperament, they result in restoration to health.

WHAT IS PSYCHE, OR MIND?

It is that part of our conscious being which thinks, wills, reasons, hopes, and aspires to immortality. It is the originating power of the Ego, the conscious spirit within, implying intellect, intuition, cognition, conception, apperception, reason, judgment. This, or rather, these are the psychic powers that I employed in diagnosing disease, and all well-read and cultured physicians, (in a measure) necessarily do the same. No one can properly diagnose by feeling the pulse alone. This only indicates agitation, excitement, a higher or a lower condition of vitality, etc. The tongue is not an infallible index to the disease, nor is pain a guide to the location of a lesion; the pain may be in the superior and inferior maxillaries, as in lock-jaw, but the cause, perhaps, was from a nail thrust into the heel. Psychic diagnosis goes below the objective into the subjective—the unseen, and there traces the inciting causes to their legitimate effects.

Many old-school physicians in diagnosing, never go beyond the physical—the anatomy and visible physiology of the body. They heedlessly pass by heredity, temperament, psychological inharmonies, mental influences, and other unseen environments, and hence their frequent and sometimes disastrous failures. But the highly educated physician with psychic power, while properly considering the physiology, the pathology, the temperaments, the mental tendencies, the psychological influences, with the leading symptom, and what is more important, the aura or the aural emanations from the handwriting, goes deeper. He sits down and critically diagnoses the case, as he would carefully dissect a cadaver. He goes to the fountain-heads, tracing the recondite causes of the lesions. He consciously senses both the physical and mental derangements of the invalid. In brief, he knows. The soul, the intuitive mind, the conscious spirit, does not reason out problems. It knows by and through the psycho-sensations—knows by instantaneous deduction, and so his diagnoses seem at times almost miraculous; and yet, they are in perfect harmony with natural law.

AURAS AND THE PSYCHIC POWER OF HEALING.

It is an established fact, denied by no scholar of repute, or adept in psychology and physics, that there is an aural emanation surrounding or flowing out from every object in nature—from atoms to sands from sands to suns. It is visible to only the visual organs of the most susceptible. It was discovered, or rather emphasized, by Baron von Reichenbach of Germany, and called by him od, or odylic force; and force is that potency which is expended in producing, or in resisting motion. This odic force—this subtile emanation envelopes the crystal, the magnet, the flower, the tree, and every human being. The rose throws out a delicious aural odor. The Australian Eucalyptus exhales a gum-scented, health-imparting aura. The keen-scented hound follows the fox's tracks, not from the shape of the foot-print, but from the aural effluence left in the tracks. These aural emanations are now scientifically demonstrated. For instance, the eminent M. Jodko, of France (see Papers in L'Initiation) using the Rumkorf coil in connection with Sir William Crookes' tube, has made various aural impressions upon extremely sensitive surfaces. He further declares that he has made more than three thousand experiments with different persons, and has been enabled to establish the following facts:

1. The existence of a specific emanation preceeding from the human body, and differing according to individuals and their dominating temperaments.

2. "That certain objects, such as plants, flowers, crystals, magnets, and human bodies, so manifest these aural emanations that under proper actinic conditions they can be photographed.

3. "These aural emanations vary according to the condition of health to such a degree that they may reveal (several days in advance) a disease which is about to show itself, and thus indicate the particularly weak point in the organism." This excels the Roentgen ray, that photographs through human flesh and other solid substances.

4. "When the hands of two persons are presented to the sensitized plate with fingers in opposition to each other, the directions of the emanations are quite different, especially when the persons are repugnant to each other," so that aside from physiological and pathological diagnoses, we may obtain the most complete psychic condition through the subtile auras of invalid persons.

Sir William Crookes, the illustrious chemist, scientist and inventor of the radiometer, etc., says, "There is an emanation of fine, flossy nervo-aura completely enveloping like a mist the whole human structure." This aura, or atmosphere, is an influence positive or negative, health-giving or poisonous. There are persons of my acquaintance so sensitive to poison that if they step within a certain radius of a clump of poison ivy, with the wind blowing towards them, their hands and faces, without contact, will become poisoned.

Prof. Elmer Gates, scientist, biologist and auturgic psychologist, residing near Washington, D. C., and whose laboratory I have visited, has taken the fluids, the breaths, and the invisible auras of persons, and by crucial experimentations, has shown the brain moods in the chromatic scale, shown the psychic effects of anger, or envy, and of various other emotions connected with temperaments, brain cells and bodily diseases. I adduce these testimonies and testimonies of the learned, to unmistakably demonstrate the nature and philosophy of psychic outputs and the odylic auras, their influence, and especially their relations to the psychic powers which (with the leading symptom) we use in diagnosing disease. Mark well—through these auras we come into sympathetic relation with the temperaments, organs and specific formations affecting invalid persons, and so physically sense—psychically know and read their diseases. And this psychic power, marvelous, scientific and rational, is a matter of demonstration. It is in keeping with Roentgen's X-ray, with clairvoyance, and in consonance with the higher medical science of the most eminent savants: It is based upon a rock as immovable as the pillars of Hercules.

TREATING INVALIDS AT A DISTANCE.

Psychics, having established an aural relation with their patients, through the leading symptom, the auras from their letters, and signatures they magnetize. They impulse the thought. They—I speak—I voice the word; that is to say, I use this God-given psychic power, prayerfully projecting, breathing from my soul's depths earnest, health-giving thoughts. And thoughts; remember, are spiritual activities, refined etherealized realities—polarized points of force, piercing outward and upward to the very heavens. In effect, these subtile thought-influences are as immeasurable as they are potential.

As a sample of absent thought-treatment, permit me to give verbatim G. H. Tokatlian's affidavit. We had hundreds of similar cases which the prosecution (the District Attorney) kept from coming before the Judge.

"55 Bazar Arasta, Smyrna, Asia Minor, May 15, 1901.

"Dr. J. M. Peebles:—It is with great pleasure that I notify you of the wonderful cure of my terrible chronic headache, which had troubled me for the last four years. I consulted five doctors here, and tried medical and hydrotherapic treatments with no avail. Upon putting my hand on your letter, as you ordered, I felt a prickly magnetic feeling go all over me at once.

"I heartily thank you for your kindness, which caused me to realize the omnipotence of spirit, which hitherto had been quite a puzzle to my mind. Yours very gratefully,

"G. H. TOKATLIAN."

THE IDEAL FIRST, THEN THE PHYSICALLY REAL.

Thoughts, ideas, precede results. Columbus thought of a land across the waters in the far-off West. The thought was a seed-thought, and the harvest was the discovery of the New World. Thoughts annihilate space. I can think—can impulse a thought just as instantaneously to Australia as to my library across my room. Good thoughts, changing the vibration of the patient's aura, are winged-messengers of health and harmony. The psychic, aflame with thought-force, rouses the patient's will. He changes the vibrations from fear to hope and faith, and reminds, recalls the Master's command, "I will—be thou clean!"

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY AND ABSENT TREATMENT.

Marconi's wireless telegraphic impulses flash to Europe, or may girdle the globe with lightning speed; but thoughts, impelled by psychic power, far outstrip them. Marconi employs the physical air as a medium for communication, while psychics use the luminous and frictionless interstellar ether, which, infinitely finer, interpenetrates the atmosphere, and fills all the starry worlds above that glitter and swim in these vast astral immensities.

Prof. Dolbear, of Tufts' College, Boston, assures us that "science is continually penetrating the laws of the universe, and revealing its mysteries," * * * and that "all about us is a finer universe unperceived except where some development of the intuitive powers perceived it by means of the finer sight and hearing of the psychic sense."

Marconi discovered the remarkable fact that his signals were transmitted more rapidly and at a greater distance by night than by day. Light implies force and friction. Sound waves, we know, suffer slightly when moving against a gale. Accordingly, Prof. Joly of Dublin, suggests that in Marconi's signaling the etheric waves encounter in sunlight a contrary ether-drift, inducing slight retardation. But this is not proven to be the case in the transmission of human thought-impulse, which, as aforesaid, is an active, potent force, instantaneously flashing, influencing, causing such vital and chemical changes in sensitives and the sympathetically responsive, as to develop that harmonial condition which we denominate health.

UNSEEN CAUSES AND THEIR EFFECTS.

A pebble-stone, dropped into a calm, placid lake, starts a wave outward, which widening, widening, particle impinging upon particle, reaches, say philosophers, the farthermost shore. So psychic power, will power, projects, not a pebble-stone, but a thought into the great oceanic, all-permeating realm of ether, causing a vibratory wave, a psychic health-impulse to touch the sensitive aura of the patient; and thus, so kindle the energizing, vitalizing fires of life within, as to produce in tissue and circulation, those physiological changes called health; and often thought, inspired by the prayer of faith, does it almost instantaneously. There may be thought epidemics. When the Kaiser Frederick was suffering with that cancerous difficulty with the throat, it was published that nearly half of Germany had sore throats. Many have died of rabies when not touched, but only frightened by mad dogs.

Certain individuals, gifted with psychic force, with strong personal magnetism, carry the very elixir of health in their presence. The magnetic hands of such abound in healing balm. Their voices are musical therapeutics. Often, a physician's kind-hearted word or encouraging smile does infinitely more than his pills and nasty powders.

This, being the first time in an active public life of over sixty years, that I was ever in a courthouse as complainant, defendant, juror or witness, I greatly, in one sense, enjoyed the trial. The cross-firing of the lawyers reminded me of Jesus' words, "Woe unto you lawyers," etc.

NOTHING PROVEN.

In this law case not a particle of direct proof was produced showing an "intent to defraud." Opinions and inferences are neither facts nor demonstrations. In the trial, not a letter of complaint was shown to have been received by the Battle Creek postmaster—not a penny was proven to have been received from any person or persons for diagnosing their cases—not a dollar was received and retained from patients dissatisfied with their treatment. The money paid from such so far as we know, was promptly returned. This was proven by our check stubs.

Where, then, you ask, was the fraud? Where the "intent to defraud?" Can there possibly be a fraud without injury? John Doe, hunting in the forest, shot at a deer and killed a man. Was he guilty, there being no "intent" to murder?

Our firm has done a clean, straightforward and honorable business from the first. Some of the advertisements (not written by myself or the firm) were unfortunate,—were unintentionally "misleading," and on this hinge hung the whole case. The ads said that "Dr. Peebles would diagnose the cases sent to the office," and he did diagnose the most complex of them, but there were other psychics—mark, other psychics and physicians as employes connected with our office that did some—in fact, much of the diagnosing, and prescribing, for instance, Dr. Brown. When I was in Florida for a short time in winter, I diagnosed every case sent to me, and promptly returned the same to our office. But because I did not personally and psychically diagnose every case, though it were but a stubborn corn on a man's toe, this great United States government, through its jury, pronounced the firm "guilty."

OTHER HEALERS.

Helen Wilmans Post's recent conviction and sentence to imprisonment by a Florida court is a similar case in point. She advertised "absent treatment," as do all the New Thought journals. And thousands upon thousands will testify that they have been cured—that they received full value for their money; then where is the fraud. The editor of "The Universal Republic" wisely says:

"The idea of calling 'absent treatment' fraud, when all the newspapers and magazines advertise patent medicines (the base of which is constituted of alcohol) that make drunkards by the thousands each year; not to mention thousands of other dangerous remedies advertised, that destroy health and kill thousands, shows the partiality and villainy of law when administered by politicians rather than by cultured broadminded jurists."

AMERICAN JURIES.

It was as far back as 880 that Alfred the Great established the jury system on its present basis. Early in American history it was transferred from the Mother-country to this. The system has always had its stern opposers. Many of the most astute and distinguished jurists of the past century have seriously questioned the wisdom of the jury in the interests of justice, and evidently for the following reasons, expressed or implied:

1. The jurors may consciously or unconsciously, be prejudiced, and so fail, in bringing in a just, unprejudiced verdict.

2. They may be influenced by heredity, social and religious forces. What a farce to talk about "Jury trials by our peers!" What a burlesque in the word peers! The jury that sat in our case should have been cultured physicians, psychologists ontologists, pathologists, medical professors, and eminent specialists in psychology. And attorneys should be not only intelligent men thoroughly read in law, but they should be candid and conscientious, striving for the victory of truth only. As I sat in the court-room (it was my first experience) listening to the wrangling of the lawyers over points of law, reminded of Jesus' words, "Woe unto you, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers."

3. They may be semi-hypnotized by the flowery oratory, and twisting pleas of a one-sided, if not unprincipled attorney.

4. They may not be the candid, scholarly, moral peers of those whose litigating cases they are privileged to sit upon.

5. They may not be educated, cultured, or intellectually competent to analyze evidence and so exercise a fair, impartial judgment upon the law-case under consideration; and upon subjects above their comprehension.

6. They may be biased, if not largely swayed in their judgments by the well-meaning charge of the court. "Though jurors (says a very high legal authority) need not be bound by the direction of the judge as to the weight, value and materiality of the evidences submitted, nevertheless, they are almost invariably influenced by the impressive charge of the Judge." Heartily do I wish judges were more fully aware that there is an unseen court before which they must appear sooner or later, and they themselves be judged. The decisions of this upper court are unalterable because absolutely just, and yet, as merciful as just.

THE JURY MAKE-UP.

In our trial two of the jurors were carpenters and ten were farmers; and undoubtedly good ploughing, wood-chopping, corn-husking, sheep-shearing, hog-fattening, cattle-speculating farmers; but what did they know about psychosis; Reichenbach's od-force; M. Blondeit's luminous rays from nerve and muscle; magnetic polarity; the increase of the venous circulation by electricity; Tesla's electric waves, the vibratory transference of thought; the subtle potency of the finer forces; the psychic auras and the mind radiations in absen treatments through suggestion and prayer! What, I again ask, did these jurors know about these invisible psychic potencies? Nothing—literally nothing! And yet, people talk of being "tried by their peers!"

While the matter of psychic power was before the court, and I was being cross-questioned by the Government attorney, he asked me among other things if he had "this power" —psychic power. My prompt reply was, "You have but very little of it, owing to your lack of moral and spiritual unfoldment."

"How do you know?" he impertinently asked.

My quick response was, "I know by your looks." No man having such a horizontally round head, considerably flattened at the top, and such a crimson face, could have much psychic power, and what he did have would be of a coarse material nature.

THE POTENCY OF PSYCHIC FORCE.

Psychic influence is something that all, though perhaps unconsciously, possess in varied degrees. Its potency depends upon organization, habits, character, aspiration, will power, and faith in God, for all power through the multi-measureless chain-links of causation, originates in God. Psychic power is that mighty force, then, which wins battles, rears empires, turns the tide of history, and through its potent electrifying forces, molds the leading, energizing forms of all civilizations. But none of these places above-mentioned, gamblers' dens, or jury boxes, are in my opinion, the proper places to witness that searching psychism which heals, vivifies, and beautifies life—no places to witness true depth of insight, magnanimity of soul, exact justice, ennobling virtue, or any sort of heroic purity.

I question if any of these jurymen had ever heard of Nikola Tesla's transmitting tower at Wardencliff where electric waves are transmitted, girdling the globe. And where "intonations and modulations of the human voice will soon," this writer says, "be made to leave their impress upon this whole planet." Here science leads us to the very door of "absent treatment." And the inspired Nazarene opened this door nearly 2,000 years ago. See Luke's record of the Centurion's "sick servant." Here was absent treatment. Jesus did not enter the house, though evidently not very far away. "Say the 'Word,'" said the centurion. The word was said, and the vibration touched the aural-sphere of the sick servant and he was healed. It was absent treatment. And if Jesus Christ, born of woman, and who ate, slept, drank, was circumcised, "learned obedience," refused to be called "Good," should appear in Florida to-day, or other states, Syrian clad, and engage as he did in Palestine in psychic healing, mental healing and absent healing (sometimes failing to cure, see Mark vi:5), he would be arrested, indicted, convicted and imprisoned.

There's a case somewhat similar to the above recorded in the third chapter of Acts of the Apostles, where Peter in healing the lame man, "fastened his eyes upon him." That was psychic treatment. And then Peter took him by "the right hand" (the right hand is positive) and lifting him up he leaped and walked." Paul heard "voices" speaking out from the unseen. He fell into a trance. He healed the sick and upon one occasion said, "Wherefore I put them in remembrance by the putting on of my hands." For this and for his moral independence he was pronounced by the "court" of his time, "a pestilent fellow," "a disturber of the peace," and accordingly he was arrested, arraigned, indicted, persecuted, imprisoned. And from the fullness of his soul he wrote thus to the Corinthians: "In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, by mine own countrymen, in perils in the city, in perils among false brethren. Five times received I forty stripes save one; once was I stoned; thrice was I beaten with rods." In Philippi Paul was whipped by the orthodox of Jews, "thrust into the inner prison and his feet made fast in stocks." He further wrote, "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair, persecuted but not forsaken, cast down, but not destroyed."

It is said that history repeats itself; and the above is a fair illustration of the history of reformers in the agone times from Socrates to Paul, from Paul to Hypatia and from Alexandrian Hypatia to the talented Helen Wilmans Post recently "sentenced" in Florida for advertising and practicing psychic or mental treatment and "long distance treatments." The judge in putting a rope around her neck, figuratively speaking, found, or will find the other end fastened to his own neck in duo time. Her case was promptly appealed to a higher court. This was well.

A portion of our firm wished to appeal our case to the Appellate Court. If done the decision would no doubt have been reversed; but I strenuously opposed the appeal. I did not want the thought in my mind—did not want the suspense—the worry. I do not fancy lawyers, lawsuits, politics-appointed jurists, fightings nor wars of any kind. "Agree with thine adversary quickly," said the Nazarene, in that great sermon on the mount.

Though a jury of ordinary plodding farmers sitting on a law-case involving the occult, of the psychic merits of which

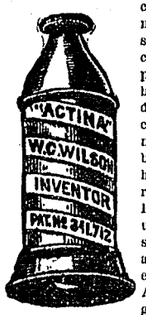
PILES CURED

ON APPROVAL

Don't Neglect Piles—They Lead to the Deadly Cancer. My New Three-fold Absorption Treatment Promptly Relieves Even Most Malignant Cases.

I want to send every sufferer from piles, ulcer, fissure, prolapse, tumors, constipation, or other rectal weakness, my New Three-fold Absorption Cure and my New Book, in colors, about rectal troubles. (All in plain wrapper.) If you are satisfied with the benefit from my treatment, send me One Dollar. If not send nothing. You decide.

My treatment cures by absorbing the growths and healing the membrane. It is bringing cures where everything else has failed. It has cured cases of 30 and 40 years standing. That is why I can afford to send it on approval.



O. W. VAN VLECK, M. D. LL.D. Ex-President Medical University of Ohio, Ex-Surgeon, U. S. Navy.

Here's what you get without paying a cent in advance: 1. One tube of my Absorption Plasma, with my new Rectal Applicator, which heals all itching and soreness. 2. One package of my Muco-Food Cones, which cure constipation and nourish the membrane. 3. One package of my Pile Pills, which remove the causes of piles and constipation, making the cure permanent. If you have piles, or the itching, burning feeling, which shows that the dreaded disease is coming, it will cost you nothing to try my remedy, and one dollar is little to pay if cured. Send no money—only your name—to the Dr. Van Vleck Co., X N 16, Majestic Building, Jackson, Mich. Write today.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

This volume contains a selection of the best poems of this gifted author and storyettes contributed by Clair Tuttle in her charming style. There are 285 pages, with six full-page illustrations, including photogravures of the author and Clair Tuttle. It is bound in blue with aluminum embossing. Many of the poems are especially adapted for recitations.

The author needs no introduction to the spiritual public. Her songs are among the best in spiritual literature. Epes Sargent said of one of her poems that it was the equal of anything in the language, and that she was the poet of the New Dispensation.

The Mecca says: "Psychic Poems."

That erudite critic, Wm. Emmette Coleman: "To all lovers of good poetry this book is confidently recommended."

Will Carlton: "I have read with great interest:"

Sarah Thorpe Thomas, the Humanitarian says: "A most exquisite bouquet. * * * * the thoughts echo and re-echo through the deepest recesses of my heart. I have some word of praise for every page."

The author says in the dedication: "To those whose thoughts and longings reach into the unseen Land of Souls, this handful of asphodels, mixed with common flowers, is offered hoping to give rest and pleasure while waiting at the way stations on the journey thither."

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

MISSIONARIES' NOTICE.—All mail for E. W. and C. A. Sprague, the N. S. A. missionaries, should be addressed for the present as follows: No. 725 West Jackson street, Bloomington, Ill.

ANNOUNCEMENT—Harrison D. Barrett is located in Syracuse, N. Y., for the months of April and May. He will be pleased to fill week evening engagements within easy distance of Syracuse upon reasonable terms. Address him at once for dates and rates. Send all letters to Harrison D. Barrett, P. O. Box 462, Syracuse, N. Y.

Mrs. Alla Thurman writes from Las Vegas, N. M.: "I have been here three months with good success, giving several lectures in private homes. This would be a splendid town for some good lecturer and test medium to locate and start a society. Plenty of followers, but no leader. To get along in a Catholic country, means not to antagonize them, but to unify the forces wherever the opportunity presents itself. Then they will be your friends. I've learned long ago that love is the fulfillment of the law, and the only thing that will overcome opposition. I have made many true friends and converts here among the Spanish people, who are devout Catholics, and some advised with their priests concerning their visits with me."

At the rooms of the Light and Shadow club, Milan, Italy, a musical opera, which purports to have been dictated by spirits, was produced a few days ago. The two sons of the Italian Senator, Bordonaro, who are totally ignorant of music and composition, were used as mediums to obtain both the music and the libretto from the spirit world. A long time and many seances were required to write the opera, as note after note and word after word was dictated to the mediums by supposedly departed musicians in the presence of a committee of Spiritualists and scientists of Palermo. The title of the opera was "Il Travolti," which means "thrown over," and its execution was placed in the hands of a quartet of opera singers, accompanied by a professor at the piano. The music, however, is not very attractive, its principal feature being melancholy, recalling here and there some of the compositions of Wagner and the other dead musicians in the midst of a monotonous succession of cadences, which produce a general feeling of lassitude. A large and select audience attended the extraordinary performance.—The Inter Ocean.

Sign your name and address to your items, or they are liable to be thrown into the waste basket. Here is one from Dana, Ill., without any signature: "Mrs. Pemberton, of Bloomington, Ill., has been here a week during which time she held public circles in a dozen or more homes and gave many private seances during her stay. Mrs. Pemberton is a fine trumpet medium and the results were such that all were well pleased and many who had never had an opportunity to witness such phenomena and were skeptical as to spirit communications, were fully convinced thereof. Mrs. Pemberton will move to Peoria in a few weeks.

An extraordinary case of sleep walking is reported of a young servant girl. She went to bed the other night in her employer's house at Roughton, Sussex, England. When she woke up she found herself on Mousehold Heath, Norwich, eighteen miles away. On a former occasion she took another night walk in her sleep, waking up to find herself fully dressed in Cromer, several miles away from where she had gone to sleep.—New York Herald.

L. J. Baker writes from Sawtelle, Cal.: "The Church of the New Era, under the management of its pastor, Mrs. Florence White of Boston, Mass., celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism in a way commensurate with that sublime event. In the afternoon that peerless champion of human liberty, Rev. W. C. Bowman, of Los Angeles delighted a large and appreciative audience at the hall by his forensic eloquence and many telling hits and witty sayings. Many other speakers and mediums of note were present and assisted by speaking and giving platform tests to the delight of all present. In the evening was had La Fiesta de los Flores in all that the name implies, with a speech from Dr. Daniel Hull, of Los Angeles, followed by recitations, refreshments, music and a dance. Thus ended the celebration, the memorable day and the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, in this beautiful city by the sea."

Mrs. L. Robinson writes: "Anniversary exercises were hed in the Second Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md., March 27. The lecturer of the evening was Mrs. Marie Crail, widely known as a sincere Spiritualist and reliable medium. Her discourse was listened to and appreciated by an intelligent audience.

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

VICTOR VOGEL'S ORCHESTRA AND BAND.—First-class music furnished on all occasions. Office and residence, 4217 Champlain avenue, Chicago, Ill. Telephone Oakland 1111. Mr. Vogel is a well-known Spiritualist of Chicago and a natural born musician. His orchestra will be most excellent at dances and entertainments given by Spiritualists, and will add much to the interest of the occasion. As a special feature of his musical work, he introduces many original novelties—imitations of birds, etc.

She made many pointed remarks of great truth one of which the writer remembers was as follows: 'One can never become a true Spiritualist until one is intellectually fitted to receive it, therefore we do not seek to proselyte.' We also enjoyed the readings and recitations of Mrs. M. Garelle-Rouseana, well-known to the public as a teacher of elocution and oratory. In her own inimitable way she recited her own compositions, and also the 'Angel Buglers,' from the Progressive Lyceum. Mrs. Crail invited to the rostrum an old friend and Spiritualist, Mr. Charles Stargler, who made a few appropriate remarks on Modern Spiritualism. Mrs. Ida Burger and Mrs. Carrie Parkhurst gave convincing spiritual communications, which were appreciated. An enjoyable repast was in evidence at the close, and all went away satisfied and happy."

A spiritual seance was given at Las Vegas, New Mexico, on the evening of March 30, at the New Optic hotel by Mrs. Alla Thurman. The occasion was the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. About forty were present and as many more were turned away for lack of room. Mrs. Thurman spoke for an hour and a half on subjects appertaining to Spiritualism suggested to her by the audience. The line of her thought was that Spiritualism does not contradict any creed, but that it lies behind all creeds. The three topics especially discussed by her were: 'Do We Know One Another on the Other Side?' 'Are Our Friends Around Us and Do They Communicate with us?' 'What is the Value of Spiritualism?' After the lecture Mrs. Thurman gave clairvoyant tests.

E. C. Waldren writes from Chesaning, Mich.: "The Spiritual Society of Chesaning, Mich., held an anniversary meeting at their hall on the 31st of March, it being the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. We had a splendid time. Mr. H. J. Hopkins read an article from the Banner of Light which was appreciated by all. We also had a warm sugar social and refreshments served, and an experience meeting all in the same evening. We expected to have Mrs. La Grange, of Detroit, with us, but she could not get here on account of the washouts on the Michigan Central railroad, which were numerous on every railroad in the state. We are to have her on the 21st and 22nd of April, and invite every one to come and help us enjoy the love feast which we are sure to have."

Mrs. Asa Talcott says: "You can't find two Spiritualists that think alike; every soul agrees with itself. This is mental independence. When the angel world touched the button, and opened to you those broad avenues, it freed your mind. God's mysteries are mysteries no longer when you have learned the A B C of Spiritualism. And, as we stand here to day, reaching out over the natural life, each drinking in what comes to him we appreciate the significance of this anniversary. You understand that you, and each of you, is part and parcel of the Master Mind. We do not hold nor adhere to a personal God, but it is a principle pervading everything living, or inanimate, even the stones or flowers—the divine is there!"

Theodore Franck writes from Louisville, Ky.: "On Sunday evening April 3, a large attendance was present at the meeting held at the Church of Spirit Communion. 'Some Reasons Why' was the topic chosen by Mrs. Annie Throndsen for this service. Considerable interest was aroused by her brilliant ideas, and her tests were extremely remarkable."

F. P. Lint writes from Atchison, Kansas: "On Sunday, April 3, Mrs. Etta S. Bledsoe and Mrs. Inez Wagner from Topeka, Kans., were here and organized a society with twenty-three charter members. The following officers were elected: F. P. Lint, president; Mrs. Anna C. Jones, vice-president; C. H. Burrows, secretary; Mr. J. J. Leapson, treasurer. Mrs. Bledsoe's speaking was enjoyed very much by all parties present, and the two trumpet seances held by Mrs. Wagner were attended well and gave perfect satisfaction. We feel here that there is no better trumpet medium in this part of the country than Mrs. Wagner. Her seances are certainly fine and her test work is unusually fine. To societies or any parties interested, we can certainly recommend Mrs. Bledsoe and Mrs. Wagner as being honest and capable in their line of work, and they are mediums whom you will not need to apologize for in any way."

Superstition sometimes runs runs wild, as set forth by the Chicago Chronicle: "The power of the evil eye persists after death in the case of Mike, former pet cat of the Auditorium hotel, now a stuffed feline, according to Mrs. Everett McAllister of Elgin, Ill., who attended the grand opera frequently the last two weeks and met with misfortunes on account of Mike. Mrs. McAllister stopped at the Auditorium on each trip to Chicago. Each time she entered the hotel the first object her eye encountered was stuffed Mike, eyeing her from his perch on the balustrade. The first night after seeing Mike she lost her purse, the second she lost her boa, both at the grand opera. The third time she lost her keys, and the fourth she collided with an automobile in Wabash avenue. 'I am not a superstitious woman,' she complained to Clerk Shaffer. 'I don't believe in omens or in Christian Science or Mormonism, but just the same that dead cat of yours is too much for me. She has the glassy eye and she has me on the run. I never experienced so much misfortune strung together. I didn't mind the purse nor the boa nor the keys, but when I got bumped by the automobile I made up my mind that cat was my hoodoo.'"

Dr. Beverly writes: "The Spiritual Science Society is having a boom, and many are becoming convinced of the power of the spirit to heal and help. Walter DeVoe conducts a Question Class along philosophical lines that is intensely interesting. We shall hold all-day meetings during April, beginning at 2:30 p. m., and continuing till 10 p. m., with only a few moments for lunch, which is served in the dining-room above. Twenty mediums attended our last services so that plenty of talent is always on hand to demonstrate the wonderful truths that we present in so pleasing a manner to the inquiring public. Remember, at our next monthly party, Saturday evening, April 23, free readings will be given before the dance to all who buy a ticket of admission, which is only 25 cents. We shall also have a fine musical program to end with a Ghost Dance, which will be conducted by Prof. Ellis. Eight couples will be attired as ghosts and drilled in movements that will astonish and delight all. They will lead the grand march in which all will take part; then all who wish will dance till satisfied. These novel parties are attracting many to investigate and enjoy the benefit of social and psychic experiences."

The Des Moines Register says: "Louis H. Mott, the Montana wife murderer, did not keep his promise. Spiritualists, Theosophists and the other reincarnated 'ists' must be seriously disappointed. Mott was hanged a week ago in Missoula. He knew this was inevitable, yet he sent word to Representative Dixon that he would meet him in Washington at 10 o'clock Sunday evening, sixty hours after the execution. A dispatch from Washington states that Mr. Dixon sat in his apartments, waiting, until long after 10 o'clock, but no Mott appeared. 'He will be welcome if he comes,' said Dixon, at 9:58. 'Before whisky wrecked him, Mott was a mighty fine fellow. When retiring time came and Mott had not arrived, Representative Dixon retired, leaving word that he was to be called the moment Mott arrived, but he slept peacefully all the night. Mott failed to put in an appearance. And yet there were doubtless some who expected the executed man to keep his word. He was a former Iowan and Iowans are usually so punctual and painstaking. But the odds were heavy against Mott."

W. H. Leidigh, of Villa Ridge, writes: "The Truth Seekers' Association celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism on Easter Sunday, at our hall by our annual basket dinner and lyceum exercises. We had a nice time. The hall was covered with flags and flowers, and a nest of colored eggs that were distributed to the little ones, and the crowd was amused with recitations, etc. Dr. D. D. Clark, the noted psychic teacher of New Orleans, gave two lectures—first of Spiritualism; second on Magnetism. We are very sorry for the brother and fellow-worker. He lost his help-mate, she falling asleep in the spirit at Jackson, Tenn., March 4, and placed in her mausoleum at The Mounds, Ill. It was her request to be placed above the ground. She was a great worker in the fields of advanced thought, psychic science and the Spiritual philosophy. She was the founder of the Psychometric College of New Orleans, La., pastor of the First Spiritual Temple, and author of Psychic Revelations, missionary for the Southern Spiritual Association (appointed by the late Rev. Samuel Watson), and ordained minister of Spiritualism."

Frank Anlauf writes from Oklahoma City: "The First Spiritualist Society of our city celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism very fittingly, April 3. Our hall had been very nicely decorated for this memorable event and no effort had been spared by our lady co-workers to make the hall inviting and comfortable. The program presented consisted of addresses by our president, C. C. Henderson; vice-president, Mrs. H. Hammon and also Dr. J. H. Randall, of Chicago, who is at present a guest of our city, in an acceptable and pleasing manner, interspersed with songs by the audience and quartette, and some beautiful solos by our gifted baritone, Treasurer G. W. Anderson, as well as recitations. Everybody seemed to be very much pleased and will this, our first effort at entertaining long be remembered by all. Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Harvey, of Maquoketa, Iowa have come among us and made arrangements to make this beautiful city their future home. The sister is a splendid psychic and trance speaker, a noble hearted lady, well known to many readers of this paper, while her husband occupies the honored position of mayor of the above-named place. Having just taken possession of their new home, Sister Harvey could not be present at our celebration, but hopes to make up for it at future occasions. Our society has had regular services every Sunday evening since its organization in January, but has been somewhat hindered in its good work for lack of sufficient means to engage reliable mediums and lecturers. The members, however, hope to overcome this by a good steady pull by every one of them and all together."

The Teleharmonic Company of Baltimore, Md., has been formed for the purpose of furnishing music in households. The houses will be wired the same as for electric light, and whenever a subscriber wishes to hear a certain piece of music he pushes a button and listens. Households can be filled with stirring music in the morning to arouse the occupants to begin their day's work or at night to lull them into peaceful slumbers. It is only a question of time, it is declared, when this service will be furnished commercially, just as gas, electric light, water and telephone service is now supplied. The invention is a machine for producing every primary vibration known to the human ear. These range from the minimum vibrations that can be heard sixteen a second to the maximum of 8,000 vibrations a second.

"August Recht writes: "The Society of Spiritual Truth, Crosby Hall, Brooklyn, N. Y., observed the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, April 3, with appropriate services, Dr. Wyman lectured, his subject being Modern Spiritualism. We were pleasantly surprised to find in the audience, Mrs. Wilkins, who arrived recently from Boston. Mr. Rasmussen asked her to assist, which she kindly did, and in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to the wonderful power of her intelligent little guide. She next gave several inspirational songs while under control. She was well appreciated. We hope that she will make her home permanently in Brooklyn."

Query? Are the Carnegie libraries throughout the country to be made sectarian? Some "Secular League" people of Washington proposed to present a lot of books to the city library which was built by Mr. Carnegie, and the offer was accepted. When it was found that the books were the works of Ingersoll, Paine, and Voltaire the library authorities hemmed and hawed, and the books are not yet upon the shelves of the library, and are not likely to be.

Somebody sends an article from 615 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, Mass., but does not sign his name.

J. E. Bowen writes from Detroit, Mich.: "The First Church of the Soul, 46 Grand River avenue, held memorial services on Easter evening at 7:45. A good program, large and attentive audience, chair draped in memory of Mr. Doyle, of Lansing, Mich., a pioneer Spiritualist who built for himself a living monument by purchasing a beautiful home for mediums and endowing it with a large sum for running purposes in Lansing. He passed into higher life February last. Several mediums and clairvoyants assisted in the services. Our pastor, Mrs. Laura L. Crawford, is a psychic of no small ability. Her tests are clear and convincing."

A horrible dream foretold to Mrs. William Sprevin, wife of William Sprevin, living at 218 Superior street, Detroit, Mich., a passenger brakeman on the Detroit division of the Lake Shore railway, that she would receive some shocking news. A few hours after Mrs. Sprevin arose next morning a messenger knocked at the door and handed her a telegram. With trembling hands she tore open the yellow envelope, and read: "William Sprevin seriously injured. Removed to St. Vincent's hospital in Toledo." "Oh! I knew it!" she cried, and sank sobbing on a sofa. This sudden outburst awoke a little 2-year-old baby boy, and he started to cry. Mrs. Sprevin carried the baby into the home of his grandparents, who live in the front part of the cottage, and took the next train to Toledo. Sprevin had passed away a few minutes before his wife arrived. "I feared something was going to happen," said Mrs. Sprevin. "I had such a strange dream. I could not sleep, and I spent the long hours crying. First I was in a church and all the people were looking at me, then again I was working in a factory. This all seemed so queer to me, and all of a sudden I woke up."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

F. E. Donaldson writes: "The Light of Truth Church, holding services at Thurman Club Hall, corner Cottage Grove avenue and 47th street, Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor, held anniversary service last Sunday evening. Through the energy of Mrs. Field, the hall was tastefully decorated with American flags and flowers, which was a sermon in themselves. A control of the pastor gave a discourse from subject suggested by the audience, after which followed an interesting prophetical talk by Dr. J. McWilliams, in his usual edifying way. Vocal selections and recitations were then given, after which Violet (Mrs. Burland's Indian control) gave a number of messages which brought encouragement and love from our risen ones. A number who had remained in the hall from the conference meeting in the afternoon to attend the evening services, were treated to musical descriptions by the pastor under control of Dr. Miller and others. Spiritualists, in whom has been created a hungering after food conducive to the growth of the divine in man, finds much that enlightens, and builds up, in the lectures given by the controls of Mrs. Burland. The audience is gradually increasing, and the desire of our members, that a congregation in keeping with the nature of the talent displayed by the pastor and controls, will soon be realized."

Cora Fuller Williams writes from Vicksburg, Mich.: "The faithful who have kept the camp-fire burning through the long, cold winter months, arranged an anniversary meeting for April 3, which was fairly well attended, and a pleasant day was enjoyed by all. The morning session opened with music, followed by short speeches. Then all were invited to partake of a bountiful Easter dinner prepared by the ladies of the society. At 2:30 the meeting was called to order by President Baker, and after a selection of music, Dr. Alvarado was called upon for an inspirational poem, to which he most graciously responded. Mrs. Dorothy Newton of Kalamazoo, then addressed the meeting in one of her best efforts, presented in well chosen language. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Darling cheerfully responded to the call for music and several songs were rendered by them in a pleasing manner. The inspirational poems by Dr. Alvarado lifted our minds above selfishness and led us to thoughts of a truer and better living for humanity. The friends again partook of a feast for the physical man, which closed the 56th anniversary of Modern Spirntualism."

J. H. Clark, of Spokane, Wash., writes: "The 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was duly celebrated by the First Society of Spokane, Wash., March 31, in the Ehlie Hall. Meals were served at noon and evening. Circles and test meetings were the order of the afternoon. We all went to the Unitarian church for the evening meeting, the hall being too small to suit the people. A fine program was given. Mrs. Flora Heckman gave a fine lecture. She has closed her engagement with our society and returned to Tacoma. She has made only friends since she came among us, and we recommend her to all societies wishing a true, honest spiritual worker. Mrs. E. B. Layson, of Medical Lake, not being able to be with us, sent her best wishes with $5, for which the society is truly thankful."

The superstition that the ghosts of the poor unfortunates, who meet violent deaths, return to haunt the scenes of the untimely demise, is playing no small part at present in the fluctuation of the firemen market in the Michigan City Electric Company's power-house. Since the tragic death of Timothy Nolan, the engineer who was accidentally shocked to death on the night of March 6, at the electric plant, no less than three firemen have abandoned their positions in the power house because of "seeing things at night," says the News. The trouble began a few nights after Nolan's death. Fireman Lee Repp, who though familiar for many years with the multitude of superstitions common among sailors, having for several seasons been connected with various vessels as a stoker, had never before placed any credence in any of the weird beliefs, was the first to fall prey to what is believed to be the ghost of Engineer Nolan. Repp says that the third night after Nolan's death and while he was passing through the electric light plant he accidentally touched a live wire that shocked him severely. He claims that when he recovered from the shock he saw the ghost of the dead engineer directly in front of him. The sight unnerved him and he turned away quickly to relieve himself of that awful creepy feeling that stole over him and seemed to make the blood run cold in his veins. But as he whirled about the apparition changed position and for the remainder of the night the awful specter was at his elbow. Do what he would he could not free himself of it and before morning Repp was on the verge of mental collapse and on the following day he severed his connection with the electric company. Since that time three other firemen have seen the blood-curdling apparition that stampeded Repp and as a result the stoker position has been twice more vacated. At present Motorman John Plaskett, who claims to be familiar with the antics of ghosts and who says that specters have no terror for him, has been feeding the furnaces of the big plant and whether or not he will fall a victim of the ghost-seeing habit remains to be seen.—La Porte, (Ind.) Herald.

E. J. Schellhous writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "In my negligence I omitted the name of the medium to whom I refer in my communication published in The Progressive Thinker of April 9. As inquiries have been made to me, will you kindly notice the omission? The medium's name is W. W. Aber, of Kansas City, Mo."

E. E. Carpenter, president of the M. S. S. A., writes as follows from Detroit, Mich.: "The writer would ask you to publish the following in behalf of the Michigan State Spiritualists Association, correcting a report which has been extended quite recently, referring to the collection of money for the Mediums' Home, at Lansing, Mich. It has been reported that E. W. Sprague, the National Missionary, is receiving forty per cent of the money collected toward the Mediums' Home, for his services while in our state. I want to say that Mr. Sprague has never received one penny of the donations collected for our Mediums' Home; in fact he is not receiving the charter fee for organizing societies. Mr. and Mrs. Sprague have done much to advance the interests of the state association, and the cause which they represent, without receiving one dollar from our association in the way of any percentage of money collected, and I would add for the benefit of those who feel it convenient to assist the state association at this time financially, it would be greatly appreciated by the same, as we have had considerable extra expenses owing to the severe winter at our home, and we are in need of funds. I thank all in advance for any assistance which they can furnish. Kindly send all donations to Miss Rena Chapman, state secretary, Marcellus, Mich."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "Dr. J. M. Peebles, the veteran Spiritualist worker, will lecture for the Hyde Park Occult Society on Sunday evening, April 17. Subject, 'The Wonders and Lessons of Travel.' Spiritualists all know they will hear something good, so come and let us give him a good welcome and God-speed as he passes through on his way home to Battle Creek from California. Services at No. 323 East Fifty-fifth street, at 7:45."

R. C. Baird, secretary, writes from Elyria, Ohio, calling the special attention of Ohio Spiritualists to the following: "The time for our convention at Columbus is drawing near, and it is hoped that all societies working under state charters will remit per capita tax (which amounts to 25 cents per member for each society) as soon as possible. Individual membership costs but one dollar a year, and all friends are urged to become members. Do not wait for a personal appeal from your secretary, and then deluge him with business at the last day, as the coming convention is to be a 'rouser,' and a great amount of important work must be done from now till May 27. A full program will appear through these columns later."

Mrs. Lily LeSieur writes as follows about the Band of Harmony Dollar-experience-party, held April 7, at Masonic Temple hall, room 512: "We had an unusually large gathering, and several out of town visitors, among whom were Moses and Mattie Hull, Mrs. Clara Stewart, of Morris Pratt Institute, and Mr. Erwood of La Crosse, Wis. We appreciated their kind words of greeting. Our members and many friends were generous with their dollars; some of them had a struggle to find a way to earn them; others were given their dollars. Only one more meeting this season at our hall; that will take place on the 21st of April, which is the occasion of our pastor's birthday (Mrs. Richmond). We wish to make this meeting one to be long remembered, as we must bear in mind we shall not have her with us always. Any one wishing to bring a dollar that missed our party yesterday can have the pleasure to do so. Moses Hull congratulated us that we had been able to retain our pastor for nearly thirty years in Chicago. Baby Boyd was christened and also given his name poem. Receipts of the evening were over sixty-five dollars."

Mrs. L. R. Robinson writes from Baltimore, Md.: "The Progressive Thinker is worth many times the subscription price, and every reader should feel in duty bound to place it in the hands of their friends."

Mrs. Alice Baker writes from Dallas, Texas: "Sunday, April 3, the Truth Seekers' Society of Dallas, Texas, held anniversary services. Our hall was beautifully decorated. All honor to our worthy secretary, Mrs. G. W. Quinn and daughter. Our musical program was fine, giving a helpful inspiration to the speaker and medium, the writer and son, Master Milton Baker. The audience was all that could be desired. At the close we felt to say, Success, the angels are rejoicing. The evening of March 11, we were completely surprised by a goodly number of our society and friends coming in upon us—they said to do us, which they effectually did; but we would joyfully stand another thing like it. These social gatherings are an inspiration and encouragement to a speaker and medium. We are open for engagements for mid-week meetings, and to officiate at funerals. Address me at No. 213 Bryan street, Dallas, Texas."

A letter from Detroit says: "The anniversary did not pass without fitting observance in this city. The first grand meeting was held on the 27th, at the hall of the Spiritual Workers, 333 Michigan avenue, and a fine program arranged for the afternoon and evening, with decorations, music and rejoicing. Mrs. Mary Jenkins of Windsor, has been pastor of this society most of the past winter. She and Mr. Jenkins are ever present on all occasions to help along in every way. They hold free developing circles at their home in Windsor every Monday evening, which are often very largely attended and always interesting and instructive. The Church of the Soul held fine anniversary services last Sunday to a crowded hall. The Brotherhood of Light celebrated Es Day, on March 31, by reading the spiritual record of this event as given in Oahspe, with remarks and experiences, closing with music and a fruit collation. The Church of the New Thought held special Easter services, with a floral-two-baby baptism, before a very large audience. The Brockways have given up their home on Columbia street. Their work the past winter here has proven a real revival in Spiritualism through remarkable psychic tests and readings."

Frank T. Ripley, speaker and message medium, is serving the First Society at Kokomo, Ind., for April. He can be engaged for the Sundays of May and June on liberal terms. Mr. Ripley's permanent address is Tipton, Ind., P. O. Box 326. He seems to be giving excellent satisfaction with his lectures and tests.

Nellie S. Baade writes from New Orleans, La.: "The anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated in the city to the satisfaction of all concerned. Remarks by the president, vice-president and secretary were well received. Recitations by Louise Muller and Mabel Henry added much to the occasion, with special music and a hall so finely decorated—simply a thing of beauty and a joy forever. We gave the regular address of the evening and followed with spiritual messages, which brought much pleasure to the recipients. We shall complete our present engagement with this society June 1, after which we shall be free to engage with other societies in need of our services; also at camps, funerals or weddings. Address me at 634 South street, New Orleans, La."

Virginie Barrett writes: "I wish to say to the friends and those desiring my services that all mail will reach me if addressed to 835 Broadway, Indianapolis, Ind. I woud like to hear from some good test mediums for missionary work."

Copies of a remarkable will left by Col. C. M. Strader, U. S. A., retired, who died at St. Joseph's hospital in Philadelphia, have been received by several prominent business men of Louisville, Ky., friends of the dead man. Col. Strader, after directing that all his debts be paid, requests that his body be cremated at Philadelphia, and the ashes taken to Louisville, his birthplace, there to be scattered on the waters of the Ohio river. "If after this process," reads the will, "the angel Gabriel, for whom I have all due respect, can with trumpet arouse me from the dead, he is a 'darling,' and I will take off my shadowy hat to him. I will pass away believing in no other deity than that which is specified by Pope as being 'the first great cause—least understood, believing that my first duty is to my fellow man and that he who lives this life in justice to his people and follows the precepts of Him who said, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself' has nothing to fear from the hereafter—no matter what it is. With best wishes to you all and 'drink hearty.'"

The Spiritualists of Sawtelle, Cal., most cordialy endorse the ministrations of Mrs. Florence White, who has been employed there for some time as a platform test medium and speaker.

Alice B. Stockham, 70 Dearborn street, Chicago, writes: "Vrilia Hights, Summer School of Metaphysics, will hold its seventh annual session, beginning June 19, and continuing until the middle of September. Vrilia is delightfully and permanently located at Williams Bay, Wis. The old woods on Lake Geneva were beloved by the Indians, and here while one enjoys peace and rest, he also, through association, meditation and teaching, realizes the Oneness of All Life and becomes conscious of spiritual powers. The freedom from care, and the simple life close to the very heart of Nature, contribute to the joy and knowledge of the Divine in man—a veritable recreation. A summer, or even a few days, at Vrilia develops health of body, strength and power of mind and spiritual consciousness. Address me for circulars and particulars."

Mrs. Mattie E. Hull lectured last Sunday for Mr. Coates' society. Her lectures are always excellent.

Mrs. F. D. McCormick, of Billings, Mont., wants mediums and lecturers to address her with a view of visiting that section of country.

Spiritualists generally, take notice. Claude Whiteside writes from 720 Ga. avenue, Chattanooga, Tenn.: "I see from a late number of The Progressive Thinker that Dr. Schlessinger is asking the rich for donations to build a temple at Chattanooga. He is not building a temple, and I don't think he intends to. He is giving them hot air. He is putting his money in real estate, and has some three or four houses he receives rent from, $60 to $65 a month; that is the kind of temple he wants the Spiritualists to build for him. I wish the editor to write to P. R. Albert and he will give the public all the information they want about the Schlesinger temple in Chattanooga."

John W. Ring writes from Galveston, Texas: "We had a most delightful time at our anniversary celebration, three days and nights, and a full crowd for each service. Dr. J. M. Temple, who is now located in Houston for one month, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner who continues to do most satisfactory work as State Missionary and our devoted worker and sweet singer, Mrs. Laura B. Payne, were with us. The first night, Thursday, March 31, we had regular anniversary services and appropriate tableaux, 'Where Have the Souls of the Beautiful Gone,' and 'Close of Day.' The next night we continued our bazaar and had a farce, 'Freezing a Mother-in-Law,' as we did also Saturday night. Many friends from a distance kindly sent articles for our bazaar and we most heartily appreciate the thoughtful assistance. April 3, we had our annual memorial service when we decorated chairs in memory of the loved ones gone higher. The service was well attended and declared to be one of the most comforting and truly beautiful services we have had for some time. So Spiritualism fills our life with useful activity and we scarce have time to tell of what is being done for each week affords more and more to be done. We are now planning for a nelaborate observance of May Day, and I am sending the program to the various lyceums through The Progressive Lyceum, which by the way, is gradually increasing in support. Mrs. Laura B. Payne is now located in Beaumont, where they have just organized a society, and certainly showed good judgment to secure the services of so capable and devoted a worker to go forward with their plans. May success attend them as I hope it may all earnest workers."

IMPORTANT.

To the Spiritualists of Wisconsin.

For the last time before our Wisconsin State Spiritualist Convention convenes in Whitewater, I wish to call your attention to the necessity of attending that convention, and participating in the work to be done there. At no time in the history of Spiritualism in this or in any other state has there been greater need of hearty co-operation among all Spiritualists who are striving to advance the cause they profess to love. The advancement we make is an infallible indicator of the degree of interest we take in the movement as a whole.

We, as individuals, should remember that if we are at all interested in the cause of Spiritualism, and humanity, our interest cannot be wholly local, and that we must seek to aid our own locality, by assisting in the work at large, and this you, or we, cannot do as well anywhere, as by attending the conventions of our respective state associations. These are not the conventions of one man, nor yet of one woman, but of all as its deliberations are for the good of all. For this reason we should make an effort to attend.

Whitewater is a beautiful place, an educational center, prominent in which is our own Morris Pratt Institute, an institution which is unique from the fact that is is practically the only one of the kind in the world, and which you will enjoy visiting. The convention will be held in the beautiful hall of the Institute.

Aside from the business features, a fine program has been prepared, which will not fail to edify all comers. Prof. W. F. Peck, of St. Louis, Rev. A. J. Weaver, Cora L. V. Richmond, Rev. Moses Hull, Mrs. Mattie Hull, Mrs. Frances D. Wheeler and others will be in attendance and take part in the exercises every evening and Thursday afternoon. These meetings will be brimful of good things. Come out and show your loyalty to the cause.

If you have not received personal notices of the convention, send for circular.

We will have a fine musical program prepared under the direction of Mrs. Sanford. A reception to visitors and delegates Monday evening, at the Pratt Institute; lectures; oratory in its highest form; messages from your loved ones; royal good fellowship—what more can be asked?

Remember the dates—April 18, 19, 20 and 21, 1904. WILL J. ERWOOD,
Secretary W. S. S. A.
1334 Pine street, La Crosse, Wis.

Note:—I wish to say to my many correspondents that your letters and communications will be answered shortly. For the past five weeks I have been so thoroughly under the control of the "grip" that I have been unable to attend to all my work. Be patient a little longer and you will receive the responses that are your due.—W. J. E.

Notice to Societies.

To those societies and camp-meeting associations requiring such services as I can render, I would say, I have the month of July and the latter part of August open for engagements, and would be pleased to submit terms. Would also consider proposals for a portion of the coming fall and winter dates. Would much like to hear from the western states as I contemplate a trip in that direction.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Mrs. Benjamin Fanning, from her home in Clarksfield, Ohio, in the 75th year of her age. A life-long Spiritualist, she departed with sweet assurance that she would meet those gone before. The funeral was held on March 30, Hudson Tuttle officiating.

Passed to the higher life, from her home in Muncie, Ind., Mrs. Cora Baker, aged 22 years. Funeral services conducted by Mrs. Emma M. Nutt-Moore, 321 East Jackson street.

John McClusky, of Ashland, Ohio, passed to the higher life, March 18, 1904. He was one of the veteran workers in Spiritualism and in the past made many converts to the cause. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. MRS. E. SCHAUSS.

Mrs. Susan C. Byer Hurlbert passed to spirit life, March 13, 1904. She was born May 4, 1846, at Haverstraw, N. Y. She came to Colorado in the year 1871. Her long residence in Denver has made her widely known. She is survived by her husband and son, Geo. Hurlbert, and the Rev. W. E. Mansfield, Evangelist of this society. Resolutions of condolence were extended to our worthy co-worker.

REV. D. C. BLINN.

Passed to spirit life, on April 3, Elizabeth C. Hart, of Oberlin, Ohio. Miss Hart had just passed the allotted three score ten, and has lived in the county all her life. Reared in the Disciple faith, she later affiliated with the M. E. church, but has since the passing of her father, a little over thirty years ago, been a convert to the teachings of Spiritualism, being a member of the Progressive Spiritualists Society of Elyria, at the time of transition. Burial took place on April 5th, writer officiating. Miss Hart was beloved by all who knew her for her kindly sympathies and other sterling qualities, and her presence in the material form will be felt by all her friends and acquaintances and is a direct loss to our society. She was ready and fully prepared to enter the new life and her influence and example will endure, and remain with us for some time. F. W. MARTIN.

My husband, J. H. Manning passed to spirit life, March 30, aged 80 years. His knowledge of spirit return and his high sense of honor in right living, carried him out into the spirit realm with that confidence that never wavered. Our loss is his great gain.

MARIE O. MANNING.

George H. Gleason passed to spirit life, April 25, 1903, aged 84 years. He was a firm advocate of spirit intercourse and enjoyed the ight it gave him. COR.

The world beautiful has a new acquisition in the passing out of Fannie L. Jones Root, who began her earthly experience, June 20, 1832, in Loraine, O., and her heavenly experience, March 23, 1904, at Lake Helen, Florida. Besides her husband, Capt. Henry Root, she leaves three daughters, Mrs. Fannie E. Meyers, of Lake Helen, Mrs. Esther L. Robinson, of Loraine, Ohio, and Mrs. Maude Bosworth. Peace conquered pain, and lo, the victory is hers. The services were conducted by the writer. CARRIE E. S. TWING.

David Felter passed to the higher life from his home at Warsaw, Ind., at the age of 63 years. Brother Felter was raised a Spiritualist, and often said he wanted no orthodox minister to officiate at his funeral, so his obsequies were under the auspices of the Spiritualists of Warsaw, and the oration was delivered by the writer.

HARRY J. MOORE.

March 30, 1904, Cynthia Adelia Streeter, a Spiritualist for fifty years, passed to the higher life from the home of her daughter, Mr

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Investigator: Q. How is it to be explained, if the manifestations are dependent on laws and conditions which must be observed, that they place at different seance rooms under diverse and opposite conditions?

It has been my experience that all male spirits materialize in "full dress." Is this characteristic?

What is the use of the so-called "battery," formed by a few persons sitting in the front seats surrounding the medium?

A. It may be accepted as fundamental that every form of manifestation depends on specific laws and conditions which must be observed. It is possible these may be unknowingly complied with, even when apparently disregarded. The genuine medium will not demand the same conditions as the fraudulent. The latter will allow only of such tests as will not prevent the simulation of the phenomena. In this manner the conditions under which manifestations are given at different seances may be antagonistic.

Spirits do not show themselves invariably in a "dress suit." Such a "suit" is the exception. A score of spirits have appeared at a seance, not one apparently arrayed in that manner.

The "battery," formed by a circle of friends has an important influence in assisting the manifestations. But in the fraud circle it has an entirely different purpose. It forms a protecting wall of defense to the so-called medium. It is formed by the most credulous, or assistants, selected by the "medium," who keep the too inquisitive at a distance and allow only those who can be trusted to approach. Before we generalize and draw conclusions, it is the first rule of Science to make sure of the facts. Be sure that the so-called facts, are facts and not misstatements. No two facts in the universe ever disagree, or in any way conflict. If there is confliction one or the other of the opposing oracles, is an error.

Medicis correspondent prides himself in the exactness of statement and observation, and yet he comes to the conclusion that all spirits materialize "in full dress, in which he probably stands alone of the thousands who have seen "materialization," in as many varied garbs as there were appearances. It may be a fact in his own experience, it is not in that of others. Hence his conclusion is not true.

D.B., Nebraska: Q. What of Col. H. S. Olcott and his connection with the Theosophical Society.

A. Col. Olcott came into public notice by his reports of the Eddys, being sent by the New York Graphic to investigate the remarkable manifestations said to be taking place at their seances. His report was of the most bizarre and flashy character and as unreliable as a fairy tale.

He there met the notorious Blavatsky, and forgot his family of a wife and children in the "karma" of that wily tartar. The pair went to New York, where with other congenial souls the Theosophical Society was started, to conserve the divine wisdom of the Hindu fakirs, and instruct western civilization in its mysteries.

One of the most active assistants was Mr. Judge, who was a willing tool.

The character of this man may be known by the following incident. I attended a meeting of the Anthropological Society in New York City, at which he was announced to speak on Theosophy. In his lecture he said that at the founding of the society, they had, some dozen in all, met to discuss the adoption of a constitution. While they were conversing there appeared in their midst a Hindoo dressed in a light blue garment. He placed a roll of paper on the table, and disappeared as mysteriously as he came. They examined the roll, and found it to be the constitution, which, brought by a mahatma, they of course at once adopted. That evening, in conversation with a friend I related this part of the lecture. With a laugh he replied, "I was one of the original founders of the society, although I soon saw that it had nothing for me. I attended the meeting at which the constitution was adopted, and there was some heated discussion, but no Hindu, or mahatma. That part is a dream."

Judge became president of the American branch, after Blavatsky had taken Olcott to India, a very good clearance for his deserted wife and family.

There they founded another society, and were flourishing on the good rupees their dupes dropped into their treasury. The coming and going of "mahatmas" was of daily occurrence, and a post-office was established, and these spirit-slaves brought letters even from Thibet, the last place in the world to look for heavenly things. The wonder was heralded, and Theosophy boasted of its wonder-works. The Psychical Research society became interested and sent Dr. Hodgson to India, to learn the truth. Blavatsky had blundered in allowing her servants to know too much, and not paying them well. Dr. Hodgson was allowed by the housekeeper to examine, and he found out the secret workings of the drawers or cabinet by which the bungling feat was performed, and reported in detail to his society. It was the death of the mahatmas. Not a letter thereafter was transmitted from Thibet, or anywhere else. Blavatsky smoked more, swore more, and at last went to join her "karma" in the beyond. Olcott is at the head of the Indian society, which, like the whole movement, exists largely on paper.

The character of these three leaders, Blavatsky, Olcott and Judge, have impressed the whole movement. It has been an attempt to rivive dead ideas, and force them on the world by the old method of the tricks of the wonder-worker. While extolling the sublime purity and morality of their system, they lead a life of selfish gratification, shameless dishonesty and neglect of duty.

A. M. Rich: Q. Is it true, as so often stated, that all laws of our government are founded on the Bible?

A. In the days of Puritan superstition many laws were enacted directly from the Bible, and the struggle of civilization has been to erase them from the statute book. There are precious few laws now that have their source in the Bible. The "Sunday laws," in some states are all that remain, and these are almost universally ignored. The law of the Old Testament, was an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth—vengeance through the law. The command of the New Testament is submission, charity, love. If a robber takes your coat, give him your cloak; if he strikes you on one cheek turn the other.

There is not a law of this country which is founded on a text of the Scriptures. The Mosaic Code was for the rule of a priesthood, and the most despicable tyranny as far from our government as night from day.

The laws of Rome, embodied and handed down in the Justinian Code, are the source of all laws. To this must be added the evolution of what is called common law which is really the growth of experience, coming up through the ages since the Anglo-Saxon race began its career.

When it is claimed that all laws are founded on the ten commandments, given to Moses oy God himself, it may be said in reply that these are not original with Moses. They were given, by singular coincidence in the same manner by another God, or God by another name to Zoroaster, the Persian law-giver, before Moses' time.

A government with its laws founded on the Bible would be an unbearable theocracy, the most despicable form of tyranny. Grant that the rulers have delegated power from God, their subjects become slaves without the right to think for themselves.

Anniversary at San Diego, Cal.

An all-day union meeting of the San Diego and National City societies was held at the Temple, Sunday, March 27, commemorating the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism.

From 10 until 11 a. m., a fine program was rendered by children of the lyceum, after which the young people's society held the rostrum until the closing of the morning session. Tables were set in lyceum hall and a very enjoyable hour was spent in sampling the many good things provided for the occasion.

At 2 p. m. a large and enthusiastic audience assembled in the auditorium where, for three solid hours, music, speech and song held the attention of the friends and even then many were loth to depart. Ten-minute speeches was the order of the day and the first to respond was J. M. Peebles, who is about to take his departure for an eastern clime with the probability of another trip around the world. He was followed by President Longshore and Mrs. Mullen, of National City, President Sippel and J. H. McPheeters of National avenue, Mrs. Morrill, of Chula Vista, President Thurber of the Young Peoples' Society, C. A. Buss, Mrs, Thiebaud, Mrs. Clark, Will C. Hodge and J. L. Dryden. A most gratifying and appreciative feature of the occasion was an exceedingly fine and original poem by Col. Dryden, written expressly for the anniversary and entitled "Out of Darkness Into Light." This poem held the undivided attention of his audience and we hope to see it in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, as it is altogether too good to be confined to our local society.

The question has often been asked, "Who will take the place of our old workers, as they one by one lay their armor down and pass to the invisible expression of life?" In a measure at least, this problem is being solved by the San Diego society, for we are beginning to reap the result of faithful and persistent work in the lyceum. The Young People's Society is largely the legitimate outgrowth of the lyceum, and when Spiritualists everywhere will seek to interest and care for their children as do the various church organizations, we shall develop speakers and mediums at home and not be dependent upon talent from abroad.

Already do we note the beneficent results of owning a temple of our own, with its freedom from mixed magnetisms of every description, and the closer bond of sympathy with each other and with our invisible helpers and friends.

With a clean place for meeting and made attractive for both spirits and mortals, and with one of the most harmonious societies it has ever been my fortune to associate with, the First Society of San Diego is in a position to do effective work in razing the strongholds of superstition and to present the claims of Spiritualism to an ever-widening circle of investigators in a satisfactory manner. With kindly greetings, and good will to societies and to the workers everywhere,

WILL C. HODGE.

COURAGE.

If days were always dawning,
And hearts would cease their longing—
You say you could be happy, you are sure.
Just count your blessings often,
It will help you care to soften,
And make it much more easy to endure.

There are those whose daily crosses
Are much heavier than your losses,
All the years you have been passing through this life.
Then let us never weaken,
But smile and help to strengthen
Others growing weary in the strife.

"How Shall I Become a Medium," Fully Answered

In Mediumship and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Send to Mr. Tuttle, Berlin Heights, O.

DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

they knew no more than African Hottentots know of Algebraic equations, pronounced the firm "guilty," there was no sentence passed for nearly a year, and then it was a fine of less than one-fourth the maximum, that might have been imposed. Thinking people generally who know the high character and moral standing of the firm, and several attorneys thought and still think from the standpoint of equity there was really no case against us. Technically, considering the journalistic exaggerated advertisements under flaming headlines of the "Discovery of the soul's secrets," etc., I think there was, but morally, justly, there was not. It seems to me absolutely unjust and would be so considered in equity, for a person, or for a firm to be held responsible for newspaper advertisements which they did not write, nor endorse after they were written. Law so-called, which is not based upon justice, equity, principle and immutable right, is not in the highest sense law.

I desired, and expressed the desire to plead personally my own case before the court. Our local attorney thought this would be right and proper, but self-sufficient Chicago thought differently. In any similar case I should be governed by my own convictions.

It should be remembered that during this trial it was not shown that a single person or patient had lost a dollar by our firm, and our Battle Creek postmaster had not received a letter of complaint concerning us. Not any of our cures, thousands of cures at our command, were allowed by the court to come before the jury.

WHERE THE FRAUD?

"Where, then, did the fraud come in," you ask. You will ask again, and again, and wonder while you ask, when you see the whole proceedings in print, as they were stenographically reported. If our firm or their families had manufactured a medicine for peculiar diseases and advertised them through the U. S. mails under the signature of a "dead doctor," there would have been a clear case of fraud. Cowardly, whimpering Adam, concealing himself in Eden's bushes, said: "The woman gave me to eat of the tree and I did eat." The double pull of politics and women's skirts have saved, temporarily saved, many an official from the deserved clutch of justice. Notes may outlaw, but grave charges do not.

WHAT THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES?

Personally I am a physician of physicians, standing by virtue of graduation and post-graduate courses the peer of any physician in the country, and what is more, I am an American citizen with the undisputed right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness;" and the pursuit of happiness with me consists in literature and in treating and curing the sick. And speaking for myself (and not my medical assistants) I will in the face of congresses and courts, judges and juries of incompetents, treat the sick by precisely what means I think best, which implies psychic, magnetic, electric, homeopathic, hydropathic, mind, faith, prayer, will-power, suggestion—I repeat I will treat the sick, the insane, the obsessed in any way that my judgment dictates. To this end, Justice Peckham, of the U. S. Supreme Court, says in a decision relating to a case of psychic or magnetic healing:

"There can be no doubt that the influence of the mind upon the physical condition of the body is very powerful, and that a hopeful mental state goes far in many cases, not only to alleviate, but even to aid very largely in cure of an illness from which the body may suffer. Just exactly to what extent mental condition affects the body, no one can accurately and definitely say. One person may believe it of far greater efficacy than another, but surely it can not be said to be a fraud for one person to contend that the mind has an affect upon the body and its physical condition greater than even a vast majority of intelligent people might be willing to admit or believe. Even intelligent people may and indeed do differ among themselves as to the extent of this mental effect.

"Because the complainants might or did claim to be able to affect cures by reason of working upon and affecting the mental powers of the individual, and directing them toward the accomplishment of a cure of the disease under which he might be suffering, who can say that it is a fraud or a false pretense or promise within the meaning of the statutes? How can anyone lay down the limit and say beyond that there are fraud and false pretenses?"

What shall psychic, magnetic and mental healers do? Continue to heal. If official bigots imprison you continue to heal while you pace the dungeon floor. Continue to fight for the right. Continue to be martyrs, and that though the cross be built and fires be kindled. Every thorn on Jesus' brow budded and bloomed into blossoms fadeless and immortal. Facing, defying the old fugitive slave-law of Judge Taney's time, I aided many a slave on his northward way to freedom, and I am proud of it.

Yes—continue the fight, you who are young—you who stand upon the plane of rebellion against the wrong. Continue the moral fight for medical freedom, O brave, royal-souled compeers! The scales may turn against you today in some petty court, but to-morrow you will ride in the chariot of victory. No truth ever dies. Misfortune often proves to be a fortune a little later. It is useless to burden the atmosphere with laments. Storms purify the air. It is the shadow that frightens, rather than the substance. Pessimism is the kin of cowardice. Many of the most painful phases of life lead up to the richest spiritual unfoldings. The corn dies in darkness before it sprouts up into the sunshine of an hundred fold.

The world moves. Progress is in the air. Truth is imperishable, and the redemption, if not the canonization of the psychically persecuted, draweth nigh.

Our mails were not stopped for an hour—our business was not destroyed, and our prospects were never so bright. The efforts to crush us aroused the sympathies of our friends and our patients, who knew that it was morally impossible for us to "devise a scheme to defraud" our fellow-men. The proposition bore the outstanding earmarks of a most monstrous lie. It showed the serpent's sting of envy. It was absolutely unthinkable in the estimation of all those who knew us.

"The man recovered from the bite—The dog it was—that died."

Our medical work has been and is going on just the same, only that it increased with some adverse journalistic advertising. No persecuting pigmy hiding behind petticoats, or prescribing through the ghost of a dead doctor, can shackle my limbs, paralyze my brain, chill my zeal, blunt my pen nor padlock my lips. As openly, as conscientiously I shall continue to practice psychic healing, thus exercising my psychic, mental, magnetic gifts—call them by what names you may. They were heaven-given, and, so help me God and good ministering angels, I will use them in treating the sick in body and mind—use them when, where, and just as I please, which it is unnecessary to say, will be for the physical benefit and the grand moral uplifting and unfolding of our common humanity.

J. M. PEEBLES, M. D.

Battle Creek, Mich.

Proceedings of the Mass Meeting of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association.

Tuesday morning session was pleasantly enjoyed by the gathering hosts of Spiritualism in visiting and introducing each other, from about 10 o'clock until 11:20, when the president called the meeting to order, and after a few words of greeting called upon Will J. Erwood, Moses Hull, Clara Stewart, Mr. Hammond, of Rockford, Ill., D. S. Lloyd, of Genoa, Mrs. Davenport, Mr. Beverly and others, who spoke words of greeting and encouragement and good cheer for the outlook of the cause from their various standpoints, and the forenoon of the first day of the mass-meeting was one of harmony and enthusiasm.

Afternoon Session.

Mme. Bourgeois and her sister, Mrs. Turnoch, favored the audience with a piano duet as an opening number upon the program, and they certainly threw out an inspiration that remained in every music-loving soul throughout the service.

President Warne read a poem as a prelude to the lecture and Mrs. Mattie E. Hull offered a forcible and beautiful invocation, after which Miss Alice L'Hommedieu sang "The Queen of May," with "The Four Leaf Clover" as an encore, which was sufficient to show in the start that her music was appreciated.

Moses Hull delivered the first lecture of the afternoon from the text, "What Hath God Wrought?" and the enthusiasm manifest by the audience at the many good points he made indicated that the people still know a smart argument, and that Moses still knows how to present the truths of Spiritualism in a way that few can imitate. He is still "Our Moses" with the people, and may he live to work upon the spiritual rostrum for another and indefinite period of years.

Vocal duet, "Is There Room Among the Angels," by Master Enoch and Mathilda Turnoch. These children sang very sweetly and the audience showed their appreciation for their effort.

Will J. Erwood, secretary of the Wisconsin State Association, spoke upon the subject, "Spiritualism the Emancipator of Men." The speaker was laboring under an affliction that made it an effort for him to express himself as he wished to, but he delivered a good discourse nevertheless.

Vocal solo, "In the Garden of Sleep," by Miss L'Hommedieu, was sweetly rendered.

Readings were given by Mrs. C. Kirchner, president of the Rising Sun Mission; also Mrs. A. Gifford and Mrs. Susie Dill, of the same society.

Evening Session.

Mme. Bourgeois and Mrs. Turnoch rendered a beautiful piano duet to open the evening meeting, and were followed by a poem, read by Mr. Warne, entitled "Step Forward."

Mrs. Fallis sang a beautiful song entitled "Mamma's Love Song," which indeed carried the audience away on a tour of the celestial world, and she was called emphatically by everyone to sing an encore, which was also fine.

Mrs. Richmond delivered the discourse of the evening from the theme, "A New Presentation of an Old Truth." There is no need to state in part what this eloquent speaker said, as in time, no doubt, the whole discourse will be published.

Mrs. Fallis rendered another beautiful solo, "Appear at Thy Lattice," which gave splendid opportunity to exhibit the true range of her excellent voice.

Readings were given from articles handed up by the audience by Mrs. May Elmo and Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss.

Wednesday Morning Session.

Conference opened at the appointed hour, and Mrs. Mattie E. Hull began the discussion in her ever-forceful and logical terms, taking a conservative ground, upon the subject before the meeting, "Are Spirit Guides Required for the Unfoldment of an Individual's Highest Psychical Power?" The discussion was a continuation of the deliberations started in The Progressive Thinker Symposium upon the Great Psychological Crime. Mattie believes in spirit guides, but not in surrendering her entire individuality to spirits upon this side or upon the spirit side of life. Complete subjugation is a crime against self, she claims.

Mrs. Richmond spoke upon the side of spirit control and considered that "wise and capable spirits never control people who are not worth controlling." Her ideas were not combatively expressed, but she certainly took a philosophical view of the matter and her every word was well appreciated.

R. Gilray, a lawyer, spoke, and took the ground that there is no such thing as perfect independence, that every human being is dependent upon some other, or upon some condition in life. He is a forceful speaker. He sees danger in mediums not keeping in the right conditions and under the right aspirations. He explained much regarding the matter of obsession and produced evidence in support of his logic.

Will J. Erwood believes in independence so far as is possible, but amicable co-operation with the higher influences. He believes in raising ourselves up to the level of those whom we wish to have lead us, get into their sphere instead of drawing them down to our level.

Afternoon Session.

The conference was continued in the early hours of the afternoon and short speeches made by Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Burland, Mrs. Stayner-Adams, and others.

A vocal solo by Mrs. Fallis opened the regular services of the afternoon.

Mrs. Mattie E. Hull delivered the first discourse in her own special philosophical way.

Mrs. Fallis sang a solo, and Mrs. Schauss delivered a forceful address, taking her theme from the audience: "Spiritualism."

Piano solo by Mme. Bourgeois, a beautiful selection.

R. Gilray spoke upon an important theme in words of great strength and his points were relevant to the interests of the cause of Spiritualism; his earnestness is that of a lawyer pleading at the bar of Justice for an innocent client.

Mrs. Hill began the test work and was followed by Mrs. Nellie Kusserow.

A telegram from H. D. Barrett, in Syracuse, N. Y., was received and read, as follows: "Greetings to the convention. All hail to Truth's revival! Victory for right! Spiritualism forever!"

Evening Session.

Opened with congregational singing, a poem, read by Mr. Warne, and a beautiful vocal solo and encore by Miss Alice L'Hommedieu.

Letter received from C. W. Stewart, of St. Louis, explaining the reason for his absence and that of Mrs. Josie K. Folsom, was read. They were each upon the program, but neither came.

Will J. Erwood delivered the first address of the evening upon "Foregleams of Immortality."

A beautiful solo, entitled "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," was sung by Mrs. Fallis, and it sank so deeply into the souls of the audience that she was called back and sang, "Life Is Real, Life Is Earnest."

Moses Hull spoke upon "The Religion of Spiritualism," and must have had an especial supply of cheer in his soul, for he kept the audience with either a smile upon their faces or in a roar of laughter and hand-clapping most of the evening, telling illustrative and appropriate stories.

A vocal solo was sung by Miss Alice L'Hommedieu, and Mrs. E. Schauss gave psychometric readings from the platform, which proved eminently satisfactory.

Convention Jottings.

The Spiritualists sent in from Rockford, Ill., to represent the cause in that city, are filled with a spirit of enthusiasm for a better and purer Spiritualism, and are devoting much energy toward organizing home circles and educating the young into the work. It is a good move, but in this work they must be mindful of right conditions.

That kindly-faced old brother, Hiram Eddy, of DeKalb, was in his usual place at the meeting. Though a quiet man, he is a constant one in the work.

Moses and Mattie Hull were as full of smiles and humor as ever and were greeted warmly as they filed into the morning session. They are splendid proof that "so long as the spirit is young the mind will remain in tune therewith."

The floral decorations of the rostrum were magnificent, comprising palms, roses, lilies, and beautiful plants, and it was clearly observable that Spiritualists are lovers of the beautiful, by the floral decorations worn upon their clothing throughout the audience.

An amusing incident occurred whenever the president called upon people in the audience to place articles to be psychometrized upon the platform. He asked for "about eight" articles and received almost enough to start a small department store, and the second call in the evening, created almost a stampede, so hungry are the people for tests and messages from their friends who are gone. These reading held the audience, at least those who were getting the readings or hoping for them, until a late hour of the night.

Col. Freeman's familiar face appeared in the hall doorway and the audience for the Tuesday evening session; a little late but still on deck.

Mrs. Clara Stewart was on hand and in evidence to do her share of the work.

Mrs. Davenport promises better work in the future.

So few of the old landmarks remain to tell the tale of pioneer days in Spiritualism it seems almost lonely to attend these meetings, with so many strange faces to look into. This reminds us of passing time and the beautiful ascension of the spirit of man, and the meeting and reunion over in the next sphere of life.

Dr. Juliet Severance was on deck Wednesday, "slightly disfigured, (as she says, by having been singed almost bald); but still in the ring."

We must accord to Mme Bourgeois the praise of a well arranged musical program for the mass-meeting, and not only does she deserve praise for the arrangement, but for the most beautiful songs rendered by real artists. "Mamma's Love Song" by Mrs. Fallis, brought tears to many eyes in the audience with its effective rendering, and all her solos were roundly applauded by all. Miss L'Hommedieu was also obliged to furnish encore, as did Mrs. Fallis, and Mme Bourgeois and her sister, Mrs. Turnock, with their piano duets, and Master Enoch and Mathilda Turnoch. The people do not tire of the appearance of Mme. Bourgeois upon the musical programs of our meetings. She ought to have all of this class of work she can do, and says she is open for such engagements.

Mrs. E. Schauss, a comparatively new or late acquisition to the rostrum work in Spiritualism, and a very warm friend of The Progressive Thinker, was an active worker in the mass-meeting. She is a missionary for the Ohio State Spiritualist Association, and is a genuine psychic. DR. T. WILKINS.

Ohio Spiritualists, Attention!

The sixth annual convention of the Ohio State Association of Spiritualists will be held in the city of Columbus, May 27, 28, and 29, in the Board of Trade auditorium. Three sessions will be held daily during the entire convention. All societies are earnestly requested to send their full quota of delegates, and individual members are urged to be present in person. Business of importance is to come before the convention, in which every Ohio Spiritualist is interested.

Local societies and members desiring to offer amendments to the constitution must file the same with the secretary prior to April 25, 1904, as none can be legally acted upon, received after that date.

Full particulars regarding program, etc., will be given in a future issue of The Progressive Thinker.

READ THIS CAREFULLY BEFORE REMITTING.

When you send in your subscription to The Progressive Thinker, carefully look over the books which you desire in this list, and send for them. They are very valuable. They are intensely interesting. They are elevating in tone and will do you good. In remitting do not fail to enclose a dollar for The Progressive Thinker.

Sending out these premium books, however, at the prices we do, does not reduce the price of the subscription of the paper, apparently or otherwise, a single cent, for that cannot be afforded for less than one dollar per year, in view of the fact that we publish such a vast amount of reading matter, much more than any other Spiritualist paper now published.

In conclusion, bear in mind that the postage on these Eleven Premium Books is over ONE DOLLAR, leaving this office only $2.22, illustrating the great bargain you are getting—an opportunity to form the nucleus of a valuable library, the like of which was never known before on this material plane.

WHAT CAN YOU DO?

This old world hasn't time to stop
That it may learn your name;
It doesn't care a rap about
Your blue blood or your fame;
The only thing this old world cares
About concerning you,
Is simply this one thing, to-wit:
"Well, sir! What can you do?"

Anniversary Exercises in Denver, Colo.

The Spiritualists of Denver gathered together in Howes' Hall, Sunday, March 27, to celebrate the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. The hall was crowded, and we were favored by having that grand worker, Georgia Gladys Cooley, preside. She never did better. The rostrum was covered with flowers, and the musical program was excellent. This made harmonious conditions, and the advent of Modern Spiritualism was handled in a masterly manner. It was shown how Spiritualism has liberalized all denominations. No one hears now of infant damnation, hell fire, eternal punishment, and such teachings given from the pulpits these days, and it is not so long ago that we were made to believe that salvation could not be had outside of the church.

Spiritualism is the only religion that can prove what it teaches—while others talk about immortality and resurrection when Gabriel blows his horn, Spiritualism gives the evidence of the continuity of life.

The profusion of flowers brought forth the highest inspiration of the guides of the medium, and the most beautiful thoughts were given in this connection. A great many said they had never heard anything so beautiful, and the writer, who has been in the ranks for thirty years, can add his testimony to theirs and say that in all his experience he has never heard before such elevating and ennobling thoughts expressed by any speaker.

The good conditions were also manifested in the messages given after the lecture. Thirty-four clean and clear tests were given, and all fully recognized. Many an anxious soul was brought nearer the spirit world and given unmistakable proof of spirit return, also receiving the consolation and comfort that no other religion could give. A splendid feature in connection with these demonstrations was that fully one-half of those receiving messages were skeptics, but honest skeptics, and freely admitted that they could not account for the messages from their spirit friends and relatives in any other way than that they were able to return and make themselves known.

The musical program arranged by Prof. M. T. Close and wife deserves especial mention.

Prof. Oscar Mayo first favored us with a piano solo, which was fully appreciated by the audience. Mrs. Mertie Moore followed with the favorite song, "For All Eternity." This called forth enthusiastic applause and was greatly enjoyed. Prof. Close and wife closed with one of their favorite selections which are always pleasing.

We expect to celebrate many anniversaries of Modern Spiritualism in Denver, but all agreed that we would always look back with pride and pleasure to the celebration of the 56th anniversary. F. N. BURK.

There is no wealth but character, no security but brotherhood, no salvation but knowledge, and no supreme court but the enlightened conscience of man —Herbert N. Casson.

1848 - Out of Darkness, Into Light - 1904

Annlversary Poem by J. L. Dryden, Read Before the First Spiritualist Society, San Diego, California, March 31, 1904.

INVOCATION.

Eternal Presence! Living Power! Thou Great,
Self-existent Source of Mind and Matter!
Nothing exists but Thee, for thou art All;
And in and from Thee all things are. Goodness
Infinite Thou art. Therefore, the Universe
Contains nothing in which no good is found.
In prayer to Thee we oft-times sin; because,
In thought, we separate ourselves from Thee,
Who art our very self. Thou, our Father-
Mother art; and Thyself in us the Son,
The Christ, the God made manifest in man
As Man. And no one can attain to Thee
Except the Christ be born within himself.
When God awakens in the Soul of Man
A full self-consciousness of His existence,
Then there will be no further Death; for He,
Himself, the living God, forever dwells
In Man. And he who strives to find God,
Must seek for Him in spirit and in truth
In his own holy temple in himself.
To Him, the Christ, the God in Man, we pray;
And, praying rightly, we fulfill our prayers.
For rising up to Him, we are Himself,
And ourselves grant that which we ask of Him.

—Selected.

MARCH 31, 1848.

Hail! happy, natal day! Hail to the hour
Which brought to our creed-darkened world
Surcease of blind belief, and gave instead
The glad assurance of established truth!
That freed our souls from Doubt by living proof
Of Immortality beyond the grave.
Hail to the gentle rap! that voiceless code
Of words unspoken, yet revealing things
No mortal eye hath seen nor tongue proclaimed!
Hail to the spirit touch—that magic key,
Which opened wide the gates of pearl, and bridged
The yawning gulf which creedal Ignorance
Has digged 'twixt earthly and angelic homes.
With joy we hail thy fifty-sixth return!
And, in this temple-home, which mortal hands
Have reared, and grateful hearts devoted to Service of Spirits, and the soul-upliftment
Of Earth's children, we would here, and now,
Swell the angelic chorus—"Peace on earth;
Good will to Men; and Heaven to earth brought down,"
Which this—our Christmas day—has ushered in.

MARCH 31, 1904.

'Twas early Spring: "The Summer of All Saints,"
By Acadian peasants called. That season
Beautiful; when, leaving his wintry bed
Deep in the Scorpion's southern lair, the sun
Again his upward journey takes to mount
His northern throne, driving the Frost King,
With his chilly breath and icy fingers, back
To his frozen lair. A dull and drowsy
Stillness filled the limpid air. Like Arabs,
Great sea-fogs silently their tent-like curtains
Folding up, stole softly out across the Restless ocean, lifting the misty gloom
And shadows from fair Coronado's face.
To westward, Loma reared his stony crest,
Upon whose outer point the ancient pharos
Stands: a stately structure once, whose beacon
Light guided the mariner's course, as erst
The fiery pillar led the wandering Jews.
On grassy slope, that downward bends to kiss
The rippling waves on mild Pacific's shore,
I sat me down, as long ago in fair
Judea's land, the Son of God refreshed
His o'er wrought mortal frame beneath the palms
Of favored Galilee. Within a bower,
Whose heavy thatch of leaf and fragrant bloom
Sheltered from noonday sun, and filled the air
With rich perfume, there came to me the joy
Of peaceful solitude. Repose, delicious,
O'er me crept, and with new life my inner Senses thrilled. I slept, or seemed to sleep.
For, while in quiet rest my mortal frame
Was locked, the soul within both saw and heard
Things that no mortal eye hath seen, nor tongue
Of mortal ever clothed in human speech.
Methought within some gloomy castle cell
Or cavern, where Cimmerian darkness reigned,
Myself imprisoned was. The darkness, cold
And relentless, that me compassed round,
Filled me with terror. My shrinking spirit
Yielded to anguish and affright. I scarce
Knew what I feared, or why cast down my soul
Should be. Before my spirit vision passed
The drama of this mortal life—a sad
And meaningless mystery. Of Life and Death;
Time and Eternity; Heaven and Hell—
I caught no pleasing views. In bitterness
I cried aloud: Why this obscurity?
Oh, who, and what, and whence am I? and why
Am I imprisoned here? Is life a blank?
An empty dream? A passing show? Does Death
End all? When the weary eyelids close, the Hands are folded o'er the pulseless heart, and
On the marble brow of those we love the Burning farewell kiss is pressed, Oh, is that all?
Is there no message from the dread unknown?
No beacon light? No cheering ray of Hope?
No well-known voice of loved ones gone before?

* * * * * * * *

"A change came o'er the spirit of my dream."
As thus in darkness, doubt and fear I groped,
Methought I heard from distant heights above
A sweet voice calling me in tenderest tones:
"Papa, come up higher. Come where I am."
Intently gazing toward the spot from whence
Issued the welcome sound, methought the walls
Of darkness seemed to melt away; and light,
Strange and ineffable, came creeping in
As ruddy dawn heralds the rising sun.
Before me stretched a scene magnificent.
Not steep and rugged cliffs, whose beetling crags
Defy our mortal effort to surmount;
But gentle elevations, one above
The other, rising like garden terraces,
Crowned with living verdure,—trees, fruit, flowers,
Murmuring brooklets—all that heart could wish.
No golden city saw I, with its gates
Of pearl, its jasper walls, and watchful guard
Admitting or rejecting whom he pleased.
But, town and country blending all in one,
I viewed the city-less and country-less
Land of Beulah—home of the pure and blest.
Beautiful homes; not jostling side by side,
As those in man-invented cities are;
But widely-spaced, with grassy lawns, and trees,
And flowery walks adorned the landscape near;
While far beyond, in stately grandeur rose
The beautiful hills where the blest have trod,
Since the years when this earth was new;
Where our loved ones gaze from the fields of God
On the vale we are journeying through.
As if on the wings of thought, or strong desire,
I scaled the rising slope with ease, and stood
On royal eminence. And in the pure
Celestial atmosphere, my vision seemed
To find nor bound nor limit to the grand
And matchless beauty that around me lay.
A maiden, radiant and ethereal,
Approached, to whom my speech I thus addrest:
"Methought I heard some loved one calling me;
Canst tell from whence and whom it came?" "'Twas I,"
She said, "who saw and heard you in distress
And darkness, and now ask to comfort you."
"The voice I heard addressed me in the sweet,
Trustful speech of child to parent. Your years,
Grace and unfoldment, scarce seem to befit
The infant child of mine who doffed her robe
Of clay ere twelve short months had spanned for her
The measure of earth-life." Thus she replied:
"Do you not know that in our spirit realm,
As in your natural world, Progression is
The law of life? This spirit life and home,
Though unseen and unkenned by mortal sense,
Is but an onward step in the grand march
Of man's development. Great Nature's laws
Reach from the seen to the unseen. And as
The mortal child evolves from infancy
To mature growth on earth, so here; the bud,
Transplanted from the parent tree, obeys
The same great law of spirit growth. Have you
Forgotten what your own loved poet says:

"'She is not dead, the child of our affection;
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection,
For Christ himself doth rule.

"'In that great cloister's stillness and seclusion;
By guardian angels led—
Safe from temptation; safe from sin's pollution,
She lives whom we call dead.

"'Day after day we think what she is doing
In those bright realms of air.
Year after year her tender steps pursuing,
Behold her grown more fair.

"'Not as a child shall we again behold her;
For when with raptures wild,
In our embraces we again enfold her,
She will not be a child;

"'But a fair maiden, in her Father's mansion,
Clothed with celestial grace;
And beautiful with all the soul's expansion,
Shall we behold her face,'

"Papa, the infant form you loved and lost
Just sixteen winters gone, contained the germ
Of sentient and Immortal Angelhood;
And greets you now in Spirit Womanhood."
"My child! My darling, soul-loved child!" I cried.
"I thank the God and Father of us all,
That now I see—not dimly, as in shadows—
But face to face in noontide splendor.
Now know I, not in part, but once for all,
That Death is swallowed up in Victory;
And Immortality is brought to light,
Through our own loved ones gone before.
Now I find the true meaning of these words—

"'There is no Death; what seems so is.
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the Life Elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.

"'There is no Death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread.
He bears our best loved ones away,
And then we call them dead.

"'Born into that undying life,
Our friends depart, but come again.
With joy we welcome them—the same,
Except in strife and pain.

"'And ever near us, though unseen,
Their dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is Life. There are no dead.'

"But, my dear child, in this glad reunion;
This brighter, clearer view of Life and Death,
What of my long-kept faith and blind belief?
The creeds of Calvin, Wesley, Knox, wherein
My parents trusted, and devoutly stamped
Their impress deep upon my youthful mind—
Were they all wrong? From human sources drawn!"

"Nay, nay. Not all. For since Goodness is God,
And God is All in All, in the universe
Nothing exists in which no good is found.
In all your creeds dim rays of Truth are hid.
"'Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear.
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.'

"That book you love so well—the Bible called—
Whence men their creedal inspiration draw,
Holds in its esoteric depths rare gems
Of truth celestial veiled in Orient lore.
But on its rugged surface ride the fleets
Of man-made Articles of Faith, and Creed
Theology, tossed and driven by the Winds and storms of wordy strife; conflicts o'er
Man's self-derived opinions. The letter
Of that book it is that kills. The spirit
Giveth life. And from the surface letter,
Builders of creeds have shaped their doctrines, while
Truth, a living Spirit, like deep ocean
Currents, glides underneath the symbols of
The Hebrew Script. Upon the surface waves
Sectarian councils wrangle and dispute
About the kelp and sea-grass floating on
The surface, heeding not the priceless gems
Of Truth in the unfathomed caves below.
For centuries mankind has lived in fear
Of Gods, of Death, Judgment and fiery Hells,
Cringing before some priest-made Juggernaut.
E'en yet your creedalist adores a god
In whom the form, features and weaknesses
Of mortal man are leading attributes.
Though changeless called, this man-made deity
Is swayed by love and anger; passion and
Remorse; loves sacrifice; repents; relents;
Changes his mind and readjusts his plans.
Most cruel; most unjust belief of all;
This kind and loving Father of all men,
Slaughters His first-born, only sinless child,
To save His sin-cursed offspring from His wrath."
"But, my dear child," I said, "can God be just
And not protect Himself—His glory—from
The stain of sin? Was it not better one Should die than the whole human race be lost?"
"Ah! father, when you free the Infinite
From finite attributes and weaknesses,
No need will be for sheltering God from the Attacks and calumnies of feeble Man.
The luckless wight who aims to blot the sun
By casting foulness in its face, himself
Receives the stain when backward it returns.
Know this: God's attributes are perfect, and
His glory infinite. Naught can thereto
Be added, and nothing therefrom withdrawn.
Your sinful thought, or word, or act, upon
Th' escutcheon of God's honor leaves no blemish.
Nor does your sacrifice of prayer and praise,
And bleeding victims, one jot or tittle add
To a glory perfected in Eternity.
Your human courts dare not absolve from guilt,
By wreaking vengeance on a guiltless victim.
And shall Man more just be than his Creator?
Vain Man; scorning to yield allegiance to
Aught save his own self-derived intelligence,
Goes blindly on; madly rushing in where
Angels fear to tread, brings upon himself
The dire results of his own wrongful acts,
And calls them judgments from an angry God.
The Christ, whom creedalists delight to honor,
And proudly follow—lagging far behind—
Thus reveals the Law of Compensation:
'That which ye sow, that must ye also reap.
On thistles, figs grow not; and men cannot
From thorny brambles gather luscious grapes.'
The hand that contacts fire must suffer pain,
Whether it be philosophers or babes.
The soul that yields to sin must bear the hurt
And scar until the pain-producing cause
Is overcome and slain. Each law divine
Bears in itself the just award each act
Has merited. Thus each and every one
In his own bosom keeps the great record
Writ by the angel of his Higher Self.
Conscience, the God within, in judgment sits,
Approval or dread doom pronouncing, as
Each passing act of life is good or ill.
Not all the man-made saints, or angels, Christs
Or gods in the wide universe combined
Can work atonement for a single sin.
For he who soweth to the flesh, must of
The flesh corruption reap. Remember this:
'Though Christ, in Bethlehem, a thousand times be born,
If not within thyself, thy soul is all forlorn.
The cross on Calvary thou lookest to in vain
Unless, in thy own life, it be set up again.'"
She ceased to speak. The vesper song of birds
Chanting the close of day awoke me. My dream
Was done. But joy! it was not all a dream.

My darling child, who as a mortal babe
First came like sunshine to our earthly home,
Then, like a sunbeam, quickly faded from
Our sight; and now, from realms celestial,
Comest as an angel fair, filling with
Peace and happiness my declining years,—
Oh, pardon this, my feeble effort,
To embalm in verse the thoughts and messages
Which from thy loving heart welled forth in speech.
But poorly versed am I in spirit lore.
And, mayhap, have but clumsy utterance given
To the celestial truths thou didst impart.
But, be its merit small or great, oh, give
My work thy benediction, I implore.
Upon the pinions of celestial love
Bear it to other souls that grope in gloom.
Bring light, and joy, and peace to others, such
As thou bringest to mine own saddened soul.

The battle royal in the human soul is the craving for spiritual against material gratification—mental against physical enjoyment.—Anon.

Temporal laws rather punish men when they have transgressed than form them to be such as transgress soldomest. —Milton.

STOMACH TROUBLES CURED

If you suffer from Dyspepsia, Stomach, Liver, or Bowel Trouble of any kind, read this liberal offer. IT WILL BE WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

Do you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, or stomach, liver, or bowel trouble of any kind? If you do, why not let us cure you? We do not mean help you by dosing you with a strong, stimulating Soda and Rhubard Compound, or patent "Dyspepsia Pill." Such things will stimulate and ease temporarily, but in the end will only irritate and further weaken the already diseased and weakened membranes. We Will Completely and Permanently Cure You. We will go to the very foundation of your trouble, will remove the causes, strengthen and tone up the affected membranes, perfect the digestion, regulate and strengthen the bowels, and make you as strong and hearty as you ever were. We could give you testimonials by the thousand of those we have cured of stomach troubles in all forms and stages, but they would not tell to you what the treatment will do for YOU. The only absolute proof is in the treatment itself, and knowing the Wonderful Cures we have made for others, and believing that we have a treatment that will Positively Cure any case, no matter how complicated or long standing or how many have failed in the past, that we will send a full two weeks' treatment to any sufferer desiring to give it a trial. Many are cured by this test treatment alone. Why not make a trial of it yourself and learn what it will do for you? It is Free. GENERAL SURVEY.

At a meeting of the Catholic Holy Name Society in Boston, Judge Joseph D. Dillon, who was one of the speakers, said that he "believed that the day was not far distant when the public schools would be controlled by the Catholic element as they are now controlled by the Protestant, and he stated that when the Catholic church did control the schools the first thing it would do would be to restore God to the schoolroom." By having "God in the schoolroom" Judge Dillon and other Catholics mean that the catechism will be taught. The pretense that the Catholic church has the custody of God and can move him into the schoolhouses as soon as they get control of education is rather ludicrous. It is a strange conceit, too that God does not come into the schoolroom with the Bible, which he wrote himself, but does with the catechism, which was compiled by priests. When God goes in, in the Catholic sense, education will go out.—Truth Seeker.

A Visitor writes from Indianapolis, Ind.: "Being in the city on Sunday, April 3, I was induced to attend the services at the First Spiritualist Church, corner New York and Alabama streets, where I had the pleasure of listening to a discourse by Mrs. Allie Buhland, of 1224 North Senate avenue. Her subject was, 'Souls' Redemption.' As we followed her in her flights of eloquence it seemed that the veil between the two worlds was lifted; permitting us to catch a glimpse of the beauties and grandeur of the other side. The lecture was followed by tests given by Mrs. E. V. Jackson, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who is now stopping at 137 S. Noble street this city. Her tests were of a nature that brought peace and comfort to the minds and hearts of those for whom they were intended."

Nellie Turner writes from Niagara Falls, N. Y.: "On the evening of April 3, the First Spiritualist Society of Niagara Falls celebrated the 56th anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. The hall was well filled. We were especially favored by having with us, Mr. Bach, editor of the Sunflower, of Lily Dale, who delighted the audience in his very interesting talk on Spiritualism. Mr. A. G. Atcheson, of Buffalo, favored us with a recitation as did little Florence Bailey. Music was furnished by Miss Clarkson and Master Roy Emory, which was fully appreciated. Our pastor, Mrs. Atcheson, followed with spirit messages, all being fully recognized. The members desire to extend their thanks to all who helped make our anniversary service so enjoyable."

MILLER'S MAGIC MIRRORS

Are peerless in every respect, worth ten times the price asked for them, to any one interested in the wonderful gift of clairvoyance. In the first sittings lights and clouds will appear and in their trail will follow all that can be wished for in that phase of mediumship. If you have read books treating on the subject (how to become Clairvoyant and have failed) you will comprehend their teachings better after having used one of our Magic Mirrors, as they will cultivate the mind and depth of vision. These mirrors are chemically treated and very powerful. But will state emphatically they are not ready-made Clairvoyance, to falsely represent that which is not, but an honest, easy road to success in mediumship. Our Magic Mirror is recommended by Mr. Frank T. Ripley, one of our leading lecturers and platform test mediums. Write for circulars and testimonials. Price, $3. W. H. MILLER, P. O. Box 109, Canton, Ohio.

The Mysteries--Magic.

J. C. F. GRUMBINE'S

Occult Books reveal the mysteries, not only of the universe but the soul. The sale of this book is increasing year by year, because as standard books they stand the standard tests. Mediums, seers, adepts universally recommend them. Why? Because the author knows what he is talking about. You will not fail if you follow the teachings. They illuminate.

Your Contribution To the Mediums' Fund in the N. S. A. Treasury, be it large or small, will do more good than a donation to any other fund upon the books of the Association. Every medium, every speaker, and in fact every man and woman who loves the cause of Spiritualism should swell this fund with their gift. The appeal of Mrs. Longley is just and timely. If our cause is worth sustaining these dear old pioneer workers who have become invalids at their posts are worthy of our sweetest kindness and tenderest care. Let us help our helpless mediums, and prevent their dependence upon the common charity of a cold and prejudiced world. Send your contributions to Mrs. M. T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., 600 Pa. Ave. S. E., Washington, D. C., and do not delay.
